I submit that that increase in cases in court is an index of the activities which have resulted in whisky being unobtainable except at an expense many times as great as before those activities were exerted by the Federal Government.

And as the work of detection, seizure, and arrest resulting in such cases in court goes on the extinction of the traffic draws so much nearer.

That this traffic may be declared an evil thing, and may be abated under the provisions of the now existing law, is firmly settled by judicial decision of the highest court.

What remains in the way of its complete abatement?

The temptation to make money in the traffic, created by those who either willfully or thoughtlessly disregard their highest obligations to their country and themselves and offer and pay for violation of the law a bribe large enough to offset the danger of prosecution, fine, and imprisonment.

To those "thousands of the best citizens of the country who have no compunctions whatever about violating the law" I address the question: Upon reflection, having called to your attention what your action really means and is in paying an outlaw for violating the law of your country in order to furnish you the means of gratifying your desire for drink, don't you think it better to refrain from such bribery in the future?

Don't you feel that, unless you so refrain, there may be some doubt about your being longer entitled to the designation "best citizens of the country"?

Can you afford to endanger your property, your safety, your lives, and the property, safety, and lives of your wives and children by teaching and practicing the doctrine of purchasing the commission of crime?

Laying aside for the moment any consideration of your duty as citizens, does not your interest lie the other way?

To those who, after considering the character and consequences of their acts, persist in promoting and fostering the violation of the law, I say that the hand of punishment shall fall as often and as heavily as those now charged with the duty of administering the law can cause it to fall.

To you, the women of this country, I say, you can by your influence and your votes secure the election and appointment of honest, faithful administrative officers, and the discharge and retirement of those who prove to be dishonest, unfaithful, inefficient.

More than this—

Remember that the business of making, transporting, and selling liquor is not entered upon from the motives which incite the commission of most other crimes—jealousy, revenge, sudden anger, ill will toward society generally, but only for profit.

The market for the goods is the whole foundation of the great cost in money, time, and effort of suppression of the traffic.

You can see to it that at no social event in your charge shall your tables be disgraced by the presence of unlawful liquor.

You can, if you will, make the serving of unlawful liquor at social functions of your acquaintances so unpopular that it will cease.

Will you do your part?

I notice further on your letterheads, "Allegiance to the Constitution" on the one side, "Observance of law" on the other side.

With two such supporters staying up its hands, enforcement of the law must win.

"Then came Amalek and fought with Israel in Rephidim.

"And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men and go out and fight with Amalek; to-morrow I will stand on top of the hill.

"So Joshua did as Moses had said to him and fought with Amalek, and Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill.

"And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand Amalek prevailed.

"But Moses's hands were heavy; and they took a stone and put it under him and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun.

"And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword."

SALE OF MARINE HOSPITAL AT DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 9875 retain its place on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that H. R. 9875 retain its place on the Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret to object, but I do.

CONDITION OF RAILROAD EQUIPMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in compliance with Senate Resolution 438, dated February 26, 1923, a report for the month of March, 1926, showing the condition of railroad equipment and related information, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials numerously signed by sundry citizens of Liberal and Nortonville, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, or the Volstead Act, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a resolution adopted by the Methodist Men's Club of the First Methodist Church, of Pensacola, Fla., favoring the passage of such legislation as will prohibit the transportation, by any means whatsoever, of articles now prohibited by law from being transported through the mails, with special reference to obscene literature, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by "Broward" Klan No. 52, Realm of Florida, Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku-Klux Klan, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., protesting against the severance of diplomatic relations with the Government of Mexico on account of its alleged policy relative to religious organizations, and favoring the severance of diplomatic relations with the Italian Government on account of certain of its alleged policies, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolution adopted by "Broward" Klan No. 52, Realm of Florida, Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku-Klux Klan, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., deploring the action of certain persons and newspapers, especially the daily press of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., relative to the movement to dispense light wines and beers and other intoxicants, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the RECORD a telegram in regard to the Italian debt settlement. I ask that the Secretary may read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram.

The telegram was read as follows:

[Western Union telegram]

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 19, 1926.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As president of the Italian World War Veterans' Association, 27,000 members in New York and 180,000 in United States, majority being American citizens spiritually united to American Legion, recommend Senate give equitable and just vote for Italian debt settlement aside from partisan consideration, remembering that debt was made for cause of liberty and humanity in which we fought with American forces. We protest against Fama telegram as not representing true sentiments of Italian-Americans in this country, but only those of minor groups of disgruntled communists who wound our international relations. Please present this message to Senate.

PIERO GAROFALO, President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand who are the signers to that telegram.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the name signed.

The CHIEF CLERK. The telegram is signed Piero Garafalo.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say in response to the question asked by the Senator from Idaho, that the telegram in question was signed by an American citizen representing, as he says, some hundred thousand Italian-Americans who fought in the cause of liberty.

Mr. BORAH. I was not questioning his citizenship. I was trying to find out who he was.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented the following telegram from Doctor Fama, of New York, protesting against the proposed Italian debt settlement, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Western Union telegram]

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 19, 1926.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I have spoken before hundreds of Masonic clubs throughout the State of New York and many Protestant churches of various denominations. Their unanimous consensus of opinion is that the Italian debt settlement must not be ratified at this time. The greatest issue is a moral one. Ratification by the United States Senate will mean more murders of Masons, more murders of Protestants, and destruction of their property in Italy, and the trampling under foot of freedom and democracy, for which 72,000 of our boys laid down their lives in the Great War. The voices of these thousands of earnest Americans of New York State is the voice of all earnest Americans throughout the United States, and it is the voice of our 72,000 boys who died at the front to make the world more free for democracy. Will you heed these voices, or will you heed the voice of the dictator Mussolini, who is to-day the greatest menace to world peace and contentment?

CHARLES FAMA, M. D.,

236 East Two hundredth Street, New York, N. Y.

Mr. COPELAND also presented the memorial of Franklin B. Sprague, Jr., of Hollis, and sundry other citizens, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the settlement of the Italian debt upon terms allowing any concession to Italy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 951) to promote the safety of passengers and employees upon railroads by prohibiting the use of wooden cars under certain circumstances, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 626) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 3844) to amend the act entitled "An act to create the White House police force, and for other purposes," approved September 14, 1922, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 627) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3559) to incorporate Strayer College, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 628) thereon.

Mr. HARRELD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3613) authorizing an appropriation for a monument for Quannah Parker, late chief of the Comanche Indians (Rept. No. 629);

A bill (S. 3929) to authorize the deposit and expenditure of various revenues of the Indian Service as Indian moneys, proceeds of labor (Rept. No. 630);

A bill (H. R. 9967) authorizing an expenditure of $6,000 from the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for the construction of a road on the Leech Lake Reservation (Rept. No. 631); and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) authorizing the Cherokee Indians, the Seminole Indians, the Creek Indians, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to prosecute claims, jointly or severally, in one or more petitions, as each of said Indian nations or tribes may elect (Rept. No. 632).

Mr. GILLETT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 633) thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 3978) to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary reclamation projects, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3382) to appropriate tribal funds of the Klamath Indians to pay actual expenses of delegate to Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 635) thereon.

SALE OF COTTON AND GRAIN IN FUTURE MARKETS

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I present the views of the minority, those members of the committee who are opposed to its passage, on the bill (S. 454) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The views of the minority will be printed as part 2 of Report No. 508.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 124. An act for the relief of the Davis Construction Co.; and

S. 3031. An act for the relief of George Barrett.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

L. Porter, and N. A. Porter; Henry Price, Royal Spradling, J. L. Keith, W. T. Brummett; Price & Florence, a copartnership composed of Henry Price and Buster Florence; and G. J. Keith, to bring suit against the United States of America in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma, giving said United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma jurisdiction of said suit for loss and damage sustained by them through the negligent dipping and erroneous certification of tick-infested cattle in the State of Texas by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, for loss and damage sustained by them through such negligent dipping and erroneous certification of said cattle by said Bureau of Animal Industry; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4031) granting a pension to George D. Helwig; to the Committee on Pensions.

ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT

Mr. HOWELL submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CERTAIN FILES OF THE THIRTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

On motion of Mr. SHIPSTEAD, the resolution (S. Res. 206) to transfer to the Minnesota Historical Society certain papers in the files of the Senate presented during the Thirty-seventh Congress, which was laid on the table yesterday, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by title and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 10501. An act to repeal section 806 of the revenue act of 1926; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 10539. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Department of Minnesota, the American Legion, the silver-service set in use on the battleship Minnesota; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 10275. An act authorizing appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4799. An act to approve act 235 of the Session Laws of 1923 of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric current for light and power within the District of Hana, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii"; and

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution authorizing the construction of a Government dock or wharf at Juneau, Alaska; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9685) providing for expenses of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seedling purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4785) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to complete the acquisition of the land authorized to be acquired by the public buildings appropriation act, approved March 4, 1913, for the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park, the Zoological Park, and Potomac Park; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ZIHLMAN, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. BLANTON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

AFFAIRS IN ITALY

Mr. FERNALD obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Those who followed the course of my remarks yesterday will be deeply interested, I am sure, in a dispatch which appeared in the Washington Star of last evening. I send the paper to the desk and ask that the dispatch be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star, April 19, 1926]

ATTACK BY ITALY FEARED IN TURKEY—SIZE OF ARMY DOUBLED IN FACE OF MUSSOLINI'S RECENT EXPANSION HINTS

(By the Associated Press)

LONDON, April 19.—Turkey's new levy of army conscripts is causing general speculation and is regarded in various quarters as giving substance to recent rumors of contemplated Italian or Italo-Greek aggression at Turkey's expense.

Turkey is calling up the military classes of men of 21 and 22 years of age, and all the reserve men of from 23 to 26. The urgent action of the Turkish recruiting bureau is said to be causing considerable nervousness among the people of Turkey.

While there is nothing concrete on which to base fears of an attack on Turkey, in political circles the opinion is advanced that the smoke indicates the presence of fire, and Turkey's action in increasing the peace footing of her army consequently is considered highly suggestive of danger.

DUCE'S SPEECH IS FEARED

Premier Mussolini's recent speeches and his reference in February to Italy's "Napoleonic year" is being interpreted not only in Turkey as seriously aggressive and as suggesting an intention to achieve colonial expansion in Anatolia, which is declared to be the Duce's aim. It is suggested that more precise form may be given the Italian intentions Wednesday, when the traditional anniversary of the founding of Rome is celebrated. Mussolini is expected to have something more to say then regarding his country's political policy.

From Angora, the Turkish capital, came advices to the effect that everyone has been following closely Mussolini's voyage to Tripoli and the general political situation, and that Turkey has not failed to make proper preparations. The Constantinople newspapers decline to believe that Italy would make an unprovoked attack on Turkey, but nevertheless they express satisfaction that the Turkish Government is taking all necessary precautions.

Recently London newspapers have printed rumors of an alleged design by Mussolini to enlist the support of Greece for his imperial ambitions. These rumors alleged that Greece, through long credit contracts with Italy, would purchase rifles, tanks, and other munitions which could be used against Turkey in Thrace while Mussolini was taking action in Asia Minor.

The Daily Express says a secret treaty the Allies signed in London in 1915 conditionally promised Italy a just share of the region adjacent to Adalia (a seaport of Asia Minor in the Vilayet of Konieh) and this agreement has not been fulfilled. The Express adds:

"Italian munition firms, motor firms, and industrial firms are working day and night to provide Greece with tanks and armored cars and artillery and other arms and ammunitions, which are now pouring into Greece, where the disastrous defeat by the Turks in 1922 still rankles. President Pangalos, of Greece, is modeling himself into a Mussolini."

It is estimated that the men called to the Turkish colors yesterday, added to those already summoned in connection with the Kurdish trouble and the Iraq dispute with Great Britain, will bring the Turkish Army to about double its normal peace strength of 120,000 officers and men.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. While the article was no doubt read with the idea of influencing the Italian debt settlement, I do not see any reason why it should be taken into consideration in the settlement of that question. The strength of the Italian Army is a trifle less in numbers than it was before the war. I do not know whether there is anything, in fact, in the newspaper report at all. There is nothing in it as affecting the Italian debt and no suggestion that it is going to be increased. I can not see that the dispatch has any bearing whatever upon any debt settlement that we will make with France or Italy or any other country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I called attention yesterday to the fact that the Italian Parliament had just passed a bill for the reorganization of the Italian Army by which its numbers would practically be doubled, to 220,000 men. Certain other countries, apprehensive of attack, are governing themselves accordingly. Turkey, according to this statement, apprehensive that she may be the object of attack by Italy, is increasing her army. Thus the dangerous practice of competitive armaments is going on, induced by the conditions that prevail in Italy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is nothing, even considering the statement as to an army of 220,000 men that would indicate any such action on the part of Italy. The present maximum is limited to 220,000 men, as against 234,000 for the year immediately preceding the great war and 240,000 for the years 1923 and 1924. There is actually a reduction under the present maximum limit of the army of Italy.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is now speaking of 220,000 men as the regular army.

Mr. SMOOT. The maximum is limited to 220,000 men.

Mr. BORAH. That is the regular army?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that includes the police, which used to be entirely separated from the army.

Mr. BORAH. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mussolini himself stated in a public speech within 30 days that the regular army consisted of 220,000 men, and that that did not include the police, which was not credited as belonging to the army at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am informed by the Italian ambassador that there has been a change in that respect. Those men are paid from the army funds and are counted with the army to-day. The Senator's statement was correct, as it affected conditions until a recent time. The Senator's statement was that they are entirely separated from the army, but I am informed that condition has been changed.

Mr. BORAH. I have the official gazette issued by the Italian Government and printed in February, which provides for the army and an increase of military expenditures under the head of the Interior Department, because the police are covered under that department. It is a wholly different organization.

Mr. SMOOT. But the number involved is not affected. The Senator is right as to his last statement.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the Senator from Utah a question while he is on his feet in connection with the matter under discussion. Does the Senator from Utah think that in the event Italy should become engaged in a war we would be in as good or better position to collect the money that Italy is now owing us as we would if Italy should remain out of war?

Mr. SMOOT. No; of course not. If Italy should be drawn into war it would be very doubtful whether she could make any payments at all on her indebtedness to us.

Mr. HARRISON. I was merely wondering if the Senator would agree with this statement:

But listen, folks—

Mr. SMOOT. That does not start out very well.

Mr. HARRISON. I am quoting from the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] in his inaugural-campaign address for reelection to the United States Senate.

But listen, folks. If Italy wanted to go to war, I would rather she would owe us that $2,040,000,000, with an agreement to pay so much a year, because that would keep her from putting that money into her navy or into her army.

Does the Senator from Utah agree to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. With such an agreement Italy could not put so much money into her expenditures for war.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah will agree with anything the Senator from Indiana may say.

Mr. WATSON. And be on perfectly safe ground.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi asked me if I agreed to that statement, and I said I would agree to it, irrespective of whether it came from the Senator from Indiana or anyone else.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yielded the floor all the afternoon on yesterday, and I am very anxious to make some headway on the bill. I am very glad, however, to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw the amendment which I have heretofore offered to House bill 6559 and to substitute in its place the amendment which I send to the desk, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the clerk will read as requested.

Mr. BRUCE. I hope order will be preserved in the Chamber, as it is a very important amendment which I ask may be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, page 2, line 23, after the words "deed of conveyance," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, however, That aside from land that may be acquired for enlarging the site of the Government Printing Office, the sum of $50,000,000 hereinafter made available for projects in the District of Columbia shall be used exclusively for the purpose of acquiring by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, south of Pennsylvania and New York Avenues and west of Maryland Avenue, protracted in a straight line to Twining Lake, such sites or additions to sites as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary to provide such suitable office accommodations in the District of Columbia as are hereinbefore mentioned, of constructing adequate and suitable buildings for the furnishing of such office accommodations on said sites or additions to sites, or on sites already owned by the Government south of Pennsylvania and New York Avenues and west of Maryland Avenue, as above mentioned, and of providing suitable approaches to said buildings, and beautifying and embellishing their surroundings; it being the sense of the Congress that the haphazard practice heretofore pursued by the Government of erecting or purchasing buildings for such office accommodations north of Pennsylvania Avenue should come wholly to an end, and that suitable provision for all such office accommodations in the future should, as nearly in harmony with the plan of Peter Charles L'Enfant as may be practicable, be made in the territory south of Pennsylvania and New York Avenues and west of Maryland

Avenue, as above mentioned, and in such manner as to gratify the highest standards of architectural beauty, as well as practical utility.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

PERMANENT ASSOCIATION OF INTERNATIONAL ROAD CONGRESSES

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, yesterday I reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads Senate Joint Resolution No. 94, which is now on the calendar, being Order of Business 636. I sought to have the joint resolution considered at that time, but objection was made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The joint resolution merely authorizes an appropriation for the purpose of enabling the United States to participate in the international road conferences. The Senator from Arkansas, who asked to have the joint resolution go over, has informed me that he would offer no objection to its consideration and passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize appropriations for the expenses of membership in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if he is not going to ask to have the public buildings bill laid aside so that those Senators who desire to speak on the Italian debt-settlement measure may speak to-day? Of course, the Senator knows that to-morrow we are to vote on the measure under a unanimous-consent order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to have the public buildings bill laid aside just as soon as anyone desires to speak on the Italian debt settlement bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate Joint Resolution No. 94 has been taken up by unanimous consent, but when that shall have been disposed of the Italian debt settlement bill will be before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to know if, under the terms of the joint resolution, the United States is to become a permanent member of the International Road Congress?

Mr. PHIPPS. The joint resolution merely enables the United States to accept membership and to participate in the meetings of the International Road Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have the joint resolution again read. I may say that the United States now belongs to a number of international organizations and yearly sends representatives to their meetings. When I was chairman of the subcommittee on the State Department I examined into the matter, and, from what I could ascertain, it became apparent that our country derived practically no benefit from our membership in such international organizations, and a few of the appropriations were discontinued. I have no objection to having the United States represented at the meetings of the International Road Congress whenever in the judgment of the Federal Road Department it would be wise to have our country represented, but I do object if the joint resolution provides that the United States shall become a permanent member of that organization and be required to appropriate money every year to keep up the organization. I should like to know whether or not the joint resolution provides for permanent membership on the part of the United States.

Mr. PHIPPS. The joint resolution authorizes the United States to accept membership.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me for just a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I had understood that perhaps the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desired to speak to-day on the Italian debt settlement bill.

Mr. FERNALD. In that event I will be very glad to ask that the public buildings bill may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. It is understood, then, that when a Senator desires to speak on the Italian debt settlement bill that measure will be laid before the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. There can be no doubt as to that. Any Senator may speak on the Italian debt settlement bill now or at any time between now and 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

THE PROHIBITION LAW

Mr. REED of Missouri. I had desired to address the Senate on the Italian debt settlement. I can not do so satisfactorily at this moment, for two reasons: First, I have been so unfortunate as to be a member of the committee investigating this "wet" and "dry" question, and that committee has been held in session every forenoon, and latterly it has been held in session during the afternoon. In the early hearings we adjourned in the afternoon, so that Senators could attend the sessions of the Senate. I have asked that the same procedure be followed when the "drys" were putting in their testimony, but the majority of the committee has refused to extend that courtesy.

The situation just now is that an important witness, who has made some very serious charges, was upon the stand at 12 o'clock. I asked that the hearings be continued until to-morrow morning in order that I might come here and give attention to this important business, the Italian debt. It was stated by one member of the committee that he probably could not be there; that he could not be there if the public buildings bill was being considered, and it appears that it is being considered. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was absent when the controversies of which I am now speaking came up. It was stated that one member of the committee could sit, and the rest would be absent. I protested, but my protest was voted down, so that the hearings are going on.

I might state that four members of the committee are very "dry," and I am the only member of the committee who seems to be interested in cross-examining the witnesses now coming upon the stand, so that I can not address myself to this question until I am released from that committee. I suppose the same degree of courtesy which has been extended will be extended during the rest of the afternoon, and the committee held in session.

That is the situation I am in. I can not be in two places at once. I will say that in all my experience in the Senate I have never known before, when a legislative jam was on that members of the committee wanted to attend, that the hearings have not been set aside or continued at the request of a member of the committee. I suppose the situation is such that I could get nowhere by offering a resolution on the floor of the Senate directing the committee to discontinue its sessions during the time the business of the Senate requires the attendance of its members.

Perhaps late in the afternoon I can be released so that I can talk on this question. Of course, I can not ask the Senate to hold up its business.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. FERNALD. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. It does seem to me that it is incumbent on somebody connected with this committee to make some sort of explanation of the motives that induced the committee to extend the kind of treatment that it has to the Senator from Missouri. Of course, so far as I am concerned, I expect no liberal measure of justice from anybody sharing the sentiments of the majority of that committee; but it does seem to me that simply because a member of the committee happens to be in a minority, that is no reason why he should not be shown a fair measure of consideration and politeness.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. It happens that I am chairman of this much-abused committee, the committee on prohibition. At the beginning the committee agreed that each side should have 24 hours; that we would sit four hours a day when it was possible, which, of course, necessitates a session of two hours in the afternoon. By a vote of the committee once or twice they have not held the afternoon sessions, but by a vote of the committee to-day they did decide to hold the afternoon session agreed upon. It is to be regretted that that conflicts with what some individual Senator feels is his right, but I want to say that the committee is trying to be fair to both sides.

Witnesses have been subpoenaed here from all over the United States and are here waiting to be heard. Some of them have been here for three or four days waiting to be heard before the committee. Those witnesses have some rights as well as the members of the committee and Members of the Senate.

We are trying to do the best we can with the matter. It is a hardship on all of us to stay over there, but we are trying to carry out the agreement which was made with these people when we started that we would hold sessions four hours a day and do the best we can with it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. In the first place, the Senator from Oklahoma is not chairman of the committee. There is no chairman of the committee. The name of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS] appeared first, and under a custom which has grown up the Senator from Colorado assumed the duties of chairman, of which I made no complaint. The Senator from Colorado became ill, and the Senator from Oklahoma states that the Senator from Colorado appointed him chairman—by what authority I do not know.

Mr. HARRELD. No; if the Senator will yield—

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. HARRELD. My authority comes from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in writing, appointing me as chairman.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. HARRELD. Whether or not he had authority to do so Senators can judge for themselves.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Iowa had no authority to appoint a chairman of the subcommittee by any resolution of the Judiciary Committee, but I make no complaint about that.

The fact is that there are no witnesses down here under subpoena—not a living witness. At the inception of this hearing the proponents of these various bills agreed with some of the opponents of the various bills on a division of time. The committee indicated that it would allow 24 hours on each side, and that the various sides would each have 24 hours; so that it was somewhat akin to a proceeding in court, each side being represented. Then the proponents asked for subpoenas for certain witnesses. The chairman of the committee stated that he had subpoenaed two officials, and that he would not subpoena others without the orders of the committee. The matter was brought before the committee in a formal application and refused; so that with the exception of one or two persons whom the chairman of the committee had summoned on behalf of the proponents of the bill no one was subpoenaed on that side.

My understanding is that the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], wired the district attorney of Chicago to come here. If you treat that as a subpoena, which it is not, then that official is here in response to a subpoena. No other subpoenas have been issued. These witnesses are here voluntarily, brought here by the organizations with which they are affiliated, just as witnesses on the other side were brought here by the organizations that solicited their attendance.

There was one witness upon the stand, a prohibition officer from Pittsburgh. He was put upon the stand at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who came before the committee and stated that he did not appear as a witness, but that this gentleman was here and anxious to testify and get away. Thereupon the committee put the witness upon the stand.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will state that correctly. I stated at the time that he would be put on if the committee for the "drys" sanctioned what he was going to say and asked for him to be put on, and he was put on at their instance.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; he was put on at their instance, the committee consenting to it, if that technicality makes any difference, and testified until the hour of noon. At that time the question came up of the continuance of the hearing.

I stated my position then much as I have stated it here; whereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was asked his judgment, and he stated to the committee in substance that he thought the business of the committee ought to give way to the business of the Senate. If I do not state the matter accurately, the Senator from Pennsylvania will correct me. He stated that the witness could stay over until tomorrow and testify. Notwithstanding that situation, a vote was taken, two members of the committee being present aside from myself—the acting chairman and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]—and they voted to go on with the hearing. That is the situation; and these witnesses who are here are here voluntarily, just as the witnesses on the other side all came voluntarily, except two or three.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I should not inject myself into this controversy at all were it not for the sweeping indictment against this committee made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], who told the Senate that he did not expect any measure of justice from the committee constituted as it is.

The committee, Mr. President, consists of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and myself. I wonder upon what sort of basis of justification a Senator, a Member of this body, rises and declares here that no measure of justice can be secured from a committee so organized.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Why should I have any confidence in the sense of justice of the Senator from Montana, when from first to last he did all in his power to prevent us from having any hearing at all—

Mr. WALSH. That is—

Mr. BRUCE. Any hearing in relation to the most important question, perhaps, that has ever agitated the minds of the people of the United States since the sectional struggle over slavery? Why should I have any confidence in the sense of justice of the Senator from Oklahoma, when he did not hesitate to say, in the course of these proceedings, that in his opinion anybody who brewed or distilled liquor in a house should be pronounced guilty of a felony, the most extravagant, the most outrageous speech that has ever been made in this body since one of the Senators declared that he was in favor, under certain circumstances, of capital punishment for a violation of the Volstead Act?

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

Mr. BRUCE. When men are so destitute of any sense of proportion as that, so utterly unable to understand the significance of facts as they are, who could have any confidence in their sense of justice, where their passions are so strongly involved?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not yield to the Senator. I want to finish what I have to say.

I do not desire to comment upon this matter, or to enter into a defense of the committee at all. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to the statement of the Senator from Maryland, and to leave that to stand for itself. I do desire to say that I was not present when the action was taken this morning to adjourn until this afternoon, but I think it a most extraordinary thing that a member of the committee should come before this body and ask it to endeavor to regulate the time when a committee should sit or when it should not sit.

From the beginning the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has been absorbed with other matters, the same as every other member of the committee has been. It was contemplated that the work of this committee would take just two weeks; that one week would be assigned to one side, and one week to the other side; that we would sit four hours each day, and complete the work in the two weeks' time.

Most of us serve upon the committee with great reluctance. It takes a great deal of our time that we would like to devote to other matters. But we endeavored to arrange that, and we found it utterly impossible to do so. We sat during the morning hour, and adjourned for the afternoon, in each instance, or at least in a number of instances, at the earnest request of the Senator from Missouri. I joined in the request, and I was eventually obliged to abandon the work of the committee for three days in succession, to give my attention to other pressing matters.

I mean to find no fault whatever with the action of the other members of the committee who insist upon going on, and it seems an extraordinary thing to me that the Senate of the United States should be asked to interfere in this matter, and take out of the hands of the committee the decision as to when they should or should not sit.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I made no such request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRELD. Since prohibition has been an issue in this country, it has been charged that all the fanatics in the country belong on the prohibition side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HARRELD. I am coming to it. The statement of the Senator from Maryland on this floor shows that not all the fanatics are on the prohibition side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will please state his question of privilege.

Mr. HARRELD. I am stating it. My point is this: The Senator criticized what he claimed was something I said. He said that I stated that any man who would run a distillery ought to be put in the penitentiary. That is not an accurate statement. The proof had just been made to the committee, at the time I made my assertion, that in Baltimore, I think it was, hundreds of distilleries were being run in the homes of the people of that city in the presence of big families of children, and I said that the man who would do that ought to be held guilty of felony, that the law ought to make it a felony; and I still adhere to that view.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, that is precisely what I said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HARRELD. No; the Senator from Maryland said—

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not yield to anyone at this time.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I want to correct the statement—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. HARRELD. I rise to a point of personal privilege again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of personal privilege.

Mr. HARRELD. The Senator from Maryland just said that I had quoted exactly what he said. The Record shows that he said that I stated that any man who would run a distillery ought to be charged with a felony, that it ought to be made the law that such action should constitute a felony. I did not make that sort of a statement. I said the man who would run a distillery in the midst of his family and his children ought to be held guilty of a felony, and the law ought to make that a felony, which is quite a different statement. I did not say that any man who runs a distillery elsewhere than in the home should be made guilty of a felony.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President—

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. EDGE. I will take but two minutes if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, for four days the public buildings bill has been before the Senate, and I have not had an opportunity to say 50 words in the whole four days. I have yielded to everybody for every purpose under the sun. We have decided the tariff on silk stockings and settled the Italian debt. We have talked upon almost every subject that could be brought before the Senate. I intend to be courteous to everybody and give everyone an opportunity.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I promise the Senator not to take more than three minutes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. How often has a Senator the right to yield and not lose the floor? According to my recollection of the rules, if a Senator yields more than twice, except for a question, he loses the floor. Can one Senator hold the floor and yield to a dozen Senators?

Mr. EDGE. I will yield back to the Senator from Maine. The Senator has yielded to me.

Mr. DILL. I want an answer to my parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FERNALD. Of course, it is very well known that if a Senator yields, except for a question, he loses the floor; but I assume that the Senator to whom I yield will yield the floor to me.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this controversy; but in order that the Record may be accurate it is only just for me to draw attention to the fact that the "wet" side of these hearings, so termed, extended over a period of more than two weeks. Those who were sponsors for bills being considered made no objection whatever. As I recall it, there was not a single afternoon session during the period the committee were considering the testimony on that side. There was one evening session, as I recall.

Mr. HARRELD. There were several afternoon sessions and one night session.

Mr. EDGE. I think the Senator is mistaken. There was one night session. There was one afternoon session upon the day we gave over to the proponents of the other side breaking in the middle of our testimony.

The Senator from Montana expresses surprise that a Senator would present his case before the Senate as the Senator from Missouri has done. When a Senator made the request that he made of the committee, and especially in view of the policy adhered to by the other side, I think it is most extraordinary that there should be the slightest question at all.

I am going now to take advantage of the courtesy of the Senator from Maine to ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution which provides, in effect, that all the hearings of the committee shall be postponed until after the vote is taken on the Italian debt settlement bill to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. EDGE. I ask the Secretary to read the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee be directed by the Senate to discontinue hearings on pending prohibition measures until after the vote is taken on the Italian debt settlement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRELD. I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. As the resolution is obviously a reflection on the committee, I object to its being introduced.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the public buildings bill, carrying an appropriation of $165,000,000—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Was there a ruling on the objection?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the resolution can not be introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Italian debt settlement bill be laid aside and that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Italian debt settlement bill be laid aside.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I could not hear the request, and I object until I know what the request is.

Mr. SMOOT. The situation is this, that the Italian debt settlement bill was taken up and is now before the Senate. No one desires to speak upon it, and therefore we want to lay it aside and proceed with the public buildings bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have no objection.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. EDGE. Did I understand the Vice President to rule the resolution I introduced out of order? I asked unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, it was introduced and read, and I heard no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not put any such request.

Mr. EDGE. Then, as I understand it, the resolution becomes a part of the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana objected.

Mr. EDGE. It goes over under objection for one day.

Mr. WALSH. I objected to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. EDGE. After the question was propounded as to whether there was objection the resolution was read. Do I understand that the Senator then objected to the consideration of the resolution? It had already been introduced.

Mr. WALSH. I objected to the introduction.

Mr. EDGE. It had already been introduced.

Mr. WALSH. How had it been introduced?

Mr. EDGE. By the Senator from New Jersey, and read at the desk. It becomes a part of the Record, does it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution was read for the information of the Senate, and objection was made to its introduction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is no question but that the ruling of the Chair was correct. The object of taking a recess is to prevent the injection into the Senate and the consideration of matters other than the unfinished business. When a measure is before the Senate the only way in which another can be brought to the attention of the Senate in any form is by unanimous consent. Unanimous consent was not asked for the introduction of the resolution, and when it was proposed to be introduced, then objection was made. Of course, the Senator did ask that the resolution be read, and it was entirely proper for him to do so, but when a request for its presentation was made the Senator from Montana objected, and that was entirely competent.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I do not question at all the Senator's parliamentary position; he is entirely correct, as I understand it. But the point I wanted to make was that I did ask for unanimous consent when I first addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator did not ask unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce a resolution, and consent was not granted.

Mr. EDGE. It is quite true that it was not granted, but I wanted to make clear that I proceeded in the usual way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator can ask now, if he desires, to offer his resolution, and unless some Senator objects it can be offered. He can ask unanimous consent for its consideration. But there is no occasion to criticize the Chair for sustaining the point of order that was made, because the Chair could not have done anything else.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I had no intention of criticizing the Chair, and I want that to be perfectly clear. I think I proceeded in the usual order, and, recognizing that objection has been made, I subside.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the public buildings bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understood the Italian debt settlement bill was the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought there might be objection to that procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If there is any Senator who desires to speak on the Italian debt-settlement question, the bill should be kept before the Senate.

Mr. FERNALD. And it will be kept before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not know whether anyone present desires to speak on the debt-settlement question or not, but our unanimous-consent agreement contemplates that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is any Senator who desires to speak on the Italian debt settlement bill, now is the time to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It may be that the Senator from Maine desires to discuss it.

Mr. FERNALD. No; I desire to discuss the other bill a while. I may want to discuss the Italian debt settlement bill at a later time. Now, Mr. President, if there is no one else who wants to speak, I ask that the public buildings bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, on last Friday when the bill was brought before the Senate for consideration we made some progress. On Saturday there were so many Senators who had important business engagements in the afternoon that we only proceeded about two hours and devoted that time to the consideration of the bill. During that time we made progress, and all the committee amendments were agreed to except two. Those two amendments went over because the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones] desired to offer an amendment to the committee amendments. Those two amendments are the first to be considered to-day, and I hope that we can make some progress to-day and settle the matter of the public buildings bill before the Italian debt-settlement measure comes to a vote to-morrow afternoon.

It would seem to me, from the arguments which have been made by Senators, that there is not so much opposition to the bill or to the passage of the bill as there is to some amendments that might be offered. Without taking any more of the time of the Senate, because I have already tried on several different occasions before the Senate to discuss the measure, I ask that we proceed immediately to consider the committee amendments. The first committee amendment is on page 2, to which the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones] desires to offer an amendment. I ask to have that committee amendment considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Maine that the opposition to the measure has not had an opportunity to talk on it at all. I desire to discuss the bill and to analyze it and try to show its nefarious features, and I shall do so at the first opportunity.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator is privileged now to do so if he desires.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] desires to proceed on another matter for a little while.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator wants to take up the amendment and submit it, I will talk then.

Mr. FERNALD. I simply want to bring the amendment before the Senate, and then if the Senator wishes to speak he may do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 7, after the word "purposes," insert a comma and the following words:

giving preference, where he considers conditions justify such action, to cases where sites for public buildings have heretofore been acquired or authorized to be acquired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

AMERICAN-ORIENTAL MAIL LINE

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, yesterday, when I was not in the Senate, a resolution was passed by unanimous consent regarding the sale of certain ships by the Shipping Board. These are ships of the American-Oriental Line, running out of Seattle. There was no discussion at that time, and I think since unanimous consent was given for the consideration and passage of the resolution, that I am not violating the proprieties of this hour to any great extent when I discuss for a few moments the reasons for it and the meaning of it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DILL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I rise, thanking the Senator for his courtesy, to move to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate on yesterday agreed to Senate resolution 204, relative to the proposed sale of vessels of the American-Oriental Mail Line and their operation. The resolution referred to was passed yesterday without any discussion, and it happened to be during my absence.

Mr. DILL. It happened to be in my absence, too.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am now asking unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DILL. I shall have to object to the unanimous-consent request to reconsider that vote. If the Senator wants to make a motion to do it, he can do so; but I shall have to object to any unanimous-consent request for that purpose.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I should have asked for unanimous consent first, which I have now done and which is not agreed to, wherefore I move to reconsider the vote by which resolution 204 was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. I do not know whether the motion is in order with the public buildings bill before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from California can enter the motion, but we can not act on it. If he desires to enter the motion, that is all right.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly I can enter the motion, and I have done so.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he desires action on his motion at this time?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; I do not desire it. It will come up to-morrow probably.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I rose to give some reasons, I hope, for the passage of the resolution, and if possible to call the attention of the members of the Shipping Board and the President to the importance of following the terms of the resolution as passed by the Senate. The sale which is proposed to be made of the ships of the American-Oriental Line running out of Seattle, it seems to me, is an act that exceeds the authority of the Shipping Board in the use of proper judgment in the proper management of the merchant marine.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In view of the fact that the Senator desires to discuss this subject, to discuss a resolution which was passed on yesterday, to the end that we may take up and consider the matter from all points, may I again request unanimous consent to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the resolution was adopted?

Mr. DILL. I object to the request. I simply want to discuss the subject.

Mr. McNARY. Am I to understand the Senator is objecting?

Mr. DILL. I object to the unanimous-consent request. The Senator from California has announced that he wants to have a motion pending to reconsider the passage of the resolution, and to that, of course, I have no objection.

I want to begin by calling attention to the fact that these ships were put in operation in 1921, having been completed at that time. They have been in operation ever since. They are ships that were leased and running out of Seattle to the Orient. The striking thing about the management of the ships and their sale at this time is to be found in the statement of their earnings during the past two or three years. For the fiscal year 1924 the profits were $939,743.62. During the fiscal year 1925 there was a loss of $1,556,226.82. It should be stated, however, that some $900,000 of that loss was the result of recon-ditioning the ships, and should not properly be charged to loss in operation. For the first six months of the fiscal year 1926 the loss was $40,435.61. Beginning in January, 1926, the ships began to make money, and the profits for that one month were $104,252.17. In February the profits were $16,007.68. The ships had begun to make money. At that very time the Shipping Board advertised them for sale.

The ships cost on the average something like $6,300,000 each. The bids that came in were, one for $800,000 per ship, and another for $900,000 per ship, and although the ships are making money the Shipping Board are so anxious to get rid of them that they refused to open an additional bid which came in the day the board met to decide on the bids. They refused to open the additional bid, I am informed, on the ground that if they did so they would have to reject all bids. They gave us their reason for selling the ships at about one-seventh of their cost when they are now making money that they want to keep expenditures within the appropriation allowed by Congress. There is a defense fund in the appropriation to take care of cases of this kind if the ships do lose money, but why should they sell them at the very time when they have just begun to make money? Why should they refuse to look into another bid that is handed to them and thus avoid any possibility of getting more than $900,000 apiece for the ships except that they are so anxious to sell?

There can be but one answer, and that is that the majority of the members of the Shipping Board are anxious to have the ships go to the Dollar Co., of San Francisco. The Dollar Line, if they get these ships, will have a monopoly of the American ship lines from the Pacific coast to the Orient, for they now have one line out of San Francisco and another line out of British Columbia, and with this line they would then have a monopoly of American shipping to the Orient.

But that is not all. The contract is the most liberal contract, I think, that has ever been offered for the sale of ships of this kind. Instead of 25 per cent cash demanded of the purchaser, they ask for only 2½ per cent, with a provision that 22½ per cent may be paid in the form of an irrevocable letter of credit, to be paid within two years and bearing interest at 4½ per cent. Why should the Shipping Board arrange that the Government shall finance the great Dollar shipping interests at 4½ per cent when the best we do with our banking system in the interest of the farmer is 5½ per cent?

I can not understand it. I think the action on the part of the Shipping Board was an unwarranted, unjust, and unconscionable exercise of their authority and is simply a process of scuttling American ships that are in control of the Government by turning them over to a private interest without any assurance that that private interest will continue to run them on the lines which have been established.

The law of 1920 specifically provides that in the sale of ships in cases of this kind, as is mentioned in the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], they shall be sold to companies who have financial backing in the community from which the ships sail. With a bid coming to them before they had decided what they would do with reference to existing bids, they refused to look at that bid for the reason that they would have to readvertise and reopen the entire case. It happens that the ships are all very high-class ships and in very good condition. Yet not only does the contract provide for only 2½ per cent cash being paid and that the other 22½ per cent of the so-called cash payment shall be financed at 4½ per cent interest by the Government, but there is no bond required against the purchaser, as has been the case in other contracts, particularly in the case of the Munson Line ships that were bought on the east coast. So I say the resolution of the Senator from Oregon not only was a wise resolution but the Shipping Board and the President should give heed to that resolution, because it is justice to the interests of the American people and because of the fact that if the proposed contract shall be carried out it will place a monopoly of the shipping of the Pacific Coast in the hands of this San Francisco company.

I have no prejudice against the company because it is located in San Francisco, but I do maintain that the commercial interests in the Northwest, from which these lines run their boats, should be considered, and the board should adopt every possible method to secure the best possible offer from the people in the communities from which the ships sail. After a period of five years there is nothing to keep these ships running from the Northwest at all; yet the port of Seattle is 900 miles closer to the Orient than any other port on the Pacific coast.

Mr. President. I am not going to take more time on this subject. I only wanted to voice my indignation at the action of the majority of the Shipping Board in this matter and, if possible, to call their attention anew to the subject, so that they might reconsider their action and save these ships to the people of the Northwest, serve the best interests of the shipping business as a whole and the interests of all of the American people.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, it would be a very easy matter indeed to make reply to the statements which have been made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] and a very easy task to justify fully the action of the Shipping Board. I shall not now detain the Senate for that purpose. Perhaps, to-morrow, if it shall seem necessary or desirable, I shall undertake to set forth the facts, which fully justify the action already taken by the Shipping Board.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. In case the able Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] should avail himself of the opportunity to make the statement which he has indicated, I shall undertake to show that the sale referred to was an unconscionable one, that it was against the interest of the American people, and was destructive of the American merchant marine. So I give notice to follow up the statement of the distinguished Senator from California similar to that he has given relative to the statement which has been made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 16, 1926:

S. 1144. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to acquire a tract of land for use as a landing field at the air intermediate depot near the city of Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas.

On April 17:

S. 3186. An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana.

On April 19:

S. 1550. An act to appropriate certain tribal funds for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Reservations.

CLAIM ON ACCOUNT OF FRENCH STEAMSHIP "MADELEINE" (H. DOC. NO. 335)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to a claim presented by the Government of France against the Government of the United States on account of the losses sustained by the owner of the French steamship Madeleine as the result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood, which at the time of the collision was being operated by the War Department, and I recommend that an appropriation be authorized to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, April 20, 1926. CALVIN COOLIDGE.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I should like to have considered the first amendment to the pending bill, which is on page 2. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], however, is absent, and before the amendment shall be acted on I should like for him to be present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to speak on the Italian debt settlement, and so I ask that that bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask unanimous consent that the public buildings bill may be laid aside and that the Italian debt settlement bill may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Italian debt settlement bill.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, since the debate upon the Italian debt settlement began there has been a remarkable shift in the contention of its proponents. It was believed by those who listened to the discussion of the British debt settlement measure that the settlements with the other foreign countries which were to follow would be along similar lines. Indeed, not only those who took part in that discussion believed that but the country likewise was led so to believe, for, as the attention of the Senate has been called to the fact before, the Republican convention at Cleveland incorporated in its platform that idea. Of course, an effort has been made to explain away that plank; excuses have been offered for it, and the contention that it should apply to the Italian debt settlement has been combated by many of the legal luminaries of the Senate. Included in that list was none less than the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], who made a very eloquent and ingenious speech trying to explain away the meaning of that platform. I hope that Senator convinced himself of the correctness of his contention, for I am sure he convinced no one else.

Merely for the purpose of keeping my argument in sequence, I wish again, so that it may brighten the lines of my speech, to refresh the memories of Senators as to just what the Republicans at Cleveland did state respecting these debt agreements. In considering what the Republicans stated at that time we must not lose sight of the background. That there was arising at the time in this country a movement in favor of canceling the indebtedness of foreign nations to this Government, and in order to allay that feeling, to put itself right before the people and to win votes in the campaign the Republican Party stated that the future agreements for the settlement of foreign debts which might be made with European countries would be on terms similar to those agreed to in the British debt settlement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the Senator from Mississippi quoting from the platform when he uses the phrase "similar terms"?

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to quote from that platform. I was first trying to refresh the mind of the Senator, so that he might again see the background which he visualized when he left his beautiful home in Connecticut and in 1924 sojourned to Cleveland to attend that well-oiled convention.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator has not any sentiments of envy toward the convention at Cleveland when he compares it to the convention which was held in New York.

Mr. HARRISON. The Republican convention, I will say, got away in much quicker time. Everything worked splendidly; the wheels were well greased and there was plenty of oil.

Mr. President, here is what the Republican platform said in regard to debt-settlement agreements:

We stand for settlements with all debtor countries similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

I do not care how smart or how ingenuous one may be, he can not confuse the meaning of those words; they are too simple; they are too plain for that. That declaration meant exactly what it said, that the future agreements which were to be made with France, with Italy, with Belgium, and other foreign countries were to be similar in character to the one into which we had entered with Great Britain. That meant that the number of years which were to be given to various foreign countries in which to pay their debt would not be longer than 62 years, because that was the number of years we had given to Great Britain within which to pay her debt. It meant that the interest charges were to be not less than 3 per cent, because for 10 years that was the interest rate arranged for in the British settlement. It meant that after 1930 the interest rate was not to be less than 3½ per cent, because those were the interest rates which were charged to Great Britain under the agreement. No one contended at that time that it meant anything different from that.

If any Republican spellbinder had gone before the people in that campaign and had contended that the Republican administration, if placed again in power, would stand for a debt settlement with Italy under which one-eighth of 1 per cent interest would be charged after 1930, one-fourth of 1 per cent for the next 10 years, and one-half of 1 per cent for the next 10 years, and no interest until 1930, the Republican management would have recalled that spellbinder from the stump; he would not have been permitted to make Republican speeches. It would have been ruinous and contrary to the policies of the Republican management.

The debt settlement with Great Britain, in the speeches made at Cleveland, both by the temporary chairman and the permanent chairman, and by other speakers there and by speakers throughout the campaign, was heralded as one of the big achievements of the administration. Boasts were made of the settlement which had been obtained with Great Britain and of the interest rate which had been charged, which was from 3 to 3½ per cent.

I excuse my friend from Connecticut for defending that agreement and contending for it as the basis of the terms imposed by the Italian debt settlement, under which the interest rate is one-eighth of 1 per cent. I excuse other Republican Senators who have taken the same position, but if the people of the country can be made to believe that is what the Republican Party meant when they wrote their platform, then they are dumber than I think they are. Senators on the other side of the Chamber may fool themselves, but they can not fool the people. Ah, I know at times they become politically insane, but they soon recover and in the end find themselves.

There was a debate in the Senate when the British debt settlement was under consideration, and that question was discussed. It was discussed by no less authority than the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I am sorry he is not here. He would not deny what I am about to say, because I am going to read what his contention was.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Utah was not aware that the Italian debt settlement measure was coming up at this time, but he will be in the Chamber in a very few minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the trouble about the Republican leaders. They jump around so much that when they see things coming up they run away from them. [Laughter.] I am perfectly willing for lieutenants of the Senator from Utah on the other side of the Chamber to send out and request him to come here, because really the speech which he then made and from which I am about to quote is quite a remarkable speech. It is good; some of the best matter I ever heard him express is embodied in that speech.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator from Mississippi was not sitting quite close enough to the Senator from Utah a few moments ago, or perhaps the Senator from Utah did not speak loud enough to be heard by the Senator from Mississippi, when he asked whether any Senator desired to speak on the Italian debt settlement, and apparently no one replied.

Mr. HARRISON. The Republicans change their minds so often the Senator must accord a Democrat an occasional opportunity to change his mind.

Here is what the Senator from Utah said in discussing the British debt settlement. I hope my friend, the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania, who has made speeches on this subject, will listen to this quotation. I may say that his have been among the best speeches which have been made, because he is a lawyer of high standing, and it takes a lawyer of his high standing and great ability really to make as plausible a speech as he has made in order to offer any kind of an excuse for anyone to vote for the pending agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I wish to say to the Senator that when he starts with such compliments as that I am always fearful of what will follow, and so I am waiting for the conclusion of the Senator's remarks with great interest.

Mr. HARRISON. I always compliment the Senator from Pennsylvania because he deserves to be complimented. [Laughter.] He made as fine a speech in the presentation of his side of this question as could possibly be made. I never dreamed when this Italian debt settlement measure was presented to the Senate that anyone could make as remarkable a speech as the Senator from Pennsylvania made. I do not know where he got his information. He did not happen to be a member of the Debt Commission. It is true he journeyed to Italy several times and performed great service over there for his country, and he is in a better position, perhaps, to know of the conditions in Italy some years ago than are some of the others of us; but certainly as a member of the Finance Committee he did not get the information that he has given to the Senate.

But the Senator from Pennsylvania, in his adroit way, with all of his attractive personality, as well as the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, have shifted the contention here by saying that Italy is paying all the principal, and that we are merely releasing her from paying interest, and that by so doing we are complying with the platform of the Republican Party when it says that the debt settlements will be similar in character to that with Great Britain.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I regret that it is necessary to go over this matter again; but the Senator appears to be quite oblivious of the fact that the debt settlement with England, when it was finally passed by the Senate, contained a provision that the commission created by the act of February 9, 1922, was authorized to make settlements with other governments indebted to the United States upon such terms as it might believe to be just.

Mr. HARRISON. I am delighted that the Senator has called that to my attention. He has read it to the Senate just an hour before I was going to read it to the Senate. I was coming to that in the course of my remarks.

That is what makes the course of the Republicans in the Senate seem to me so remarkable. The House of Representatives, when it passed the bill to which the Senator has called the attention of the Senate, said that the terms of debt settlement in the future, if I recall the exact wording, should not be more favorable than those given in the British debt settlement. Those were the words, in effect—that they were to be similar in character and not more favorable to the other countries. When it reached the Senate, it was contended in that discussion—and if I am not correct in that, I want the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Connecticut now to rise, because I have the Record here before me and I shall read it, if desired, so I assume that they agree with me as to that—the contention in the discussion of the British debt settlement was that, without such a provision, we might give to some other country in our settlement with them more favorable treatment than Great Britain received, and Great Britain would become aroused and protest and ask for a revision of its terms of settlement. From reading the debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD you will get that idea.

The House of Representatives had that language in the legislation. It came to the floor of the Senate. It was discussed here. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] defended the provisions embodied in the House bill. He made speech after speech, day after day, defending that provision, but in the end it was stricken out. It was stricken out upon the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts at that time, Mr. Walsh, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. So, in the end, when the legislation passed it was in the form to which the Senator has just called the attention of the Senate.

That law was passed in 1923. The convention in Cleveland met in 1924; and there, as they met around the council table to write this wonderful platform for the Republican Party, they wrote into it, not the law of 1923, but they said:

We stand for settlements with all debtor countries similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

In other words, they followed the idea expressed by the House.

Now, which is the Senator going to stand by? Is he going to repudiate this plank in his platform that was written after the law was passed to which he has called my attention? I submit that there can not be any misunderstanding about it. When the Senator from Connecticut and his party went to the country in 1924 it was with fine-spun speeches upon their lips, claiming as an achievement the British debt settlement, and saying, "If you will keep us in power we will settle with Italy, we will settle with Belgium, we will settle with Hungary and the other countries upon terms similar to those that were included in the British debt settlement."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. So that the RECORD may be complete, will not the Senator read into the RECORD at this point what the Democratic platform said on the same point; or was not the Democratic convention in session long enough to get around to it?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator read to me what the Democratic platform said about that?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not happen to have it here. I recall it rather roughly, but not well enough to state it. Will not the Senator read it?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not recall that we dealt with that matter in our platform. I know there was no politics in the passage of the British debt settlement. I voted for the British debt settlement. Most of the Senators over here voted for it. Indeed, I think there were but very few Senators who voted against the British debt settlement. There was no politics in it. There was no reason why we should claim in our platform any great achievement for our party, except that of cooperation in the ratification of the settlement with those on the other side who believed in it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not the Senator recall what his own platform said about this subject?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not recall what we said about it. I do not think we mentioned it. It was not a political issue.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then the Senator does not know whether he is consistent with good Democratic doctrine in what he says or whether he is not?

Mr. HARRISON. I know that Senators on this side of the aisle are standing for the same treatment toward these other countries that we stood for in the case of Great Britain. We do not believe in discrimination.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator does not know what his party stands for on that subject; does he?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I know what my party stands for.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then will not the Senator tell us?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; if the Senator will take his seat, I am going to tell him. The Democratic Party stands in behalf of the taxpayers of America where their interests conflict with those of the taxpayers of Italy. We loaned to the Government of Italy $2,042,000,000. We expected to get that money back in time if the war was won. The war was won; and yet the Senator from Pennsylvania and his colleagues over there, notwithstanding what they wrote in their platform, notwithstanding their protestations to the American people in the elections, now ask us to concede to Italy 73 cents on the dollar and to collect only 27 cents on the dollar.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator think—

Mr. HARRISON. Just wait until I finish. The Senator asked me a question, and he must wait until I get through.

The Democratic Party does not stand for what the Senator from Pennsylvania and this administration stand for—the relief of the Italian taxpayer during the period of 62 years of all interest charges on the Italian debt except $365,000,000. The Democratic Party does not stand for that which the Senator from Pennsylvania stands for—shifting from the Italian taxpayer to the shoulders of the American taxpayer during the 62 years, under the terms of the Italian debt settlement, $3,052,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Not yet; I have not finished.

The Democratic Party stands for treating Italy no better than we treated Belgium. It can not reconcile its views to the belief that we should exact from Lithuania, for instance, 82 cents out of every dollar that she owes to us and exact from Italy only 27 cents out of every dollar that she owes to us. The Democratic Party does not believe in and can not reconcile its views to the policy that the Republicans are trying to put over here of exacting from Hungary 82 cents out of every dollar that Hungary owes us, while at the same time exacting from Italy only 27 cents out of every dollar that Italy owes to us.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now does the Senator feel like yielding?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I have not finished yet. Just wait a minute. I am going to give the Senator some facts.

The Democratic Party does not stand for the policy that the Republican Party stands for of exacting from Poland, which had a pretty hard time during the war, 82 cents out of every dollar that she owes to us, while at the same time exacting from Italy only 27 cents out of every dollar that she owes to us. The Democratic Party does not stand for burdening the American taxpayer while releasing the Italian taxpayer, of giving more favored treatment to Italy than to the other European allies. The Democratic Party does not believe in erecting the walls of protection so high that Italy can not sell to us some of the lemons and some of the linen fabrics and some of the silk fabrics and some of the cotton fabrics and some of the straw hats and some of the other things that she formerly sold to us in order to have some kind of a balanced trade and improve her economic condition. The Democratic Party stands for permitting and encouraging Italy to get upon her feet and sell something here. So there are many differences between what the Senator from Pennsylvania stands for and what I stand for.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I can not reconcile my views to the political insincerity and hypocrisy of the Senator's political comrades, himself, and this administration in saying they are trying to help Italy by relieving her of the payment of 73 cents on the dollar that she owes us and at the same time saying to her: "You can not ship to this country any of your goods and sell them here so as to enable you to pay your debts."

Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for yielding. I should like to put this question to the Senator:

I have looked over the Democratic platform of 1924, and I find that there is no express reference to the international debts or their settlement. Probably the Democratic convention was not at Madison Square Garden long enough to get around to that, but I do find the following statement:

The Government of the United States for the last four years has had no foreign policy, and consequently it has delayed the restoration of the political and economic agencies of the world.

I should like to ask the Senator, who knows more about Democratic policies than I do, whether it is the policy of his party that the Italian debt should be collected, the whole $2,000,000,000 of it, with 5 per cent interest, such as the present promissory notes of Italy call for? Does the Democratic Party insist on the collection of 5 per cent interest on that debt? If not, why did Democratic officials make that loan, and why did they stipulate for 5 per cent interest when they made those advances to Italy? Do they believe in scaling down the amount at all; and if so, why? Do they believe in limiting our collection to the Italian capacity to pay or do they believe in trying to collect more than the Italian capacity to pay?

Will not the Senator, in this hour that he has allotted to himself for this subject, answer some of those questions?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will take his seat and bide his time with patience and not get too nervous while I talk, I shall do it. Just be seated, and I will do it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I assure the Senator that I am not nervous. I am merely looking for information, because the Senator has not even come anywhere near answering any of those questions yet.

Mr. HARRISON. I know that I could not answer them to the satisfaction of the Senator at all.

When these debts were contracted by these nations and the 5 per cent charge was imposed, of course, it was hoped that in time we would collect the 5 per cent interest rate, but no one ever thought or ever dreamed that we were going to release them from all of the interest charges. No American citizen believed that any statesman would ever have the audacity to suggest the payment of an interest rate less than that borne by the already burdened taxpayers of America. Like other Senators on this side of the Chamber, I voted to reduce the interest rate in the case of Great Britain to 3 per cent until 1930 and 3½ per cent for the rest of the time; so I have proven that I am not a stickler for any particular interest rate at all. I did that at the suggestion of your commission, and in the belief that that rate would be the standard to be followed in all other instances. We were so led to believe. The trouble is, I was fooled as well as the country was fooled. But let me say to the Senator that when he deals with international questions and foreign countries and shows preference to one country over another he is sure to get into deep water; that he is liable to become enmeshed in international controversies; that whenever you settle with Italy upon the terms proposed here, giving to them all the interest charges until 1930, and after that one-eighth of 1 per cent for 10 years, and on down the line, you are inviting Belgium to come in and ask for a revision of the terms of settlement we have entered into with her; you are inviting Poland and Czechoslovakia and Lithuania and Hungary and Great Britain and every other country to come in and ask for a revision of the terms of their settlement.

What excuse can be offered when Poland comes in and when Czechoslovakia comes in? What justification can you make for exacting from them an interest rate of 3 or 3½ per cent while practically giving all the interest to this other country? That is one phase in answer to the Senator's question.

He has asked me what I would do in the circumstances. He asked the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] yesterday what he would do under the circumstances. In that the Senator is as adroit and as ingenious as usual. In his speech the other day, and in the speech of my friend the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WARREN] placing himself before the people of Indiana in the coming election for reelection—and we can always take a speech of the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana as a criterion in political matters that other Republicans will follow—they ask, in discussing this Italian debt settlement, "What would you do? Would you go to war?" By that they try to give the impression to the country that those of us who oppose the present Italian debt settlement would go to war in order to collect it.

You can not fool anybody with such an argument as that. There has never been any suggestion that we should go to war, except the expressions falling from the lips of my friend from Pennsylvania and his colleagues on the other side. Of course, we would not go to war with Italy about her debt to us. But I say that it is better to effect no terms of settlement with Italy at all than to ratify this agreement with Italy, and thereby cause these other countries to come here and demand a revision of the settlements we have made with them.

They have already put off the settlement for eight years; but we did not go to war during that time. All those on the other side who have made speeches concede that Italy is getting upon her feet, that she is developing, that she is progressing, and that her exports are growing, that her valuations are increasing, and that the people are becoming more contented all the time. In other words, before the war, if I recall the figures correctly—and they will be combated, no doubt, by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I base them upon statisticians' reports—the wealth of Italy was $22,000,000,000 and now they say it is $35,000,000,000.

Yesterday the distinguished Senator from Utah, in his colloquy with Members on this side, in discussing exports from Italy, cited the fact that in 1925 they amounted to $5,000,000 more than they did in 1924. So what harm is there, what harm can there be, in sending this Italian debt settlement, which we have already put off for eight years, back to the committee for further investigation, or put it off for 3 years, or 2 years, or 5 years, or 10 years, until Italy can get economically in better condition, and be better able to settle, than now? We can then obtain better terms than we have in this debt settlement, and at the same time we would be avoiding this international complication in which we are bound to find ourselves if we show this favor toward Italy as against Poland, Lithuania, Hungary, and other allied countries.

I notice the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] leaving the Chamber. I am glad the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has now come in. When I am attached to the one, I am deserted by the other. [Laughter.] So I suppose that when the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] saw my friend from Utah coming in, he thought the cause was in able hands and that he might be excused for a time. But I am going to read to the Senator from Utah some of his fine-spun speeches made back when the British debt settlement was before the Senate, when he talked in a different vein from that in which he speaks now.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I just came into the Chamber and heard the latter part of the colloquy between the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Pennsylvania. We are not considering the settlement of this Italian debt as a political matter, are we?

Mr. HARRISON. I told the Senator from Pennsylvania before the Senator from New York came in that the debt settlement never had been considered along political lines, and that so far as I was concerned it could not be settled along such lines. I cited the platform of the Republican Party, in which they had claimed the British debt settlement as a great achievement, when they could not have passed it without the Democratic votes that were given to it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that, because I understand this settlement pending here is a joint product of the two parties, and the Democrats on the commission voted with the majority. So far as I am concerned, as a Democrat, I am glad to announce that I am for the settlement, believe in it heart and soul, and I do not want any Member of the Senate to feel that the matter is being settled as a purely partisan question, because certainly it is not.

Mr. HARRISON. I have never said that this Italian debt settlement was being discussed from a partisan standpoint, and I never had any doubt as to where my friend from New York stood on the proposition—not a bit. He has as much right to vote for this Italian debt settlement as I have to vote against it. I can understand the Senator's viewpoint, and I am sure he will accord to me the right to see it from my viewpoint. I see the taxpayers of America in this matter, and I am not blinded by these crying statements and appeals to help the Italian taxpayer in preference to the American taxpayer. Men may be influenced in this matter by various causes, and I do not care what they are. I am not questioning anybody's motives at all. It is not a personal matter. But do not be deceived by the fact that there were two Democrats on this commission, or three. I would not care if it had been made up entirely of Democrats; that would make no difference with me. I know that tempting offers to go on the commission were repudiated and spurned by Democrat after Democrat. I have very high regard, I have warm affection for all three of the Democratic members and, I may say, for the Republicans as well. I say that because my friend from Utah [Mr. Smoot] may become aggrieved if I should not mention the Republican members too. But I am not fooled, and there is no use to appeal to me for my vote, because it is said that Democrats were on the commission.

Many Democrats of high standing were offered places on the commission, and they would not take them, and they did not take them, because they knew that this funding agreement was going to be written by the stroke of the hand of the man who those on the other side like to say is the second Hamilton of the world's history. The acceptance of such in the circumstance naturally weds criticism without hope of winning glory. Mr. Mellon was no doubt the man. I do not suppose some of the members of the commission knew what was going on in the writing of this proposition. My friend from Utah may once in a while have been taken into the council, and some little details may have been whispered to him, because they appreciated the fact that he had to sit here and stand the brunt of this discussion. But some on the commission perhaps were never able to locate the place where they were having the meetings with the Italian delegates.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is more painful still that they do not seem to realize what it is now.

Mr. HARRISON. No; they have not told us anything, and the committee knew nothing about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator must not forget that it is absolutely necessary to approve this debt settlement in order to make the hundred-million-dollar loan negotiated by Mr. Morgan for the Italian Government good at 7 or 8 per cent interest.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. No one knows the influence of that loan of Morgan & Co. to Italy. That is the most cunning stroke, that is the most clever Italian hand, that can be found in all of this controversy. No doubt they visualized that in pushing this debt settlement through the Senate, and winning some support in the country for it, if they could get Mr. Morgan & Co., with all of his affiliated organizations in New York and his interlocking banks throughout the country, to sell to certain people in the United States some of these Italian bonds, and thus get them interested, and then let them know that whatever action this body took with reference to this Italian debt settlement their bonds would be affected, they might out of all that list find some influential person who could touch some influential key to help along the passage of this legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask the Senator, and also the Senator from Tennessee, if they think that anybody here is voting for this settlement because the Morgans want us to vote for it. Does any Senator here think that I am voting for it because the firm of Morgan is going to be benefited?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course not.

Mr. COPELAND. There is not one of the Morgans who has helped the Democratic Party in my State.

Mr. HARRISON. No matter if there were a billion Morgans, they could not influence the Senator from New York. He is an exceptional man. Of course they could not. But if Mr. Morgan sold some of these bonds to certain people throughout the country, and they knew that if this Italian debt settlement should fall in the Congress of the United States their bonds would not be worth as much as though it were ratified, some of those fellows would be for the ratification of this settlement, and occasionally one might be tempted to write a letter to their Senator and to their Congressman to vote for it, and that might create an impression on the mind of the Senator that there was really some sentiment behind all this proposition, that the people in the country were for the ratification of the Italian debt settlement.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a Senator might on his own account have brains enough to know whether this is a good settlement or not.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course not, and that is why we want to send it back to the committee so that we can find out about these things.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator stated a moment ago, if I understood him correctly, in substance, that the sale of this $100,000,000 of Italian bonds throughout the country had created a sentiment in favor of the settlement.

Mr. HARRISON. I said it may have created such a sentiment.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator if he can tell us any one holder of any of those bonds to-day who is here advocating directly or indirectly the settlement of this debt?

Mr. HARRISON. No; and that is the reason why I want the matter recommitted to the Committee on Finance. Let us find out some of those facts.

Mr. BAYARD. But the Senator can not cite any of them?

Mr. HARRISON. I want that done so we can find out just to whom the bonds were sold and just what their activities are with reference to the passage of the legislation.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator had a list of the bondholders to-day, would he be satisfied then?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I think the committee ought to investigate the proposition and ought to find out their views about it. The Senator does not deny the proposition that if the agreement should be defeated it would affect the bonds that were sold by Morgan & Co. throughout the country, does he?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I do not deny that for a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the point I was trying to make before.

Mr. BAYARD. I understood the Senator to have another thing entirely in his mind, and that was that if it were known that the bonds were bought purely for this purpose, then it would have an effect.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. Can the Senator think of any holder of the bonds, whoever he may be, having approached anybody in the Senate advocating the ratification of this settlement?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I can not. I do not know who bought the bonds. I know the papers say they were sold by Morgan & Co., and that they got a 7 per cent commission, and that the bonds bear 7 per cent interest.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator does not intend to intimate at all that the holders of the bonds are using their influence to bring about a settlement or rejection of the debt settlement?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am merely saying the bonds were sold throughout the country. They may have been sold to some very influential persons. No doubt those men were business men and they realize that if the settlement with Italy is defeated their bonds are going to be affected. No doubt some of them have written to their Senators to vote for the proposition. Whether or not a Senator has been influenced by that means I do not know. I know it is said that men in Congress, both in the House and in the Senate, are sometimes influenced by letters which they get from home. That is true with reference to the prohibition question. That is true with reference to many other questions. I have no doubt; no matter how courageous some distinguished Senators may be, that if they get a thousand letters from some of their powerful constituents asking them to vote for the Italian debt settlement, they might do so.

I have no doubt, on the other hand, that if some Senator had about 10,000 Italian voters in his particular city and he was coming up for reelection this year, and those Italians and their organizations should have a lot of confabs and should pass resolutions saying that they were in favor of the approval of the Italian debt-settlement agreement, it would have a very potential effect upon the workings of the mind as well as the heartstrings of some Senators.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is making a plea for the recommitment of the matter to the Committee on Finance for further investigation. I think it is perhaps a little persuasive along the line of argument he is making to call attention to the fact that in the World Almanac for 1926, which we all of us more or less consider a pretty good authority on questions of statistics, I find that the national wealth of Italy in 1912 was estimated at $22,000,000,000, and in 1922, 10 years later, at $35,000,000,000, a difference within 10 years of $13,000,000,000 in the way of increased wealth on the part of Italy. I think it was stated here that perhaps the national wealth of Italy does not exceed about $20,000,000,000 now. According to this authority it is $35,000,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. That was in 1922.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] yesterday showed how the exports from Italy had increased $5,000,000 in 1925 over 1924, and other figures show how things in general are improving in Italy. There is no telling how Italy stands now in the matter of taxable wealth.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator must remember that the war intervened between 1912 and 1922, and in spite of the devastation to which attention has been called the wealth of Italy increased about $13,000,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and here is what the American Chamber of Commerce of Italy says about Italy's condition:

The financial situation of Italy has steadily improved since the war ended, and more especially since 1920.

The budget deficits for the current financial year (July 1, 1924-June 30, 1925) have considerably decreased; it is hoped that the budget can be balanced and even that there may be a surplus in 1925-26.

It was also found possible to reduce the domestic national debt to a considerable extent in 1924; and in February, 1925, Italy's foreign commercial commitments were repaid in their entirety, so that now the only foreign indebtedness remaining to be settled is the important one of "interallied debts."

The year 1924 has been one of great prosperity for Italian commerce and industry. After the war and immediate postwar periods of disordered and unproductive activity the Italian people seems to have found itself and to have coordinated its productive powers.

And here is what Morgan & Co. in its advertisement to sell the one hundred millions of dollars of Italian bonds in November, last year, says respecting Italy's condition:

His Excellency Count Giuseppe Volpi, Minister of Finance of the Kingdom of Italy, authorizes the following statement in connection with this issue:

"The Italian Government's budget is balanced. Since 1922 the budgetary situation has been undergoing steady improvement, and in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925, actual revenues amounted to 20,456,000,000 lire and expenditures to 20,247,000,000 lire, resulting in a surplus of 209,000,000 lire. The Government's budget for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, as passed by the Italian Parliament, shows an estimated surplus of over 177,000,000 lire, and includes estimated payments on the intergovernmental debts. Receipts for the first three months of the current fiscal year, according to provisional returns, showed an excess of about 168,000,000 lire over expenditures.

"The Italian Government has available resources and revenues sufficient for its current requirements, both domestic and foreign. It proposes, therefore, to devote none of the proceeds of the present loan to ordinary expenditures, but to hold the entire amount as a gold reserve, available for currency-stabilization purposes, leading to the final steps in the Government's definite fiscal and financial policy, of which a completely stabilized currency is a vital part.

"Since 1923 the Italian Government has made progress in funding its floating debt and in reducing the outstanding amount of its total internal debt.

"Since 1923 the Italian Government has made progress in funding its floating debt and in reducing the outstanding amount of its total internal debt. On June 30, 1923, the total internal debt amounted to 95,944,000,000 lire. On June 30, 1925, it stood 90,841,000,000 lire, a reduction of over 4,700,000,000 lire. With the exception of a very limited amount of bonds issued in London prior to 1914, the present loan constitutes the entire Italian governmental external debt in the hands of the public.

"The Government's indebtedness to the United States Government has been funded under an agreement, dated November 14, 1925, subject to ratification by the United States Congress and the Italian Parliament. This agreement provides for payment over a period of 62 years, beginning with payments of $5,000,000 annually during the first five years, gradually increasing during the life of these bonds to approximately $26,500,000 in the twenty-fifth year and to approximately $31,500,000 in the twenty-sixth year.

"The Italian Government's only other intergovernmental debt is that to the British Government, discussion of which is under way."

But the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who does not now honor me with his presence, in his very remarkable speech the other day employed language quite different in character. He said:

I wish they could have seen the effect the war has had upon Italy—the cripples, the reduction in her vitality that inevitably followed the war, the tremendous reconstruction that was necessary to make bare life possible.

Of course, that is true. Italy suffered. Other countries suffered. Poland, God knows, suffered. Belgium suffered, and we are exacting out of Belgium 55 cents out of every dollar we loaned her, and out of Italy only 27 cents of every dollar we loaned her. Czechoslovakia suffered. Lithuania suffered. All of the countries to whom we loaned money suffered. We suffered ourselves. The same picture that is painted of Italy could be painted of almost every other country in Europe. The Senator from Pennsylvania said further:

I wish the Senate could have gone over there to see the industry those people are showing, the long hours the people are working.

Oh, this is the language of an advocate to a jury, of a very adroit lawyer:

The long hours the people are working. They start before daylight, I know, because I used to swear at them for waking me up at 5 o'clock in the morning.

Of course the Senator thinks that because they have long hours over there, because they start work at daylight and in some instances work until sundown, those people are doing something out of the ordinary, something that is not practiced in the United States. The Senator, sitting in his office in the great metropolis of Pittsburgh, where his vision is obscured by the smoke of the protected industries of that city, can not see beyond Pittsburgh. He can not scan away out yonder to the plains and prairies of the West, not even to Indiana or Ohio or out into the valleys of his own State. He does not know that there are other sections of the country outside of Pittsburgh where men are working from daylight to sundown, where they have long hours, where they belong to no union, and where they do not even get as much money as he said the laborers of Italy get. I know there are men in this country who work not alone themselves from sunrise and who have to plow and labor after the sun goes down, and in many instances even work by the light of the moon-lit rays in the night, but their wives and their boys and their girls are working too, and they are not making the pittance which the Senator from Pennsylvania says the Italian laborer is making. There are farmers in this country who are doing that sort of work. Those are not the people for whom the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania speaks and to whom he offers praise, but those from whom to-morrow he is going to take $3,500,000,000 and give to those midst Italian skies and under Mussolini's flag. He is not thinking of the distress in this country of the men who are working long hours and getting nothing in return.

Italy may be in a bad fix—no doubt she is—but I have in part cited the facts, which conclusively show she has improved to a very large extent in recent years. Her wealth has been told and the increase in her wealth has been alluded to.

Then, too, Italy has over $500,000,000 in power plants. Before the war she was eighth in merchant marine, while to-day she is fourth. If one can imagine what that means, he will know how greatly Italy will be aided in working out her own economic salvation. Surrounded as she is by water, by the Mediterranean, the Adriatic, and other waters, possessing a merchant fleet fourth of any in all the world, with the cheap labor that she has, with the wonderful seamen in whom Italy glorifies, she has every opportunity, if our Government would not too greatly restrict her trade, to build up a foreign trade and to become economically healthy again. The annual savings in 1924 in Italy were $420,000,000, and it is said that Italian immigrants in this country send back to Italy every year $260,000,000. I do not know the figure, but it must be a stupendous amount that the tourists from America and England leave in Italy every year, because all who can and are able to do so visit that great country.

We were told yesterday of Italy's exports increasing. We are now told how her wealth is increasing. Italy is getting upon her feet. Why not wait, instead of ratifying the favored agreement at this time—an agreement that reeks with discrimination and which is sure to cause international complications and debt revisions. We can lose nothing and will save much.

My attention was diverted and I did not get to the point that I desired to make when my friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] was absent from the Chamber. I was speaking of the platform of the Republican Party when it said in 1924 that—

We stand for settlement with all debtor countries similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

I alluded to the fact before in my argument, but the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] and others said that we were to be 62 years in collecting every cent that we had loaned to Italy, that we were collecting the principal, and that we were merely releasing the interest charged. Is interest not similar to principal? Did not the country believe, when that platform was written, that we were going to exact from Italy and Belgium and the other countries 3 and 3½ per cent interest?

Would not that interest rate be similar in character to that which we imposed on Great Britain? Here is what the Senator from Montana said in 1923 in discussing this question on the floor of the Senate:

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would say with respect to that, I think the word "similar" is not sufficiently well defined to serve the purpose. I think something in addition to that ought to be incorporated in the bill.

Here is what the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] said in reply—and I am sure he will not now take issue with the statement he then made:

I will say to the Senator that I have given that much thought. If we do not use the word "similar" and do use some more definite word than that, we can not change the annual payment. The annual payment would have to be just exactly the same as enumerated in the bill. The word "similar," however, will certainly cover the 3 per cent and 3½ per cent and the real fundamentals of a settlement.

The Senator from Utah said the word "similar" meant that since we had charged Great Britain 3 and 3½ per cent we must charge the other nations 3 and 3½ per cent. The Senator from Utah always wants to follow his platform and his party, and so in the platform was written the plank:

We stand for settlements with all debtor nations similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

When we collect from Great Britain 3 and 3½ per cent and from all the other countries 3 and 3½ per cent, and we let Italy off with no interest charge until 1930, for the next 10 years one-eighth of 1 per cent, for the next 10 years one-fourth of 1 per cent, for the next 10 years one-half of 1 per cent, and so on, who can contend that the Senator's party can fool the people into thinking that that is similar in character, that they are living up to their platform pledge? They are doing that which they have always done—betraying the promises they have made to the American people.

Mr. FERNALD obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I was hoping before the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] had finished his speech he would tell us what he would do. He is an eloquent critic; he has pointed out how we are betraying the American people and departing from our platform and throwing away American dollars for the sake of aliens; but he does not tell us how he would handle the situation.

Mr. HARRISON. While the Senator from Pennsylvania was on his visit to see Secretary Mellon I made my statement as to that. I am sorry he was out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I felt so weak after the Senator's earlier remarks that I went down to get something to eat.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad that my darts reached the right place.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad the Senator noted my absence. It was a very nice lunch, and I am glad I went; but I am sorry to have missed that eloquent period in the Senator's remarks in which he stated how he would have handled this situation.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Mississippi expressed himself on that point.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not agree with the interpretation of the plank of the Republican platform which the Senator from Mississippi places upon it. The platform states:

Our attitude has not been that of an oppressive creditor seeking immediate return and ignoring existing financial conditions. Our position has been based on the conviction that a moral obligation such as was incurred should not be disregarded.

We stand for settlements with all debtor countries similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

I might say, Mr. President, that I was a member of the committee that drafted the platform, and I heard the discussion prior to the adoption of that language in the platform. It was framed on the basis on which the other debt settlements had been recommended, namely, on ability to pay, and not as a Shylock demanding every ounce of flesh whether nations were able to pay or not.

The Senator from Mississippi, who is chastising the party to which he does not belong because, as he says, it disregards its platform obligations, is rather in an unfortunate position as a critic, for I recall that in 1912 the Democratic platform, which was very strongly supported by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, who was then a Member of the House of Representatives, stated:

We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

The candidate of that convention was Woodrow Wilson, and in 1916 the Senator from Mississippi, who now caustically criticizes a doubtful question of Republican policy, supported the candidate who violated that pledge, and the distinguished Senator from Mississippi then violated his pledge to his party platform.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator from Ohio that the majority of the American people were against me? They just would have Mr. Wilson as President again.

Mr. FESS. I commend the Senator from Mississippi not only for his genial characteristics but for the ease with which he tries to get out of a corner. The same platform in 1912 makes this statement:

We favor the exemption from toll of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the [Panama] Canal.

That is a solemn pledge which is found in specific language in the Democratic platform for that year. The Senator from Mississippi was a Member of the House of Representatives, as the Senator from Ohio was a Member of that body at that time. The Senator from Mississippi will recall the discussion in the House of Representatives following the recommendation of the President to disregard this plank. He was one of the strong figures in that debate, and he will recall whether or not he took the position that we ought to repudiate that plank, which was repudiated under the leadership of the Democratic President.

I would not say anything about these matters were it not that the Senator from Mississippi is not in a good position to occupy the rôle of critic in the particular phase of political controversy to which he has addressed himself.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that I was in a hopeless minority on the Panama Canal tolls question. I happened to be one of about 37, I think, in the House—at least of the Democrats—to vote to keep that campaign pledge. The Senator, however, on his side had a majority against it, and I was overruled.

Mr. SMOOT. There was certainly a majority of Democrats in the Senate who voted not to keep that pledge of the Democratic platform.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, whether the Senator was consistent or not, I was careful not to make any embarrassing statement on that subject, for I did not recall just how he voted, and had not examined the Record; but the party then in power, which was the Democratic Party, did repudiate its pledge. So I might make the same criticism of the Democratic Party that the Senator from Mississippi has been making of the Republican Party, for the Democratic Party violated a pledge which was as specific as possible and about which there could be no ambiguity. In this instance, however, I do not hold that the Republican plank of 1924 carried with it the idea that the terms for all debt settlements, including the rate of interest, must be identical with the terms of the British settlement, but that the character of the settlements, based upon ability to pay, should be similar. In my opinion that is the only correct interpretation of the platform plank, because it is stated immediately before the sentence which the Senator from Mississippi has quoted that the Republican Party would not insist upon unreasonable conditions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as illustrating the poverty in which Italy now finds herself, according to the report of the debt commission, I desire to read from an article in the New York Times of April 13 under the following headline:

Work on new Rome begins next week—State advances 90,000,000 lire to start restoring city's "Augustan glory"—Slums will be torn down—Public buildings will be erected and ancient structures excavated under Mussolini's plan.

This is the bankrupt nation about which the Senator from Utah and other Senators have told us.

(Copyright, 1926, by the New York Times Co.)

(By wireless to the New York Times)

ROME, April 13.—The full details of the grandiose plan for the beautification and development of Rome, which will be begun on "Rome's birthday," April 21, were made public to-day.

By the way, April 21 will be to-morrow, so that to-morrow, with money probably borrowed in this country, Mussolini will begin to rebuild Rome on the Augustan plan.

This work will be undertaken in obedience to the commands of Premier Mussolini, who in his speech at the inauguration of Senator Cremonesi as the first Governor of Rome, ordered him to make Rome again "as vast, well ordered, and powerful as in the days of Emperor Augustus."

Why should it not be? If they are going to have Emperor Mussolini over there shortly, and especially if Italy has America to back her, why should they not have an imperial city to go along with the emperor?

The State is advancing 90,000,000 lire to the city administration for meeting the first expenses of putting the plan into effect.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how much that is in American money?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is about two and a half million dollars. The situation is quite like that before us in connection with the public buildings bill. They begin by using a part of the appropriation, but they are going to use it all and more before they get through.

The plan worked out by the city administration contains much that is highly interesting from an archeological standpoint.

Why should not this bankrupt nation use money to delve into matters of archeological interest? Why should not America put this enormous tax of a billion and a half dollars on her people so that Mr. Mussolini may again build an imperial Roman city in which Mr. Mussolini may reside as emperor?

It includes the demolition of ramshackle houses and huts clustering around the Theater of Marcellus—

I am glad to learn that, although it takes away a good deal of the very great interest I had the other day in listening to the Senator from Pennsylvania when he said that the houses of the Italian people were not good. They are going to do away with those houses in the city of Rome which fail to measure up to the ideals of what houses ought to be in that city, as expressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

It includes the demolition of ramshackle houses and huts clustering round the Theater of Marcellus, the excavation of the Forum Oltorium and the Circus Maximus, and the restoration and beautification of the ancient Appian Way.

All Americans must be interested in that. I am sure the Debt Commission must be right, that the American people love to be taxed to the amount of a billion and a half dollars in order to help restore the ancient Appian Way and excavate for archeological purposes in the city of Rome.

The Theater of Marcellus, which was one of the finest buildings of imperial Rome, now rises in the midst of a slum district, inhabited by many poor families who have turned into unsanitary homes the boxes in which the emperors and Rome's patricians once used to sit. It is proposed to demolish all those unhealthy houses and cut a large open space around the theater, which will then remain revealed to view in its full splendor.

Why should we not tax the American people to bring about so desirable a result, to restore in its full ancient splendor this old piece of architecture?

The remains of the Forum Oltorium and the Circus Maximus are now completely buried, though plans for their excavation have been considered for years. The Circus Maximus is of especial interest, as it was imperial Rome's greatest arena and in the height of its glory was capable of seating 100,000 people. The excavation of the Circus Maximus is an event keenly looked forward to by all archeologists, who believe it will furnish much wonderful material.

And this is to be done by the nation that our commission says is bankrupt!

The Appian Way, the "Queen of Roads," will be rid of some of the modern buildings rising near it. Some of its monuments needing repair will be restored, and many trees will be planted along its borders.

NEW STREETS TO REVEAL PAST GLORIES

The city administration's plan also includes the cutting of two new thoroughfares, the first connecting Trajan's Forum with the Roman Forum and the second leading to the Colosseum.

I stop long enough to say that I have read many of Mussolini's speeches, and I do not wonder that he wants the Colosseum, which will hold 100,000 people, restored so that they may listen to the magic of his eloquence, especially after he becomes emperor again, due to American help.

Though both of these new streets have been decided upon for reasons of traffic, both have considerable archeological interest. The first will run right through the zone of the imperial forums and will expose to view the entire left flank of Capitol Hill, and the second will render the Colosseum, which now rises in the center of a saucerlike depression, visible from the center of the city.

The city administration also proposes to build an "artisans' quarter," with homes, workshops, and stores. This new quarter should rise at the foot of the Aventine Hill.

Finally, it is proposed to construct a new academy of fine arts, a new exhibition hall, and new school of architecture, and to complete the new university building.

Premier Mussolini, who by next week will have returned from Tripoli, will inaugurate most of these projects.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator think it is an extravagant program to appropriate about one-fourth as much for these improvements as we are spending for a single bridge across the Potomac River from the city of Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if Italy is in the dire condition reported by the commission and the committee; if it is so poor that it can not pay more than 28 cents on the dollar of its current debt; if it is so poor that it can borrow from America after the war is over some $800,000,000, and then seeks to get out of this enormous indebtedness by claiming that it is bankrupt and paying only 28 cents on the dollar, when all of this money has to come out of the pockets of the American taxpayer, I say that Italy has no business spending money for any such purpose.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Has the Senator forgotten those days in the panic of 1893 when every American city was confronted with the unemployment problem and the problem of feeding its own people and resorted to public works in order to do it?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but we did not repudiate our debts, nor did we declare our Government bankrupt, as the Italian Government has been declared bankrupt by the commission in reporting to this body.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There were a very great many thousands of Americans in that year, and every year since, who have done exactly what Italy is doing in this case—made a composition with their creditors to the utmost of their ability.

Mr. McKELLAR. I differ with the Senator about the "utmost of their ability," and if the Senator will just wait a minute I think he will change his mind about the question of ability.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator from New York in just a moment. I want to read from the New York Times again.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The New York Times is in favor of the settlement, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be; I do not know; but I imagine that the New York Times reports the facts whether it is in favor of the settlement or not; and the fact that the New York Times is in favor of this settlement indicates that the articles appearing on the other side of the question are more likely to be true, or, I will say, quite as likely to be true.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it indicates that those articles have no influence whatever on the editorial writer of the New York Times or the policy of the New York Times.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whatever else might be said, I am quite sure that neither the articles in the New York Times on the Italian debt nor any other argument in favor of the American taxpayer will have any influence on my good friend the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can have that opinion if he wants to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Almost the Senator from Tennessee persuades me to be for Mussolini. I have been inclined to be against him.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has been talking very strongly for him for some time. I do not know why the Senator has changed recently.

Mr. COPELAND. I have been talking for the Italian people, but pretty soon I am going to talk for Mussolini.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right; I hope the Senator will if he thinks that way. It is his duty to talk on this floor the way he believes. If he believes that Mussolini is the kind of man to control the Italian people, and he thinks he is deserving of a gift from the American taxpayers of a billion and a half dollars, it is his duty to be for Mussolini, and nobody can complain.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator has forgotten Coxey's army, which marched on Washington demanding that public works be undertaken. We have pending in the Senate at this time a bill asking that there be enacted into law a provision that these great improvements shall be made in a time of industrial depression. If Mr. Mussolini is wise enough to try to have improvements made at a time when the people are without work, I begin to think that he is considerable of a man, and I think from this time on I shall be inclined to be favorable to him. It is absurd, however, as I see it, for the Senator from Tennessee to undertake to defeat this Italian debt settlement because they are undertaking to do some public work in Italy at this time in order to give employment to those who are without it; and when they propose to do it by the destruction of the slums it seems to me that they are acting very wisely in the expenditure of the comparatively small sum which has been appropriated for this work in Italy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator admit that the New York Times is a reputable newspaper and that its articles are usually based on fact?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I will admit that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator admits that, then can I call his attention now to this "bankrupt" nation that he is speaking about; this nation that has come to us under the leadership of Mr. Mussolini asking for the cancellation of three out of four parts of its debt? I want to show the Senator from a reliable source—

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand that this is an editorial from the Times?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is not; it is an article from the Times.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, they are not responsible for all the news that is published.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this article states the fact, and if the Senator has any doubt about it I will make the statement on my own responsibility; I will take the responsibility for it.

Italy transformed to hive of industry.

Does that look like the bankruptcy that Senators have been talking about?

Mr. SMOOT. I hope it is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does that look like the poverty that the Senator from Pennsylvania almost made tears come to our eyes by talking about the other day?

PEOPLE APPEAR INSPIRED WITH A COMMON PURPOSE, THRIFTY AND COMFORTABLE—MUSCOLINI IS FOCAL POINT—PREMIER'S SPIRIT PERVADES POPULACE, CONFIDENT THEY ARE ON THRESHOLD OF ERA OF PROSPERITY

By John H. Finley

(Copyright, 1926, by the New York Times Co. By wireless to the New York Times)

ROME, April 16.—On reaching Rome this morning after a night's ride with my guide from Naples and after surrendering our tickets at the station gate a guard remarked smilingly: "This is the end of your journey; this is Rome." And to Rome, or at any rate to Italy, all roads seem to lead just now, as they did in the ancient days.

A European King came to Rome on the train on which I traveled comfortably from Naples. I saw another European King at Pompeii, who must pass through Rome to reach his northern kingdom again. I also traveled some distance toward Rome with two personages who attracted much more attention than royalty when they arrived in Italy. They were Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

The northern King might wander in Italy or Pompeii without attracting much more attention than the nobility got, according to Bolivar, on the night of the great disaster. The other European King might pass unnoticed among the guests in a Neapolitan hotel. But not so these artists from Los Angeles, whose films the Epicurean Latin poet, Lucretius, would have been delighted to see as confirming his theory of the transmission as films or images of objects and ideas.

NO LONGER A "HOSTEL OF WOE"

There is, however, one figure to whom the roads of all thought seem to lead. He is at the present moment on the way home from Africa, so I have not been able to see him, but one is aware that his personality pervades and dominates the Italy I so far have seen from the siren rocks off Capri to Corso and from Umbestide to Rome, from fishermen and peasants to scholars and financiers.

I saw Italy before the war, I saw Italy during the war, and I saw Italy shortly after the armistice. This first glimpse seven years later reveals a changed surface aspect. Dante could no longer inveigh against this land of his as "a hostel of woe" or as "a vessel without a pilot in a mighty storm."

If there is woe it is invisible and not even suggested in the faces of the people one sees in the streets, in the shops, or at work along the road. I have seen hardly a beggar, save the blind. Industry has seemingly become a passion.

There is no feverish haste, no sign of interference here. There is obvious thrift and absence of prodigality. Incidentally, in all the miles I have walked I have not seen enough litter to fill a bucket. All in all Italy seems—at first sight, at any rate—to be a transformed land, lifted into industry and orderliness by some common hope or purpose.

PEOPLE'S CONDITION BETTER

If that is the explanation, even though that hope or purpose has been stirred by a single individual, Italy has entered upon a new life that will survive the voice that animated it.

Some of us may prefer other ways of obtaining such objectives; others may believe they can not be permanently achieved except through what are usually, if not necessarily, slower processes of democracy. But no outside observer can doubt that those to whom proclamations are addressed in posters along the ancient ways of Rome to-day, in grateful recognition of Mussolini's escape from death or serious injury, are for the time being in better state.

Their confident hope is that they will find this improved condition is but a preface to a permanently better state to be attained through the self-discipline which they are practicing under leadership of their own creation—under the guidance of one who holds the reins of Justinian's refted bridle.

My heavens! How could a great newspaper man have written such a thing if he had read the report of this commission about the poverty of Rome and of Italy, about the bankrupt condition of Italy, about the people not having employment, and not having enough to eat?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator answers his own question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I might add to what the Senator says that that sounds like a real-estate boom for Rome—an advertisement for Rome.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator does not understand that these are the impressions of this newspaper correspondent on the day that he reached Rome. He writes this article evidently the day that he arrives there, and his attention has been largely on royalty and Douglas Fairbanks.

Mr. McKELLAR. And Mussolini; do not forget the Senator's friend Mussolini. I imagine that the Senator understands about how he would feel when he met Mussolini. The Senator has had that privilege, has he not? Has not the Senator from Pennsylvania met Premier Mussolini?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I was very much impressed by his earnestness.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it just a social visit that the Senator paid or was it on a matter of business?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad the Senator is so much interested in my affairs.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much interested.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to answer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood that another very distinguished gentleman from this country was at the same luncheon or dinner party with the Senator, and I was just wondering if that was correct. I understood that Mr. Stearns, of Massachusetts, and sometimes of the White House, was also at the luncheon with Mr. Mussolini. Is that correct?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator's understanding on that point is just like his understanding on these other things.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is mistaken, is it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There was no luncheon. I went to call on Mr. Mussolini at his request. I found him very earnest and very much troubled about the attitude of America toward him. He had been hearing the kind of talk that we have heard in the Senate recently. He wondered whether that spoke for all of America. I assured him that it most emphatically did not, and he seemed to be relieved.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure he must have been very greatly relieved after having heard that assurance from the Senator from Pennsylvania. Was I mistaken about the company in which the Senator called?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. Stearns went there, and he seemed to agree with me; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was there?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was Mr. Thomas Lamont, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., also there?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He was not.

Mr. McKELLAR. My informant is in error, then.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator really ought to check up on his informant, because most of his information—

Mr. McKELLAR. I am checking up right now. I am checking up by asking the Senator from Pennsylvania the facts, and he has given them to me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to give them; but may I suggest to the Senator—

Mr. McKELLAR. By the way, I am glad to find that my informant was two-thirds right, anyhow.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas in a moment. Mr. Stearns, from Massachusetts and from Washington, was there, and the Senator from Pennsylvania was there. May I ask if the Italian debt was discussed in any way?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Italian debt was not mentioned, if that will relieve the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know that I can say that I am relieved, but I am notified of what took place.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is astonished?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am rather astonished that Mr. Mussolini, who put up through his commissioners such a tale of poverty and woe, did not say something about it if his nation was in that condition. It is remarkable that he did not mention it to the Senator from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Washington and Boston when he was feeling so aggrieved that there were some people over in America who were trying to look after the interests of the American taxpayer.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; he was not at all aggrieved about that. He was aggrieved at the evidences of hostility from people who did not know what they were talking about.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only evidences of hostility are from Senators who are in their places here demanding that we shall not cancel three-fourths of the debt of Italy. Is there any ignorance about that? There is no doubt about that, is there?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I quite understand the Senator's position on this debt settlement. He wants Italy to pay more than she has the capacity to pay, and we are sorry that she can not.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; as I said before, I would be perfectly willing to yield up the entire debt to Italy if it would thereby influence those people to have an honest, just, and equitable government.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Who is going to judge that? Is the Senator going to set himself up as an umpire of the Government of Italy?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all; but we are umpires to the extent of $2,042,000,000, because their dictator has sent a commission here and is seeking to have canceled for his benefit a billion and a half dollars of American bonds, on which this Government is now paying interest at 4½ per cent. I say that makes it an interesting question and a proper question for America to consider.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator think it is any of our business to criticize the personnel of the Italian Government, or the form of government they have? Would it make any difference if Italy did not like President Coolidge? Should she therefore pay us less?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would make a very great difference. The Senator says it is none of our business. It is our business as to what kind of government they have in Russia, and I think the Senator takes that position about it, does he not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly, because in Russia property is not respected and life is not safe, and American citizens travel at their peril. That is not so in Italy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senator ever know of an American citizen being injured in Russia?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not remember the name of any American citizen injured in Russia; no.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator know that not two weeks ago American seamen were attacked in Italy?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not. I investigated that story.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would be very glad to have the Senator tell what his investigation showed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Through the State Department I got the truth of it. The story as published in the papers was that the Fascisti had made an attack on American seamen.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The fact of the matter was that one negro sailor got drunk, stood up and said insulting things to a crowd in a restaurant, having nothing whatever to do with the Fascisti at all, insulted a lot of people who were there, tore up in derision some Italian money that he had, and he was then arrested by the American naval patrol and taken back by his own shipmates to his own ship, and the Italian people who were present cheered the American officer. That is the truth of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know nothing about the facts. I suppose the Senator has investigated the matter, and I am perfectly content to accept the Senator's statement about it. I only know this: That that was not the report from people on the ground.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that is the truth, because we have had an investigation, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said. Not only did this sailor tear up the Italian money, but he expressed his derision in the way he did it and in what he said. I do not want to repeat what he said to go into the Record, but I say to the Senator that if he had been there, and if he had been an Italian citizen, he would have done worse than they did.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know about that, because I was not there.

Mr. BLEASE. That was a case of the "nigger in the woodpile."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he has considered the difference between capacity to pay and means of making payment. For example, the Senator has just read a long article, a very interesting one, about the reconstruction of Rome by Mussolini. That must be paid for, must it not, in Italian lire?

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless they can get the money from credulous Americans. I imagine that if this debt settlement is ratified, Italy's borrowing capacity in America will be greatly advantaged, and probably Mr. Mussolini can come over to New York and make other loans, and probably arrange his "city beautiful."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not indulging in this colloquy in opposition to what the Senator is saying, but I would like to bring out this one particular point at this place.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be very glad to have the Senator interrupt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do use paper money in Italy, and the coin of the realm is the lira, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do not pay those Italian workmen, who are engaging in that reconstruction work, in American dollars, do they?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; because they can take American dollars and buy innumerable lire for that purpose; and that is what they do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They can not use American dollars in that country in any form, can they?

Mr. McKELLAR. If there is any country in the world where the American dollar can not be used, I have never seen it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; but the Italian Government does print paper money which is paid to those workmen.

Mr. McKELLAR. They have what they call money, but I will say to the Senator—I know he has traveled abroad—that the American dollar, whether paper or gold or silver, is accepted anywhere in the world, and it is regarded as very much better than any other money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they do not use that ordinarily in exchange between the people of that country, in paying for reconstruction work, and an ordinary Italian laborer would never see an American dollar, would he?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not many of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Italian Government would not use American dollars to pay Italian workmen.

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being true, does not the Senator think there is a great difference between the Italian Government, as such, paying a debt to America, I mean where it has to pay gold or produce, commodities, or service—

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, debts are paid by balance of trade in international affairs, but, as we all know, the Republican Party has placed a tariff wall around America so high that it is impossible for Italy to sell us her goods.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The English Government has done the same thing, has it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course it has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, immediately after the war the English Government did that very thing, and now maintains a high tariff wall.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason the English Government has such credit, and the reason its medium of exchange has risen in value until it is equally as valuable as it was before the war, is that immediately after the war Great Britain came over to America and settled her debt on a reasonable basis, and thereby obtained a credit. That was very different. England did not claim to be bankrupt. England did not claim that she was unable to pay. She came over and made an agreement that was fair and just, or very largely so, and the result was that her own condition has been improved.

I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that, in my judgment, it is not fair for America to make fish of one and fowl of another. It is not right to make Great Britain pay 80 per cent, to make Belgium, who suffered more than any other nation by reason of the war, and who virtually got no territory, pay 55 cents on the dollar, and allow Italy to settle at 28 cents on the dollar, with all the prosperity these papers show she is enjoying, with her national wealth rising from $22,000,000,000 in 1912 to $35,000,000,000 in 1922, being now considerably more than that, and with her large accession of territory. I say it is not fair for this Government to make a settlement of 55 cents on the dollar with Belgium and 28 cents with Italy. Does the Senator think that is fair?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will answer that in just a moment. Let us go to that English situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the Senator answer it now while we are right on it. Does the Senator think that is fair?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not impressed—

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say he is not impressed that that is fair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not impressed with the argument that capacity to pay is the only measure by which we should scale down any of these foreign obligations. I am rather impressed with the idea that the means of making payment is the real test, and that that was the basis for the settlement made by the Dawes committee, acting under the Reparations Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. What distinction does the Senator make between capacity to pay and means of making payment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The distinction I draw is this, that Germany to-day has all the earmarks of a prosperous nation; that is to say, her industries are in excellent shape; she has 60,000,000 people willing and ready and able to do all sorts of work; she has her railroads in excellent condition; her transport system is in fine shape, and any American going to Germany would say that Germany had excellent capacity to pay.

But she can not pay unless her exports exceed her imports, and it was for that reason, instead of paying us dollars and paying the Allies dollars, the Dawes commission provided that we should go to Berlin and take our payment in gold marks if we could get them there, and extended the time of payment so that there is no time fixed within which Germany shall pay. I am impressed with the wisdom of that great experiment.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will excuse me a moment, I do not catch his distinction, for this reason, that Germany is paying to the extent of about $850,000,000 a year, as I recall the figures, to all of those to whom she has to pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No—

Mr. McKELLAR. Or she will within a very short time. She is paying a very large sum, and, in addition to that, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Germany does not make all she consumes. She has a deficit every year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I understand the plan under which Germany pays, it is that by the agreement of London, made in 1921, German reparations should be 132,000,000,000 gold marks. When the Dawes committee was appointed by the Reparations Commission, that sum was not fixed at all or the time within which it should be paid determined, but from a payment of 7,980,000,000 gold marks a year the amount was reduced by the Dawes commission to 2,500,000,000 marks a year. But she does not pay in American dollars; she does not pay in English pounds; or in French francs, or in Italian lire. She simply gets a credit in the bank at Berlin of so much per year, which will not be 2,500,000,000 marks until a five-year period has elapsed after the settlement. When those gold marks are deposited in the Reichsbank in Berlin for the credit of the Allies, they are deposited there as marks. Therefore if the Allies want payments of their debts on reparations, they must go to Berlin and get them in marks. How shall the exchange be made? It must be made by the Allies themselves; and it is up to them to find the means of taking payment. I am impressed with that method of making payment, and that is the difference between means of payment and capacity to pay.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why can not that same plan be followed in this case?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a very serious question.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that if that works well with Germany, and by it Germany has to pay between six and eight hundred million dollars a year—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Germany never has to pay that. If the Senator will pardon me, Germany will never have to pay more than $625,000,000 a year, and then only if her exchange warrants it. That is to say, if she has more exports than she has imports she will pay; otherwise, she will not pay.

Mr. McKELLAR. She is paying now, and Italy is not paying now. That is the difference between them, and that is one reason why Germany is getting on her feet and why Italy is boasting a dictator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Take the English situation. Last year she paid $22,000,000 on principal and $138,000,000 on interest. How was she able to pay it? She was able to pay it because she is a creditor nation to many nations, and she can go into the marts of the world and there purchase American dollars, because she has the balances of trade which enable her to do it; and when she scours the world and gets American dollars to pay, there is no chance for Italy to get them, because Italy has not an export trade in excess of her import trade.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator take the position that Italy ought not to pay any more than 28 per cent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Dawes plan is a most excellent plan.

Mr. McKELLAR. What I am trying to get at is the position of the Senator. I do not understand from what he has said just what he wants to do or would do. Does the Senator take the position that 28 per cent, as reported by the Debt Commission, is all that Italy ought to pay, or should she pay more?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think we ought to demand any more than determined by the commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not in favor of the settlement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I am, because those who have made it have my absolute confidence.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the only reason? It does not meet the approval of the Senator's own mind?

Mr. WILLIAMS. With all deference to the committee which went into the question—and it is with deference, because they know so much more about it than I could possibly know—it seems to me they should have distinguished between capacity to pay and means of payment.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the Senator does not approve of the settlement, but he is going to vote for it simply because he has confidence in those other gentlemen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we must make settlement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Am I right about it? Is the Senator for it simply because he has confidence in the commission, and his own mind does not approve of it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I would not quite say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator approve it or not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator knows as well as I do that foreign obligations are never paid, in any sense of the word, as we understand it.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are having a lot of them paid by Great Britain, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I imagine that he is reporting the facts about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are paid in the same sense that the credits in a bank are paid. For instance, a bank is the biggest debtor we have. All deposits in the bank are subject to payment on demand; yet if we made demand on the bank for payment, we would break the bank immediately. What happens to the bank with its great liabilities—that is, its deposits? The Senator draws a check on the bank and gives it to me. I deposit it in the bank, and the bank maintains its liabilities. The Pennsylvania Railroad may have bonds running for 999 years. That is a bond in perpetuity. It never will be paid. It pays interest, to be sure; but if we want to get rid of a thousand-dollar bond of the Pennsylvania Railroad which runs for such a length of time, we simply sell the bond and transfer the right to collect the interest to some other person. So it is with foreign obligations.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's explanation of the business done by foreign nations and the business done by railroads is all very well, but I am wondering what is the net result in the Senator's own mind? I want to ask the Senator so we will see where he stands. Does the Senator approve of the debt settlement as made by our Debt Commission?

Mr. WILLIAMS. With all respect to the Senator from Tennessee, I do not think either he or I are sufficiently expert on a question of this kind to determine whether the funding of the debt in this case is a sound and wise thing. Therefore, I am accepting the judgment of those who made the settlement.

Mr. McKELLAR. So the Senator from Missouri is going to accept the judgment of other people rather than to give his own judgment the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that we must fund the debt. We must fix payments and times for payment. I should like to see the entire interallied debt funded in much the same way as the Dawes commission has funded or fixed the German debt for payment.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the Senator's best judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I would like to see done.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator is going to waive that and vote for the settlement as proposed here by the Debt Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Their judgment, I think, is better than any that I have or any that the Senator from Tennessee has.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is going to accept their judgment although he does not agree with it entirely?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now I understand the position of the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. What was the wisdom in having the debt settlement brought back to Congress at all?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever, if all Senators take the same position that the junior Senator from Missouri takes, which is, while it does not meet his approval, he is going to accept it because the commission has reported it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I may answer that question further, I would say that if we do not do this I would scarcely know what we should do, and I have not heard any suggestion from the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it ought to be referred back to the committee, and that the committee ought to examine into all the facts. There is a wide discrepancy between the facts as presented by the Debt Commission and the facts found in the leading publications of the country. The statement of the national wealth of Italy differs in the two reports more than 50 per cent, one being $22,000,000,000 and the other $35,000,000,000. There is a great doubt about how much Italy received as reparations in the war in the way of territory. None of that matter has been presented. It seems to me that with all this doubt and uncertainty the matter should be referred back to the committee, and even the junior Senator from Missouri does not give his approval, according to the argument he has made, but feels compelled to accept the settlement of the Debt Commission. If all other Senators are going to give up their individual views just in order to effect some sort of settlement, I do not believe that the interests of the taxpayers of America are being considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point to my question, if the Senator pleases, was to inquire whether he had drawn any distinction in his own mind between what we call capacity to pay and what we call means of making payment. That was the purpose of my question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I understand.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question if the Senator from Tennessee will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator said the debt can be funded. Why should it be funded when the Dawes plan was not a funding plan?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Dawes plan is a working plan and provides for the payment of 2,500,000 gold marks a year. I call that a funding plan, a plan under which the debt shall be paid.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not agree with the Senator that it is a funding plan. Otherwise the Italian debt settlement is not a funding plan, because in the case of Germany the plan has no termination of the debt period, and in the case of Italy there is a termination of the debt period, two entirely different kinds of settlement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I admit they are two different types of settlement, and there is no doubt about it, but when I refer to a funding plan I mean agreeing upon the amount of the debt and agreeing upon the terms and times and amounts of payment.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator a question? The Italian Government owes us $2,042,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. During the 62 years they will pay us 1.8 per cent interest, while we are now paying for that same money 4¼ per cent interest. At the end of that period, if the United States goes on just as it is, we will still owe the $2,042,000,000 and Italy will have paid her principal and interest in full. Does that meet with the approval of the Senator?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have been paying interest on this debt to the holders of the American bonds all the time up to the present, and we will lose not only on the British settlement but on all the other settlements. For example, in the reparations agreement made with Germany, the French Government does not receive enough money per annum—something like $300,000,000—to pay the interest on her reconstruction bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. The immediate effect of the settlement is that while the American Government is now paying interest on the Italian loan of something like $86,000,000 a year, Italy will pay for the first five years only $5,000,000, so that the American Government will pay $81,000,000 more in interest than she receives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Italy will pay if she can find the $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does it not occur to the Senator from Tennessee that the fault in this transaction lies not in the action of the Debt Commission in taking all they can get, but lies with those officials of the American Government who advanced so much money to a debtor with poor credit?

Mr. McKELLAR. Was not the Senator in favor of that loan?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; I was in favor of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. How can the Senator complain of what the officials did who then loaned the money if the Senator says he was in favor of it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The distinction is very simple. The trouble arose when the loan was made. I was in favor of making it. Do not let us have any doubt about that. But the Senator fails to realize that that was the origin of the trouble, and not the debt settlement which takes all we can get. If the Senator is going to find fault with anything, he ought to find fault with the making of the loan. That is where the trouble comes from.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator does not find any fault with the making of the loan?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I do not; nor with the settlement of it, but the Senator from Tennessee is finding fault, and I say to the Senator that he ought to find fault where the fault belongs, if there was any fault.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator be in favor of cancellation?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; I would not. I am in favor of taking all they have the capacity to pay, and that is what we are getting.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is our duty to look after the interests of the American taxpayer rather than the interests of the Italian taxpayer.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly the position I take.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear it, but the report of the Senator from Utah does not carry out that idea at all.

Mr. SMOOT. According to my judgment it does, because, as I said before, I think we are getting every dollar we can get. What I had intended to say to the Senator was that we advanced to the European countries during the war over $10,000,000,000. We had only $4,000,000,000 in all America at that time. We could not advance all that in gold. There was not any of it advanced in gold. It was all advanced in goods and profits ranging from 50 to 75 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that was very much more acceptable to them than the gold. They could not have gotten along without the supplies.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I was going to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know it is not, but I just wanted to call the attention of the Senator to it in passing.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah knew that long before, and I am not criticizing in any way, shape, or form the fact that the goods were sold. Italy is making settlement here, and it is on the gold basis. She promises to pay in gold. She has to provide from some source or other credit payments to the United States of the amount that she has to pay annually, just the same as England or any other country does.

Mr. McKELLAR. She pays in credits.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is not paid in credits, then she has to get the gold or else she can not pay. I was going to say something further, but I believe I had better not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I thank the Senator, but I think perhaps there is no necessity for going further than I have in relation to the payments.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a question of whether we want to stand by the American taxpayers who are paying these enormous amounts of interest, or whether we want to stand by Italy and her dictator. That is the only question in this case. We can not be accused of standing by the Italian people, because there is no one speaking for the Italian people in that sense of the word. My belief is that under the terms of the agreement we are apt to foment war in Italy or in Europe. I should be very glad to yield to almost any situation that would prevent that, but when it is perfectly apparent that what we are doing is to put Italy in a position to make war on her neighbors, and when we know that Greece and Turkey and other surrounding countries are enlarging their armaments now for the purpose of defense against Italy and her dictator, it does seem to me that we ought to pause before we make this settlement, which will put Italy's dictator in a position where he can go to war if he wants to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator voted for the League of Nations and our entry into it, did he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I certainly did.

Mr. SMOOT. And that was to stop all future wars.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think if we had gone into it, it would have stopped wars, but the Senator was able to get enough other Senators to agree with him to prevent the United States going into it, and therefore retarded that great enterprise in favor of peace.

Mr. SMOOT. I now thank God that America did not go in.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator does.

Mr. SMOOT. And I am very proud of the vote that I cast to keep her out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am just as proud of the vote that I cast for peace under those circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will live long enough to regret the vote that he cast.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is very much excited over the American taxpayer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is the duty of all Senators to be so.

Mr. COPELAND. I wonder what the American taxpayer will say if we in cold blood reject the best debt settlement with Italy which can be presented to us? I wonder what the Senator from Tennessee will say to the American taxpayers, and especially those in the South, when they find out, because of the strained relations existing between the two countries as a result of the rejection of the settlement, that Italy no longer buys from us $91,000,000 worth of cotton, $3,000,000 worth of tobacco, a million dollars' worth of southern pine, $26,000,000 worth of wheat, and $18,000,000 worth of copper, to say nothing of other commodities?

Mr. McKELLAR. There will be no trouble about that; they will buy those products in just as large quantities as before. Probably if they can prevent anarchy in their own country, they will largely increase their purchases in America; but if we are going to give to this Italian dictator the money to make war and he plunges his country into war as now seems probable—his neighbors are exceedingly excited about it—when Italy goes to war, of course, she can no longer buy from the Southern States or from any of the other States in this country. To that extent will our whole country be injured. I am unwilling, Mr. President, by my vote to contribute to the war chest of this Italian dictator.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President—

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I think I shall go down in history as the greatest yielder in the United States. I yield to my friend from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota.

STRIKE CONDITIONS ON WESTERN MARYLAND RAILROAD

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, there has been brought to my attention an amazing condition of affairs on the Western Maryland Railroad and in the great communities along the lines of that road which I deem it my duty to put before the Senate as urgently needing public investigation.

The Western Maryland is a coal-carrying line, of 804 miles of track, which winds out of Baltimore, through Hagerstown, Cumberland, and Elkins, to various points in the coal fields. It is characterized by steep grades and numerous tunnels, and its operation requires the highest degree of training and familiarity with its characteristics on the part of its transportation employees.

Since October 15 a strike has been in progress on the Western Maryland, called by the Brotherhoods of Engineers and Firemen at the end of two years of attempted negotiations and the refusal of arbitration by the company. The road is known as a Rockefeller road, hauling Rockefeller coal, and John D. Rockefeller, jr., has admitted his financial responsibility in it and in the coal mines supplying the road with traffic.

This is no ordinary strike. There is something sinister in its circumstances. It comes at the very period when there is a concerted effort to attain the means of peace on the railroads. Congress is considering legislation designed to write into the law of the land a procedure the principal features of which are joint negotiation, mediation, and free arbitration. These are the very features which some one has seen fit to destroy on the Western Maryland.

Some one unseen is trying to turn back the hands of the clock. At this hour the country is hoping that Congress will give legal effect on a nation-wide scale to industrial processes evolved through many years by the joint experience of responsible established organizations of employees and associations of employers. An important railroad, backed by the money of one of the hugest financial interests in the land, mysteriously attempts to establish the opposite of what Congress would ever dream of trying to put into legislation.

That is the national aspect. But more urgent in point of time is the plight of the cities and farms served, or supposed to be served, by the Western Maryland. There the spectacle is truly curious.

For the moment let the strikers be disregarded, well known though their organizations are nationally and well regarded as I found the individual men to be in their own cities. The mayors and other public officials of these communities, their chambers of commerce, their business associations, bankers and farmers, the newspapers, the churches, and the ministerial associations—the whole community, in short—are a unit in attempting to do something. They have been trying to see Mr. Rockefeller. They have been trying to ask Mr. Rockefeller some questions. Their questions are unanswered. Mr. Rockefeller prefers not to see them.

They have urgent reason for this thing which they attempt. Their communities are being demoralized. Their commercial life is dislocated. They are suffering loss and property damage. They have been losing for five months, and they see no end to it. They encounter personal danger. Lives have been lost in wrecks on this road during this strike.

Every path that they take to get their people out of this slough leads to one man. That man, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., is not on the doorstep, welcoming them. Hundreds of letters have been sent to him, but they have been answered only in evasive language through subordinates.

The sole response from Mr. Rockefeller has been a plea, in a letter to the mayor of Cumberland, that he is "only a minority stockholder."

Fortunately, in a recent period, Mr. Rockefeller has cleared up, so far as words go, his position about the "moral responsibility of stockholders." He used those words and accepted the responsibility in writing in the autumn of 1922 during a long strike in the Somerset, Pa., mines of the Consolidated Coal Co. He admitted his financial responsibility there, but, as it seemed he only owned 40 per cent of the stock, he again pleaded that he was in a minority. Weeks of pressure from public-spirited bodies, which were not satisfied by such a plea, resulted in Mr. Rockefeller's declaration:

I have not hesitated to accept my personal responsibility or to record my own position—and he added that the policy of his coal operators was—both unwise and unjust.

The churches and other organizations receiving that declaration rejoiced in the expectation and the private understanding that Mr. Rockefeller was about to convert his words into deeds. There were delays; public attention, after many months, flagged; and in the end nothing was done. After a strike lasting a year and a half, his miners had to yield to the Rockefeller system. Mr. Rockefeller escaped, as some of the press put it, with a moral alibi.

An investigation by a committee of the Senate of the Western Maryland situation should result in something more than a "moral alibi." This body is powerful enough at least to reveal the facts, to make the public aware of what is actually going on, and to tear away the mask from "moral alibis." Public opinion when enlightened will do the rest. If the system this financial interest is injecting into the railroads is clearly exposed, the Senate will have rendered a great public service.

The history of the Western Maryland is a surprising story of industrial autocracy and corporate lawlessness.

I have gone over the record with some care, and I think I can assure the Senate that if this investigation is ordered, trustworthy witnesses will develop facts which will substantiate this charge.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hold no brief for Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., and I think in all matters relating to this strike and the chief matters involved in the question being discussed by the Senator that I am in full accord with him. However, I would not feel that I was true to my manhood if I did not say to the Senator that I regard Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., as an exceptional man among the rich men of the country. If John D. Rockefeller, jr., had the power and at the same time had the knowledge and the conviction that conditions exist on the Western Maryland Railroad, such as the Senator from Minnesota is describing, I believe he would exert that power to bring about a correction. I think that he is one outstanding man among the wealthy men of this country. He is one man who has a Christian outlook and who has those high moral convictions which would lead him to do right and to put his company in the way of doing right if he had the power to control it.

I have spoken in this way out of the heart, Mr. President, because I believe that Mr. Rockefeller is one of the noblest among the men of great wealth of this country.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is not under the impression that I had anything to say derogatory to the personal character of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr.

I have not any personal acquaintance with Mr. Rockefeller. I am not here discussing his character. I am here to state to the Senate some facts regarding the situation on the Western Maryland Railroad, of which I am told he owns 20 or 25 per cent of the stock, and a railroad whose main source of income comes from a large group of coal mines of which he is, if not the sole, at least the majority, stockholder, as I am informed. While Congress is trying to initiate in the railroad industry a relationship between employer and employee, the very opposite of what Congress is trying to write into law is taking place on this road, and people have called this matter to the attention of Mr. Rockefeller. They have been unable to get him to do anything.

I do not know how many of the facts have been presented to him. I think this matter should be looked into by the Senate of the United States for the purpose of giving us some light upon what is going on in the transportation industry to-day, in order that it may help us to pass some legislation that may possibly prevent this condition arising in the country again.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator knows that I am in the fullest harmony with most of the views he has expressed; but he has said that Mr. Rockefeller is a minority holder of the stock of the Western Maryland. I think the Senator said he holds 25 per cent of the stock.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. I am so informed.

Mr. COPELAND. A 25 per cent minority stockholder can not control the actions of a board of directors, as the Senator well knows. If the Senator will yield to me for just a moment further—

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. On a few occasions I have myself indirectly called the attention of Mr. Rockefeller to certain abuses which I felt were being exercised by corporations in which he is interested; and as soon as the knowledge of these conditions came to him he was the very first one to step forward to see that correction was made.

I am not defending the board of directors of the Western Maryland Railroad. I am not defending any abuses there. My sympathies would naturally be with the under dog, with the strikers. My sole purpose in rising is to make clear to the Senator and to the Senate that Mr. Rockefeller is not the sort of man the country might think he is if the statement of the Senator should go unchallenged.

This matter having been called to my attention as it has been now for the first time, I am going to make it my business to see that what I know about it is conveyed to Mr. Rockefeller. If the conditions are as stated by the Senator, I think that when Mr. Rockefeller knows them, and comes to realize that those conditions do exist, he will exert every power he has to correct them. But, as a minority stockholder, he may not be able to go as far as he would like.

It is only in that spirit, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, that I rise; not to criticize any views that he holds regarding the general situation, because I am in sympathy with them, but, since he has chosen to cull out and to mention one person, simply to make this defense of the character of the man because of what I know of his real worth.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I think it is quite generally considered that anyone who owns from 15 to 25 per cent of the stock of any railroad is able to control the road. I am sure that the Senator from New York, who said he wanted to challenge the statements I am making, does not want to challenge the facts I have stated. I am very glad that he has decided to acquaint Mr. Rockefeller with the facts. If the Senator from New York will listen patiently to a long list of facts that I shall give him, he will have some facts to give to Mr. Rockefeller; and if he will send them to him, and if the Senator from New York is as successful in getting Mr. Rockefeller to move in this case as he seems to have been in the past, he will be rendering the country a great service, and I think he will be rendering Mr. Rockefeller a great service.

But I did not rise to discuss the personality or the character of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr. I know nothing about it. I assume it to be what the Senator from New York says it is. I rose only to discuss some facts concerning this strike. When I am through, if the Senator from New York cares to discuss the character of Mr. Rockefeller, I shall be very glad to listen to him.

Some time ago, Mr. President, I had the pleasure of being invited by the citizens of Hagerstown to come and address a meeting that was called in order to protest against the actions of the management of this road. A farmer presided at this meeting. He is at the head of an organization of a thousand farmers. This man brought a message of comfort to the people of Hagerstown and the men who have gone out on strike on this road.

Clergymen, business men, bankers, and people of all walks of life sat on the platform and in the audience. The meeting was opened and closed with prayer for the success of the workers in their struggle.

Cumberland, Elkins, and other cities and towns along the line are equally aroused. Mayors, city councilmen, and other public officials, chambers of commerce, merchants' organizations, ministerial associations, and hundreds of individuals have attended strikers' meetings, have held demonstrations of their own, have passed resolutions, and written letters of protest to the management of the road, to the stockholders, and all other agencies which could influence the situation.

Many of these elements are usually found on the side of the employer and against the workers in any industrial dispute. The circumstances which would induce such a united and determined stand in support of a strike must be most unusual. A recital of the events culminating in the strike demonstrates them to be so.

During the entire controversy the management has made an unbroken record of evasion, coercion, and perfidy, ending in acts directly designed to force the strike. In contrast to this, the employees and their representatives have displayed the utmost patience and forbearance and have vainly exhausted every avenue of peaceful settlement.

In 1921 the railroad employees of the entire country suffered a drastic reduction in pay. The transportation employees made no attempt until 1923 to secure any restoration, in spite of the fact that the cost of living was increasing and that many other classes had secured raises.

In 1923 a partial restoration of the previous wages was asked. A new scale, known as the New York Central settlement, because first granted by that system, was established on every class 1 railroad in the United States with the sole exception of the Western Maryland. From that time until October 15, 1925, the engine-service employees of the Western Maryland patiently endeavored to induce the management to pay the same rates of wages which had been granted, without a hint of trouble, by every other management in the country.

Instead of being met in an open and aboveboard manner, they were confronted with a series of counter-demands, subterfuges, and evasions, which befogged the issue and made a settlement impossible.

Every compromise short of complete surrender was offered the management. When the impossibility of reaching any decision became apparent, the men offered arbitration before any tribunal not obviously biased. These offers were curtly refused. The response of Maxwell C. Byers, president of the road, to one carefully prepared and detailed plan of arbitration is typical of his entire attitude. He said:

Your proposition is hereby rejected.

That was all.

The efforts of the Department of Labor, through its conciliation service, were equally unsuccessful. I desire to state that this department has rendered great service in many instances.

Even when the men discovered that the management, while pretending to negotiate, was hiring strike breakers, they continued to strive for a peaceful solution. They displayed an almost unbelievable degree of forbearance, even to the extent of obeying the orders of the management that they take on their engines these strike breakers, brought there to take their own jobs, and train them in the characteristics of the road.

Finding that even this effrontery and double dealing did not drive the men into a strike, Mr. Byers, president of the road, deliberately forced the issue. He published a bulletin, since notorious as "Circular 54," in which he demanded that the men sign an individual "yellow-dog" contract submitting to wages and rules established by himself and completely at variance with the agreement still in force between himself and the engine-service brotherhoods.

The men were called in, without opportunity for consultation among themselves, and told to sign or be dismissed. When upward of 50 of them had refused and had been summarily discharged, the remainder, having no choice between surrender and discharge, left the service practically to the last man. In a word, this is not a strike; it is a lockout, deliberately planned and forced by Mr. Byers.

The road was immediately manned with the off-scourings and riff-raff of the railroad world. It should be understood that the two organizations concerned in this strike—the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen—have, in over half a century of scrupulous regard for contracts and of increasingly amicable relations with railroad managements, so completely occupied the field that any man with any degree of locomotive experience who is willing to scab is a person whom either the management, the brotherhoods, or both, do not want.

A considerable number of the men hired by Mr. Byers were what are known as "Rule G's," or men discharged for the use of intoxicating liquor. These men, whom Mr. Byers had in many cases himself discharged as being unfit, were put in charge of the giant engines of this mountain railroad.

A partial but well-authenticated summary of their records shows that 2 have been tried or convicted for murder, 2 have been in jail for rape, 12 others have criminal or court records, 18 have been previously dismissed for drunkenness, and 6 have been discharged for wrecks prior to the strike or on other roads. Over 60 of those employed at one terminal alone, that of Hagerstown, are known to be of bad records, either as lawbreakers or because of demonstrated incompetency.

The detailed individual records of these men are available, and I will be glad to discuss them further at some other time, but will give that of one as a typical example. On one of his first trips the train got away from this particular strikebreaker and was only saved from wreck by the efforts of the brakemen, who set up hand brakes at the risk of their lives. Instead of censuring this engineer, however, the management attempted to divert criticism from him by throwing the blame on the train crew, and for this purpose discharged one of them who had risked his life in defense of the company's property.

A short time afterwards, just one month to a day from the beginning of the strike, this strikebreaking engineer was the cause of the worst wreck in the history of the road. A train of 63 cars got beyond control of this incompetent, ran down a mountain side, and finally piled up in a heap, demolishing the entire train and the engine and tearing up about a mile of main line. Some conception of the damage may be gained by the fact that three wrecking crews worked night and day for 36 hours to clear the debris and to open the main line sufficiently to allow trains to creep through. The cost of this one wreck, estimated at about $500,000, would have paid the small increases asked by the old employees for many years.

In this case, as in the previous one, attempts were made to shift the blame to the train crew and, by mysterious hints, on the strikers. However, the Interstate Commerce Commission, after a thorough investigation, found that the accident was caused by the failure of the engineer to display the most rudimentary knowledge of the use of air brakes. Since then two employees have been killed while working with engines run by this man, and he has been the cause of a number of minor accidents. His latest-known performance was to throw a bolt through the window of a Baltimore & Ohio engine in an attempt to murder a striking fireman who had hired out on the Baltimore & Ohio.

Another example of the company's brutality was the attempt to force their pensioned engineers to become scabs. These veteran employees, all over 65 years of age, who had spent a lifetime in the service of the company, and earned by that faithful service a pittance on which to live in their declining years, were ordered to take out engines. They refused almost unanimously, and their pensions were immediately stopped. They are now being cared for by the Brotherhoods. Many of them have no other means of existence except these allowances.

The records of killed and injured since the strike began is a ghastly one. A partial list of casualties shows that 8 have been killed and 36 injured.

That there is little promise of any improvement is proven by the fact that two men were killed and another injured just a few days ago on one train while going about 20 miles. A list of the wrecks and accidents, only partially complete, shows they have been of more than daily occurrence. The deplorable conditions are becoming so generally known that passenger travel, as shown by the reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission, has dwindled away to a fraction of the former volume.

The brakemen and conductors who are still at work are terrorized by the situation. Time and again they have protested to the management against the discomforts and hazards to which they are being subjected, but in vain. So far from attempting to remedy conditions, the management has displayed the same brutality toward them that it has toward the engine-service employees. About 26 of the trainmen have been discharged for refusal to perform part of the incompetent strike breakers' work and for other causes growing out of the strike.

I have a copy of a letter picked up on the streets of Manchester, Ga., in which the Western Maryland is soliciting the services of nonunion trainmen, in evident preparation for trouble with its conductors and trainmen. Not only is this trouble not the last that the management contemplates, but it is only one of a long series.

The shopmen's strike, which began in July, 1922, on other roads, broke out in March on the Western Maryland. It was induced by a deliberate breach of contract on the part of the management. With the object of evading the wages and rules established by an agreement between the shop-craft unions and the management, the company chose three of its petty officials and a contracting company, of which no one had ever heard up to that time, and constituted them dummy contractors. It then announced that its shops had been shut down and its employees discharged. The day following this announcement a bulletin was posted, in the name of these fake contractors, directing all those who wished to continue at their former positions to apply to these concerns. It was then discovered that the wages and working rules had been slashed and mutilated until little remained of the conditions established by a signed mutual agreement.

The men took the company at its word, that the shops were shut down and their positions abolished, and refused to accept employment under the dummy contractors. A long, bitter, and expensive struggle began, in which the old employees were, to a great extent, driven away from their homes to seek other employment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I happen to know a lot about that shop-crafts' strike. Our situation in New York City at that time demanded that we should have a free supply of coal, which we could not get by reason of the strike. On this account I know all about it, and my sympathies were with the strikers. On some roads they certainly were outrageously treated. They were practically shut out from the shops when they would have been glad to go back. They reached the point where they were eating the shingles off their houses, so to speak, mortgaging their homes in order that they might live, and were anxious to go back to work. This privilege was denied them. At that time there was such a breakdown on the locomotives on some of the roads that they could not carry the freight. In our section of the country we were denied coal because of that.

I speak of this matter now in order that the Senator may realize that what I said a little while ago had no reference at all to my sympathies as regards the main proposition. So far as this particular matter to which the Senator has referred is concerned, I had first-hand knowledge, because of my official position, and tried the very best I could to bring about an adjustment between the strikers and the operators of the railroads.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am particularly calling the attention of the Senator to the Western Maryland Railroad in that connection. The strike came in July on the other roads, but it came in March on the Western Maryland. I remember the state of affairs to which the Senator from New York has referred. The Senator has always shown a disposition to sympathize with men and women who toil. I want to call to the Senator's attention the outstanding fact connected with that strike, and with the employment of labor on the railroads throughout the United States. I want to point that out in contrast with the attitude taken by the president of this road, the Western Maryland, to the treatment of his employees.

Take, for instance, Dan Willard, of the Baltimore & Ohio. Dan Willard was the first man, at least to my knowledge, to begin the operation of a policy of sympathetic cooperation with the employees of the great railroads. He took charge of the Baltimore & Ohio at a time when its finances were in very poor condition. The whole system was in bad condition. He settled the strike on that road independent of the executive association program, and restored the feeling of cooperation and good fellowship that has always prevailed on the Baltimore & Ohio. I hope that when the Congress passes this so-called railroad labor bill which is coming over here, the effect of it will be to inaugurate a policy on all of the railroads in the United States that is now in vogue on the Baltimore & Ohio. There is a complete absence of this hard-boiled, tyrannical, Mussolini treatment of employees on the Baltimore & Ohio that we find on some of the other railroads, and it is reflected in increasing earnings of the Baltimore & Ohio. It is reflected in the continued betterment of the rolling stock, it is reflected in continued building up of the system, and in that wonderful spirit of cooperation and push and loyalty to Dan Willard that is found among the employees of the Baltimore & Ohio. I have personal knowledge of this, because I have talked to the employees along the line. I have talked to employees on other roads. I find that employees of railroads all over the country love and respect Dan Willard because of his honest and square dealing with the men employed on his road. The history of Dan Willard's work on the Baltimore & Ohio shows that it is not necessary to the financial success of a road that its management shall deal with the men as though they are not human beings.

The business men of Hagerstown, Cumberland, Elkins, and other places will testify that the prosperity and growth of these cities have been permanently injured by the strike on the Western Maryland.

There are 131 suits now pending in the Towson court, just outside of Baltimore, growing out of this deliberate fraud and breach of contract by the company. Testimony introduced at the preliminary hearing on these suits shows that the management intrusted about $4,000,000 of repair and maintenance work, on a cost-plus contract, to a company from which it required no bond and whose officers were unknown to the management.

That the management was fully aware of the state of public feeling against it, even before the present strike began, and that it persisted in its course in ruthless disregard of this disapproval is shown by a most extraordinary affidavit filed in the Allegany County Courthouse in relation to these pending suits of the former shop employees. In this document President Byers pleads for a change of venue on the ground that the general public was so hostile to the road as to endanger the chances of a fair trial in this court or in any other along the line of the road.

Not only have the workers been denied the wages paid on every other class I railroad in the United States, and, in addition, been subjected to a policy of coercion and repression, but they have actually been robbed of their meager savings by officials of this Rockefeller company through stock-jobbing schemes.

It is a shocking story. I shall not attempt to relate it now. Witnesses are ready to tell it to a Senate committee. It is sufficient to say at the moment that the men responsible are holding high positions on the Western Maryland and that they are largely responsible for the industrial policy pursued by President Byers.

During the years of turmoil resulting from the labor policies of the Western Maryland the communities have suffered severely. The railroad pay roll constituted a considerable portion of the income of these cities and the old employees of the company were substantial, church-going, property-holding citizens.

In the long fight between the company and the shopmen citizens not directly engaged in transportation made many attempts to mediate between Mr. Byers and his former employees, only to be repulsed.

In the controversy between the engine service workers and the company they hoped to the last that the skill of these men and their representatives in securing peaceful settlements would prevent conflict. When it came, as a result of the aggressions of President Byers, they flamed into united and vigorous action of protest.

They even refused to rent property to the strike breakers or to the company for housing them. A canvass of the real-estate holding of the strikers was made in Cumberland, and the business men offered to underwrite any maturing obligations against these properties. They offered material and moral support to the strikers in every possible manner.

Numbers of them appealed to President Byers, whose response was a statement that he intended to pay no attention to appeals from patrons of the road.

Exasperated by this insult, they then turned to the holder of the largest individual block of the stock, John D. Rockefeller, jr., asking that he intervene to end the intolerable situation.

After a long delay, and when these demonstrations had become too pronounced to be longer ignored, Mr. Rockefeller replied, through a letter to Dr. Thomas Koon, mayor of Cumberland, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, March 12, 1926.

HON. THOMAS W. KOON, M. D.,

Mayor, Cumberland, Md.

MY DEAR SIR: Returning from the South, I find your letter of February 8, together with letters from various others, as well as many newspaper comments, in regard to certain labor difficulties on the Western Maryland Railroad. You speak of the road as one of the Rockefeller holdings, basing this characterization doubtless upon the assumption that our family and the various other funds established by my father jointly own a majority of the stock of this company. I am glad, therefore, to have this opportunity to correct a misapprehension, apparently widespread, that I can settle the strike.

The facts are that the combined holdings of our family, together with those of the funds, which this stock may have been given, represents considerably less than 25 per cent of the stock of this company. I am not a director of the company. Only 2 of the 12 directors can be regarded in any sense representatives of our interests. The management of this company is entirely in the hands of the board of directors and, no matter what my personal views may be, I don't control the situation.

Greatly regretting the conditions of which you write, which I hope may be but temporary, and appreciating the courtesy of your letter, I am,

Very truly,
JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

Doctor Koon took this reply, as did all those who had joined with him, as simply an evasion of responsibility. He immediately wrote to Mr. Rockefeller asking, in the most courteous and conciliatory language, for a personal interview.

Mr. Rockefeller's reply to this authorized spokesman of a large community was a refusal to meet him on the ground that no good would be attained.

Mr. Rockefeller has made a number of public utterances in which he has shed great credit on himself for broad and enlightened industrial policies. He has said much about the responsibilities of investors and stockholders. He has manifested such anxiety that his opinions be known that he has published a book entitled "Personal Relations in Industry."

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record without reading certain extracts from the book to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The extracts are as follows:

(Abstracts from the Book of John D. Rockefeller on Personal Relations in Industry)

There are those that believe that legislation is the cure-all for every political, social, and industrial ill. Much can be done by legislation to prevent injustice and encourage right tendencies, but legislation of itself will never solve the industrial problem. Its solution can be brought about only by the introduction of a new spirit into relationship between the parties on industry—the spirit of cooperation and brotherhood. It is this theme, cooperation in industry, that I desire to develop.

The development of industry on a large scale brought the cooperation into being, a natural outgrowth of which has been the further development of organized labor in its various forms. The right of men to associate themselves together for their mutual advancement is incontestable.

The labor union, among its other achievements, has undoubtedly forced public attention upon wrongs which employers of to-day would blush to practice. But employers as well as workers are more and more appreciating the human equation and realizing that mutual respect and fairness produce larger and better results than suspicion and selfishness.

The acts of bodies of men in their relations with other men should always be illuminated by publicity, for when the people see clearly what the facts are they will, in the long run, encourage what is good and condemn what is selfish.

Resolution introduced by Mr. Rockefeller at National Industrial Conference, held at Washington, D. C., October 16, 1919

Whereas the common ground of agreement and action with regard to the future conduct of industry with the development of a new relationship between capital and labor which the President sought in calling this conference can only be discovered as we approach the problem in the spirit of justice, brotherhood, and of willingness to put one's self in the other man's place, the coming of which means the substitution of confidence for distrust, of good will for enmity, of cooperation for antagonism; and

Whereas this spirit can be developed only by the resumption of personal relations between employer and employee or the nearest possible approach thereto; and

Whereas some form of representation in industry is essential in order to make personal relations possible under modern industrial conditions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this conference recognize and approve the principle of representation in industry under which the employees shall have an effective voice in determining their terms of employment and their working and living conditions; and be it further

Resolved, That any form of representation to be adequate must include—

1. Ample provisions whereby the stockholders and the employees through their respective representatives shall give current consideration to matters of common interest such as terms of employment and working and living conditions.

2. Any such further provisions, if any, as may be necessary to insure the prompt uncovering of grievances, real or alleged, and their speedy adjustment.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER INDUSTRIAL CREED
(Personal relations in industry)

If the points which I have endeavored to make are sound, might not the parties to industry subscribe to an industrial creed somewhat as follows:

(4) I believe that every man is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living, to fair wages, to reasonable hours of work and proper working conditions, to a decent home, to the opportunity to play, to learn, to worship, and to love, as well as to toil, and that the responsibility rests as heavily upon industry as upon government or society to see that these conditions and opportunities prevail.

(5) I believe that diligence, initiative, and efficiency, wherever found, should be encouraged and adequately rewarded; that indolence, indifference, and restriction of production should be discountenanced; and that service is the only justification for the possession of power.

(6) I believe that the provision of adequate means of uncovering grievances and promptly adjusting them is of fundamental importance to the successful conduct of industry.

(7) I believe that the most potent measure in bringing about industrial harmony and prosperity is adequate representation of the parties in interest; that existing forms of representation should be carefully studied and availed of, in so far as they may be found to have merit and are adaptable to conditions peculiar to the various industries.

(8) I believe that the most effective structure of representation is that which is built from the bottom up, which includes all employees, which starts with the election of representatives and the formation of joint committees in each industrial plant, proceeds to the formation of joint district councils and annual joint conferences in a single industrial corporation, and admits of extension to all corporations in the same industry, as well as to all industries in a community, in a nation, and in the various nations.

(9) I believe that to "do unto others as you would that they should do unto you" is as sound business as it is good religion; that the application of right principles never fails to effect right relations; that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life"; that forms are wholly secondary, while attitude and spirit are all important; and that only as the parties in industry are animated by the spirit of fair play, justice to all, and brotherhood, will any plan which they may mutually work and succeed.

(10) I believe that that man renders the greatest social service who so cooperates in the organization of industry as to afford to the largest number of men the greatest opportunity for self-development and the enjoyment of these benefits which their united efforts add to the wealth of civilization.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have emphasized Mr. Rockefeller's relations to this very extraordinary case, and I have done so deliberately. When a man makes the public professions Mr. Rockefeller has made, and then belies those professions by seeking to avoid a responsibility which is as plain as a pikestaff, I think he should be brought to the bar of public opinion.

Mr. Rockefeller says he is a minority stockholder. He may tell that story to those who are not familiar with the way big corporations are run in this country, but he can not very well insist on it to the Members of this Senate.

Mr. Rockefeller owns about 20 per cent of the stock of the Western Maryland. He is far and away the largest stockholder. There is no hostile interest represented on the road.

It is not necessary for me to tell the Senate that in the circumstances Mr. Rockefeller controls that road as absolutely as if he owned 51 per cent of the stock.

But he has another hold on the Western Maryland. The road's principle source of business is the Consolidated Coal Co., a Rockefeller property. Withdraw the business of the Consolidated Coal Co. and the Western Maryland will die.

The Western Maryland is at the mercy of Mr. Rockefeller. He has only to raise a finger and he could destroy it. And yet he tells the protesting citizens of Maryland and West Virginia that he can do nothing; that he is only "a minority stockholder."

Peace in industry is the ideal of all, but that means peace with honor, with reasonable comfort for the workers, with respect to their rights of collective bargaining.

If the powerful and widely diffused Rockefeller interests are to use high-sounding platitudes as a smoke screen under cover of which their subordinates disregard public interest and brutally exploit their employees, it is high time we knew it.

It is of especial moment that we know, through an investigation of the situation on the Western Maryland, whether this Janus-faced policy is to be extended to the vitally necessary industry of transportation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for permission to introduce a resolution, and I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 207) was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

INVESTIGATION OF STRIKE ON WESTERN MARYLAND RAILROAD
Senate Resolution 207

Whereas John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is held by the people of the cities and towns along the line of the Western Maryland Railroad to be responsible for the continuation of an intolerable state of affairs resulting from a lockout and strike of the engineers and firemen on that railroad; and

Whereas mayors of cities, chambers of commerce, bankers, ministerial associations, and all elements of the population have suffered the consequences of a labor policy which has not only caused loss of life and property, but has destroyed the prosperity and demoralized the life of their cities for a considerable period prior to the strike; and

Whereas Mr. Rockefeller's evasion of responsibility satisfies no one; and

Whereas this attitude of Mr. Rockefeller, following the enforcement of a similar labor policy in the mining communities of western Maryland and West Virginia, where the Rockefeller interest is also admitted, jeopardizes the plans for peace and cooperation on the railroads, which Congress is now attempting to write into legislation; and

Whereas public officials and the press, as well as hundreds of individuals in letters to Mr. Rockefeller, make the following specific charges:

1. That the Western Maryland is engaged in interstate and foreign commerce; and its principal business is hauling coal from the Rockefeller mines to tidewater and other points.

2. Public officials and disinterested organizations have investigated closely the circumstances and are a unit in supporting the striking engineers and firemen because of the facts:

A. That the Western Maryland is the only class 1 railroad in the country which refused to grant the wages and working conditions requested by the workers involved in this controversy;

B. That the unions strove for two years to bring the management into successful negotiations or arbitration of their grievances; and

C. That by summary rebuffs, refusals to arbitrate, by public hiring of strike breakers, and by the discharge of large numbers of employees for refusal to sign a so-called "yellow dog" contract which would have sacrificed the principles of collective bargaining and placed the employees at the mercy of the employers, the company forced the men into the present strike.

3. Lives have been lost in serious accidents which continue to occur with appalling frequency, while the five months' dislocation of commerce and business grows worse and the attitude of Mr. Rockefeller blocks any effort for settlement.

4. Mr. Rockefeller has, in the past, professed publicly the "moral responsibility of stockholders" for labor policies and has recorded his "personal responsibility," but in the present dispute he has taken such pains to evade responsibility and to thus stultify his own utterances as to arouse justifiable suspicion as to his intention toward transportation and other public services in which he is interested.

5. The communities directly effected by the present situation object to being made the victims of policies of wide scope which disregard the public interest; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee be, and is hereby authorized, to investigate the existing strike of engineers and firemen on the Western Maryland Railroad, the conditions which caused it, the failure of the efforts at a settlement and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.'s attitude to them, and to report its findings to the Senate. That, for the purposes of this investigation, the said committee or subcommittee is authorized to hold hearings in Washington, D. C., in the State of Maryland, or in any other place where testimony can properly be taken, to sit during sessions of the Senate and recesses thereof, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer at not to exceed $1.25 per printed page, and to require the production of books and papers upon the subpoena of the chairman or any member of the committee or subcommittee; and the committee is further authorized to incur such necessary expense as may be required for the conduct of the investigation, said expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers duly signed by the chairman.

IMPORTATION OF GRAIN AND SEEDS

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 2465, to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes, approved August 24, 1912, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended (a) by striking out the words 'red top' wherever such words appear in such section and (b) by inserting, after the word 'flax' in the second proviso of such section, a comma and the words 'broomcorn millet, early fortune millet.'

"Sec. 2. Such act of August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 5. (a) On and after the effective date of this subdivision the importation into the United States of seeds of alfalfa or red clover, or any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of the seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited unless such seeds are colored in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe and, when practicable, the color used shall indicate the country or region of origin.

"(b) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after public hearing, determines that seeds of alfalfa or red clover from any foreign country or region are not adapted for general agricultural use in the United States, he shall publish such determination. On and after the expiration of 90 days after the date of such publication and until such determination is revoked the importation into the United States of any of such seeds, or of any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of such seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited, unless at least 10 per cent of the seeds in each container is stained a red color, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the importation into the United States of any seeds the importation of which is prohibited.

"(d) Subdivision (a) of this section shall become effective upon the expiration of 30 days after the date of the passage of this amendatory act.

"SEC. 6. (a) No person shall transport, deliver for transportation, sell, or offer for sale, in interstate commerce, any seed which is misbranded within the meaning of this section; except that this section shall not apply to any common carrier in respect of any seeds transported or delivered for transportation in the ordinary course of its business as a common carrier.

"(b) Any misbranded seed shall be liable to be proceeded against in the district court of the United States for any judicial district in which it is found, and to be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation, if such seed is being—

"(1) Transported in interstate commerce; or

"(2) Held for sale or exchange after having been so transported.

"(c) If such seed is condemned by the court as misbranded, it shall be disposed of in the discretion of the court—

"(1) By sale; or

"(2) By delivery to the owner thereof upon the payment of the legal costs and charges, and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such seed will not be sold or disposed of in any jurisdiction contrary to the provisions of this act or the laws of such jurisdiction; or

"(3) By destruction.

"(d) If such seed is disposed of by sale, the proceeds of the sale, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(e) Proceedings in such libel cases shall conform, as nearly as may be, to suits in rem in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury on any issue of fact if the value in controversy exceeds $20; and facts so tried shall not be reexamined other than in accordance with the rules of the common law. All such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States and, under its direction, other courts of the United States are authorized to prescribe rules regulating such proceedings in any particular not provided by law.

"(f) As used in this section—

"(1) The term "person" means individual, partnership, corporation, or association;

"(2) The term "interstate commerce" means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any other State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia; and

"(3) The term "district court of the United States" includes any court exercising the powers of a district court of the United States.

"(g) For the purposes of this section, seed shall be held to be misbranded if—

"(1) The container thereof, or the invoice relating thereto, or any advertising pertaining thereto, bears or contains any statement, design, or device that is false and fraudulent; or

"(2) If such seed is required to be colored, under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder, and is not so colored; or

"(3) If such seed is colored in imitation of seed required to be colored under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder.

"(h) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"(i) This section shall take effect upon the date of the passage of this amendatory act; but no penalty or condemnation shall be enforced for any violation of this section occurring within 30 days after such date."

FRANK R. GOODING,
CHARLES L. McNARY,
ELLISON D. SMITH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL E. MAPES,
OLGER B. BURTNESS,
TILMAN B. PARKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is there anything in the amendments that weaken the bill at all?

Mr. GOODING. No; not at all. The House struck out the Senate bill after the enacting clause, and these are the amendments that were offered to the House bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Is not the amendment which was added in the House practically the same that we discussed and rejected here?

Mr. GOODING. No; this was what was added:

and, when practicable, the color used shall indicate the country or region of origin.

That was left out of the House bill and was added, and then it was amended by striking out "60 days" and inserting "30 days."

Those are the only amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE AND THOMAS JEFFERSON CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Jefferson, the author of that immortal document, which were to strike out the preamble; on page 3, strike out all of line 8 and down to and including "document" in line 9; and to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence."

Mr. COPELAND. I have discussed this matter with a member of the committee on the other side having charge of the joint resolution. I am entirely satisfied with the amendments, and I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT DEARBORN ADDITION TO CHICAGO

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9964) releasing and granting to the city of Chicago any and all reversionary rights of the United States in and to the streets, alleys, and public grounds in Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. CAMERON. This is a House bill which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and unanimously reported by that committee. It has been gone into very thoroughly by the War Department. I will read briefly from the report an explanation of the purpose of the bill:

In 1824, upon request of the then Secretary of War, the southwest quarter of fractional section 10, containing about 57 acres, and within which Fort Dearborn was situated, was formerly reserved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office from sale and for military purposes. The lands so reserved were subdivided in 1837 by authority of the then Secretary of War—he being represented by one Matthew Birchard, Solicitor of the General Land Office, as special agent and attorney for that purpose—into blocks, lots, streets, and public grounds called the "Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago," and in 1839 a plat thereof was made and acknowledged by Birchard as such agent and attorney, and was recorded in the recorder's office of Cook County, State of Illinois, in book H, page 322, as the "Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago." After recordation of this plat, the then Secretary of War, under authority of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1819 (3 Stat. 520), through his agent and attorney, Matthew Birchard, placed upon the market for sale the lots shown upon the plat, which were sold and conveyed by the United States to divers persons. The plat above referred to, in addition to showing blocks, lots, streets, alleys, etc., showed a tract of land designated as "public ground forever to remain vacant of buildings."

The bill is to rectify what might be termed an oversight or to correct something that was overlooked at the time. It does not convey anything; it merely rectifies the record of the title of the land.

Mr. LENROOT. What does the Senator say as to the attempt to release any title that the United States might hereafter acquire?

Mr. CAMERON. The title was passed from the United States, as they supposed. If the Senator will read further in the report, he will see that that is the situation, and it is merely to correct the title.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the purpose of section 2 of the bill. That language is entirely novel in a bill. Section 2 reads:

An emergency existing, this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Is not that true of every act?

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to that section going out. The matter was gone into very thoroughly by the House, and we accepted the report of the House on it.

Mr. LENROOT. I move that section 2 be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 10, strike out section 2 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. An emergency existing, this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all reversionary right, title, or interest which the United States now has in and to any and all of the streets, alleys, or public grounds in Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago in the southwest quarter of fractional section 10, township 38 north, range 14 east of the third principal meridian, in Cook County, Ill., and any and all right, title, or interest which the United States may hereafter acquire in or to any of said streets, alleys, or public grounds or any part thereof by virtue of the vacation or alteration of the same, or any part thereof, or by reason of any change in the use thereof, or any additional burden placed thereon, be, and the same hereby are, released and granted to and vested in the city of Chicago, to be held by it upon the same tenure and subject to the same conditions and limitations on which it now holds other streets, alleys, and public grounds within its boundaries dedicated by private individuals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6559) for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the unfinished business if he will permit me to call up the legislative appropriation bill at this time.

Mr. FERNALD. I ask that we lay aside the unfinished business for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10425) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. FERNALD. I hope the Senate will not vote to take up the bill. It would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. WARREN. No; it would not. If it did, I should not make the motion.

Mr. FERNALD. I feel that it would do so.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's bill. I think it is evident, however, that we shall have to pass the appropriation bill pretty soon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming has withdrawn his motion.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order that the Senator can not withdraw the motion after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were not ordered. They were demanded but have not been ordered.

COLORADO RIVER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have here a letter from Hon. George W. P. Hunt, Governor of Arizona, addressed to the Arizona delegation in Congress, in which the governor discusses the problems of the Colorado River. I ask that the same be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATEHOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., April 14, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Hon. RALPH H. CAMERON, and
Hon. CARL HAYDEN,

Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have been following newspaper reports emanating from Washington and elsewhere concerning the question of Colorado River development.

I have observed reports that the representatives of the upper basin States have been in session for several days at Denver endeavoring to formulate amendments to the Swing-Johnson bill, which will fully protect the States of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada in the event that the Congress of the United States decides to take another additional step in destroying the form of government established by the founders of this Republic by voting to divest a State of its sovereignty over the natural resources which lie within its borders, and to place the Federal Government in the position of developing and selling hydroelectric energy, and to set aside the traditional and heretofore recognized sovereignty of the States in the legal ownership and control of the water which flows within their borders.

There are several phases of the subject of Colorado River development to which I should like to direct your attention.

ORIGIN OF THE COMPACT

Immediately following the war the question of the control of the Colorado River began to be stressed. Proposals to construct dams on the river for the development of hydroelectric energy and control of the water for irrigation purposes began to be discussed.

The States of Colorado and Wyoming, which had suffered grievously from autocratic interference with their development by Federal bureaucrats, and from court decisions which affected the use of water that falls within those States, recognized the possible menace to their future development by the further development of the Colorado River in the lower basin States. And they induced the States of New Mexico and Utah to join with them in demanding a compact among the seven States in the Colorado River Basin before they would consent to any development being undertaken in the lower basin.

The Congress of the United States passed a bill authorizing the seven States to make a compact and to apportion the water of the Colorado River "among the States." Each of the seven States in the basin passed uniform laws authorizing the making of such a compact, with the proviso that it must be ratified by the legislatures of the seven States and the Congress of the United States before becoming effective.

At a conference held at Santa Fe, N. Mex., in November, 1922, representatives of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and California, and Mr. Hoover, of California, representing the United States, met and drafted a compact, but not in accordance with the law passed by Congress which authorized the making of a treaty to allocate the water "among the States." The compact which was negotiated proposed to divide the water between two arbitrarily created basins which are designated as the "upper" and "lower" basins.

The tributaries of the river in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico divides the water allocated to the "upper basin" to the satisfaction of the four States concerned.

At this point, it may be pertinent to remark that, in effect under the terms of the compact, the right of the four upper-basin States was recognized to consumptively use economically and beneficially all of the water that falls within the borders of those States which they can put to use. Engineers have testified that more water was allocated to these States than they can ever use economically or beneficially. The representatives of these States have testified also, that it may be 150 years before they can utilize some of the water which was reserved to them and that a portion of it will be diverted entirely out of the Colorado River Basin.

In 1923 the States of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Nevada, and California ratified the Santa Fe compact.

In 1925 the California Legislature repealed its ratification of the Santa Fe compact.

The Legislature of the State of Arizona in 1923 and again in 1925 refused to ratify the compact without reservations which would require a further agreement between the States in the lower basin which would protect Arizona.

At the time the Legislature of Arizona authorized the appointment of a commission to negotiate a compact, it also appropriated $50,000 for the making of surveys and the accumulation of data in order that the interests of the State of Arizona might be fully protected. But at the time the compact was negotiated, practically none of these data were available.

In the summer of 1923 reports were made which I judged would enable Arizona to complete the work of carrying out the provisions of the act of Congress authorizing the negotiation of a compact to allocate the water of the Colorado River "among the States," and I took the initiative in inviting the Governors of the States of California and Nevada to appoint delegates to participate in a conference for this purpose. The Governor of California declined and the Governor of Nevada accepted.

A short time later a prominent citizen of Arizona, who was my opponent in the campaign for Governor of Arizona in 1924, visited my office and expressed the opinion that he would be able to arrange a conference with the Governors of California and Nevada which would result in the law passed by Congress authorizing a compact to apportion the water "among the States" being fulfilled.

I appointed this gentleman and one of the members of the legislature as a committee to arrange for such a conference; but the Governor of California declined to receive these gentlemen.

Still later, the Governor of Nevada took the initiative in trying to arrange a conference, and the Governor of California declined to accept his invitation to appoint conferees.

When a conference was finally arranged with a committee appointed by the Legislature of California to represent that State, the California committee insisted upon certain conditions as a precedent to the continuation of the conference which, in effect, would give California everything that State wants.

If the Upper Basin States are entitled to the protection they ask in the compact, and if the Congress of the United States is to pass legislation to give California what she is seeking and at the same time include in that legislation the full protection of the Upper Basin States, I think it essential that the State of Arizona be considered and proected, because as matters now stand the State of Arizona will be expected to meet all the deficiency caused by any shortage of water needed for the development of the lands in the Colorado River Basin. At this point I do not intend to refer to the proposal advanced in the Swing-Johnson bill with reference to power. I will merely repeat what the farmer said, when he arrived with his wagon at the top of the hill only to find his apples scattered along the road, to the small boy who had lifted the wagon gate and, standing anxiously by, asked the farmer why he didn't curse. The farmer replied, after scratching his head, that it was only because he could not do the matter justice.

MR. HOOVER

I have been interested in Associated Press reports of the testimony offered by Mr. Herbert Hoover, of California, Secretary of Commerce of the United States, before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands of the House of Representatives on March 3, 1926, in which Mr. Hoover is quoted as having testified as follows:

"I believe Arizona is amply protected under the compact. If Arizona would negotiate the compact on the basis of water rights alone, there would be no trouble, but as it is other questions are being hung on the back of water rights."

I want to deny, without any equivocation, the statement of Mr. Hoover. Arizona has not refused to ratify a compact to carry out the provisions of the law enacted by Congress and as authorized by the Legislature of the State of Arizona to apportion the water of the Colorado River "among the States." She stands, with reference to the Santa Fe compact, in exactly the same position as California. The legislature of that State repealed the approval given the Santa Fe compact in the 1925 session of the legislature of that State.

The trouble with Mr. Hoover and others is that they object to Arizona facing facts squarely. They are evidently going on the theory that when one starts to pluck a goose, one should not take too big a handful lest the goose squawk too loud. The trouble is that Mr. Hoover and his associates in California have mistaken Arizona for a goose and have endeavored to pluck too big a handful, and the vigorous objection of the legislature and the people of this State have exposed their purposes.

POWER

I presume the "other issues," which Mr. Hoover complains that Arizona has injected into the controversy, relate to the subject of power. In this connection, I direct your attention to a statement of another gentleman (W. F. McClure) from California who sat in the Santa Fe conference representing that State. This statement is contained in a letter he addressed to the Governor of the State of Nevada on November 28, 1923, and can be found on page 714 of the Senate hearings of December 17, 1925, on Senate Resolution No. 320, before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The statement follows:

"Any attempt on the part of the States in the Lower Basin to allocate any power which may be developed, should such power be financed by the Federal Government, would also be stoutly opposed by the Upper Basin States.

"The upper States furnish the water, which fact alone is sufficient to base the strongest kind of a claim to a fair portion of any power that may be developed anywhere on the river if such development is financed by Federal moneys."

The people of Arizona are fully alive to the situation and to the fact that power was involved in the Santa Fe compact. If you want additional testimony to that contained in the letter of Mr. W. F. McClure, the California commissioner at Santa Fe, you will find it in the testimony of Hon. Delph Carpenter, who has intelligently, competently, and honestly endeavored, in my judgment, to arrive at an equitable solution of the existing controversy as far as the interests of his State would permit.

Mr. Carpenter's statement will be found at the bottom of page 127 of the hearings before a Subcommittee on Appropriations of the United States Senate, the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, H. R. 2907.

In reply to a question from Senator McKellar Mr. Carpenter testified as follows:

"Senator McKellar. Do you undertake to settle power rights, as to power distribution, as between the States to make an equitable distribution, as well as the use of water for irrigation purposes?"

"Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, Senator; in this. We do not attempt to deal with the allocation of the power, but we deal with the use of the water by which the power would be generated. Our compact or interstate treaty, now approved by six of the States and awaiting approval by Arizona, allocates the water for all beneficial uses, which, of course, includes power.

The question of power, to which I assume Mr. Hoover objects to Arizona insisting upon discussing with reference to a compact in the "Lower Basin," is of tremendous importance to the State of Arizona because when it is fully developed it will represent a value that has been conservatively estimated as being capable of being capitalized at over a billion dollars.

Under the plan of development advocated by Mr. Hoover, of California, and proposals advanced by other California agencies, Arizona would be able to derive but little revenue from this tremendous resource, 85 per cent of which is within the State.

If California irrigation, construction, and maintenance is to be financed by power, why limit it to that developed in Arizona and Nevada at Boulder Canyon? Why not let the Upper Basin contribute to the cost also instead of letting those States, through cheap rates or taxes, enjoy all the benefit that will be derived from power production within the Upper Basin? Why charge it all to Arizona?

WATER FOR CALIFORNIA

Aside from this phase of Mr. Hoover's testimony, his statement that "Arizona is adequately protected by the Colorado River compact" in the allocation of water is equally false as is attested by the fact that the proposal submitted to Arizona by the legislative committee representing the State of California proposed to divide the water of the Colorado River, allocated to the lower basin by the compact, on the basis of three parts for California to one part for Arizona, and the further fact that California now has filings on record asking for more water than is allocated to the lower basin under the terms of the Santa Fe compact.

Arizona comprises 43 per cent of the drainage area of the Colorado River Basin, as against 2 per cent of California, or, to use figures, Arizona has a drainage area of 113,000 square miles, as against 6,000 square miles of California in the Colorado River Basin.

Arizona contributes more water to the Colorado River system than any other State with the exception of Colorado. California contributes no water to the Colorado River system.

If the State of Arizona had been so unwise as to ratify the Colorado River compact and then had been compelled to accept a proposal similar to that made by the California legislative committee, there would be practically no water left for use in the State of Arizona.

IS MR. HOOVER A COMPETENT WITNESS?

Considerable importance is being given to the testimony of Mr. Hoover, and it is rather important to know just how much value should be attached to his testimony in order to give it due weight.

There seems to be an inclination in some quarters to accept a statement from Mr. Hoover as being as immutable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians, and as deserving of reverence as the laws of Moses and the words of Holy Writ. I can not accept this theory. Mr. Hoover's testimony must be judged upon his standing as an engineer and as a statesman.

What is his record as an engineer?

I have not had time to study his accomplishments as an engineer in detail, but I find on page 1618 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 13, 1926, certain statements that purport to define Mr. Hoover's record as an engineer.

It would appear from such information that Mr. Hoover's reputation as a great engineer must be accepted to a great extent on the basis of his press agents' propaganda.

IS MR. HOOVER'S TESTIMONY RELIABLE?

Mr. Hoover has appeared several times before committees of Congress to testify concerning Colorado River problems. The question occurs as to the reliability of his testimony.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 30, 1923, Mr. Hoover is quoted as declaring that there were 5,000,000 acre-feet of water in the Colorado River system over and above the 16,000,000 acre-feet allocated by the compact yet to be divided. I ask you gentlemen to compare this testimony with the testimony of engineers who know something about the adequacy of the water supply of the Colorado River, such engineers as Stabler, who testified it is unsafe to depend upon more than 12,000,000 acre-feet of water a year for irrigation above Laguna Dam; LaRue, who estimates the reconstructed flow of the river at Lee Ferry at 16,600,000 acre-feet; Kelly, and others. California representatives state that they do not accept the statement that there is a surplus of 5,000,000 acre-feet of water available above the compact apportionment.

Mr. Hoover also implies that there is adequate water in the Colorado River for all the States concerned. Again, I refer you to the testimony of the same engineers as to the accuracy of his testimony.

The conflict over the division of the water of the Colorado River revolves around the fact that there is not sufficient water available to irrigate lands economically feasible and susceptible of irrigation in the United States.

Arizona is not willing to accept Mr. Hoover as an unbiased arbitrator, nor are we willing to rest our case upon his competency as an engineer.

I am not going to attempt to comment upon his statesmanship. You gentlemen are more familiar with it than I.

THE BOULDER CANYON DAM SITE

The Boulder Canyon Dam site, which Mr. Hoover and other eminent California citizens are endeavoring to foist upon the people of the United States and to utilize to despoil the State of Arizona, merits some discussion.

Mr. Hoover has never seen the Colorado River Dam sites. Mr. Hoover and the proponents of the Boulder Dam site have abandoned that site and have moved 30 miles down the river, to what is now designated as "Black Canyon Dam site."

It was found that the depth to bedrock at Boulder Canyon was 158 feet, while the depth to bedrock of Black Canyon is 125 feet.

According to the testimony of engineers Clark and Goethals, the Boulder Canyon and Black Canyon Dam sites are in an earthquake zone, and there is testimony in the hearings of one of the witnesses who was present during an earthquake.

It is also well known that the Black Canyon and Boulder Canyon sites are located in what is recognized by geologists as one of the greatest "fault" sections in the United States.

Numerous witnesses have testified as to the existence of tremendous veins of volcanic salt in what would constitute the reservoir in the event of the Boulder Canyon Dam or the Black Canyon Dam should be built. Anyone who has ever drunk water from the Colorado River knows that the per cent of salt contained in that water is excessive.

Engineers have testified as to the enormous loss of water which will occur from evaporation which would result from the construction of a dam at or near Boulder Canyon.

Engineers have testified that 400,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy will be destroyed if a dam is constructed at or near Boulder Canyon.

Your attention is directed to the flat declaration of an engineer of the United States Geological Survey, who declared:

"If you want to irrigate a million acres of land in Mexico and dedicate a million acres of land to the desert in the United States, go ahead and build Boulder Canyon Dam."

It is true these Mexican lands are owned by citizens of the same State as that represented by Mr. Hoover.

You will find in the testimony on the Boulder Canyon Dam bill the evidence that the construction of a dam at Black Canyon would submerge gold-bearing gravels capable of producing $64,000,000.

You will find in the testimony of Mr. Clark, a California engineer, that the proposed location of the Black Canyon Dam is on a basalt base which has a tendency to split even when not under stress.

Upon examination of the evidence you will find the testimony of Government engineers is almost unanimous against the construction of a dam at Black Canyon. It is true that two engineers, who were discharged from the service of the United States Reclamation Bureau, have been very strenuous in their testimony in favor of the Black Canyon Dam site. I shall have something to say later concerning the testimony of one of them, and comment upon his reliability and accuracy.

What is there to be accomplished by building a dam at Boulder or Black Canyon that can be accomplished so successfully there and at no other place on the river?

The only conditions which a dam at Boulder Canyon assure which can not be accomplished more effectively, efficiently, and economically elsewhere on the river are:

1. Availability of adequate water to irrigate 1,000,000 acres of land for Mr. Harry Chandler and his associates in Mexico.
2. The dedication to the desert forever of an acre of land in the United States (this means in Arizona) for every acre irrigated in Mexico.
3. All the water that can be utilized in California, although the water for the coastal plain cities will be obtained at an unnecessarily heavy expense because of the proposal to pump it to an altitude of 1,200 feet above the river.
4. The permanent loss of 400,000 horsepower of hydroelectric energy or the alternative of putting in the junk heap millions of dollars' worth of property which would be created by the construction of a dam and power plant as contemplated at or near Boulder Canyon.
5. Placing a limit on the amount of land which can be irrigated in Arizona by gravity, so that none of the water which the upper basin States agree to deliver to the States of the lower basin at Lee Ferry under the terms of the Colorado River compact could ever be available for use by gravity in the State of Arizona.

In addition to the economic crime which it is proposed to have the Federal Government perpetrate at Boulder or Black Canyon, it is interesting to note the efforts of California politicians to foist the cost of the benefits that California seeks upon the States of Arizona and Nevada and over the vigorous protests of this State.

It is also interesting to note that the suggestion for an amendment to the proposed bill offered by Mr. Squires, as representative of the State of Nevada, was brusquely brushed aside by the Secretary of the Interior when Mr. Squires suggested the amendment that a tri-State agreement be first negotiated in conformity with the law passed by Congress before development be undertaken.

ALL-AMERICAN CANAL

Long and loud have been the plaintiff pleas emanating from the Imperial Valley for protection from floods. It is interesting to note, however, that those who have been appointed to represent the State of California, and who are endeavoring to speak for the Imperial Valley and for California in their negotiations with representatives of this State, assert that it is not floods they fear in the Imperial Valley but drought.

In 1924, the testimony shows, for 72 consecutive days the entire supply of water of the Colorado River was diverted for use in the Imperial Valley, and the farmers there are reported to have had less than half enough to meet their needs. In fact, there has been an inadequate water supply the past three years. It is reported that 100,000 acres of additional land have been put in cultivation in Mexico this year, and that the water necessary for this land will come out of the available normal supply of the river as a result of the contract made with Mexico by the Imperial Valley irrigation district, making a still further shortage for that valley.

The State of Arizona has no quarrel with the Imperial Valley over the construction of the all-American canal in California. I think the majority of the people of this State are in favor of the construction of that canal, but we do not want to pay for it. We want it understood that it is going to stand upon its own merits so far as we are concerned, and that with a regulated water supply it represents an increase in California land values of $150,000,000 for the Imperial Valley.

We object to the dissembling propaganda that it is needed to secure homesteads for ex-service men, when we know that if every available acre of the unappropriated public domain in the Imperial Valley were assigned as homesteads to ex-service men, only 1,256 veterans would be able to secure a homestead.

We also want it understood that we know that only one-third of those owning land in the Imperial Valley live there, and that less than that number farm the soil they own. We want it recognized definitely that the all-American canal is a huge, speculative venture for the enhancement of the value of California lands of which 47,300 acres are owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad.

You, of course, understand the anxiety of the people of Arizona to protect the interests of this State, and when we see the greedy paw of the California bear reaching out to pilfer and plunder the resource in the honey tree of Arizona, we can not be censured if an anxious patriot meets the bear half way and gives it a rap on its sinister snout—the vigor of our language, I think, can be understood under the circumstances.

IS CALIFORNIA JUSTIFIED IN DEMANDING AN UNFAIR APPORTIONMENT OF THE WATER OF THE COLORADO RIVER?

The representatives of California in justification of their attitude in demanding an unfair apportionment of the water of the Colorado River and the control of power that does not belong to them, assert that their reason for so doing is that it is needed to contribute to the growth and prosperity of the State of California. If this is so, why does California not develop her own unused 12,000,000 acres and 9,000,000 horsepower of electrical power?

The allegation is made that Arizona can not use these resources.

What natural or economic law or what mandate from the Almighty is there that makes it imperative that southern California should grow at the expense of Arizona?

If there is not enough water for both States, which State should be denied—the one that constitutes 43 per cent of the river basin, or the one which comprises 2 per cent? The State which puts the second largest amount of water into the system, or the State which contributes none of the water?

We are curious to know what special arrangement with the Deltic the California politicians have which gives them information that California is going to continue to grow and that Arizona is going to remain stationary and unable to use her own resources? Of course, if they get away with their Swing-Johnson and Mexican schemes it makes it certain that Arizona will not grow very much.

It is true California now has a greater population than Arizona at this time, but it obtained nearly all of its population in the last 40 years.

Arizona showed a greater percentage of growth in population between 1910 and 1920 than any other State, and we are just beginning to grow.

We are still growing more rapidly in proportion to population than any other State, with the exception of Florida.

Population shifts with opportunity.

What is it that makes a State? Natural resources plus climatic conditions, plus energy, intelligence, and the resourcefulness of her people. Are the natural resources of southern California greater than those of Arizona? No.

Is the climate of southern California superior to that of Arizona? No.

It would ill behoove me to compare the intelligence, industry, and resourcefulness of the people of the two States.

Is there any merit in the contention that California is entitled to the water and power of the Colorado River because she asserts she needs it? One hundred miles south of the Salt River Valley in Arizona (less than one-half the distance Boulder Canyon power would have to be transmitted to reach Los Angeles) lies a splendid harbor, where the ships of the world may anchor and transport our copper, cotton, cattle, wool, and the produce of our farmers and our forests.

This harbor is the property of the Republic of Mexico. I wonder if the same plausible sophistry of the California politicians would be sufficient to justify Arizona in asking that this harbor be obtained from Mexico for Arizona because Mexico does not need it and can not use it now, while we might.

EXPERT WITNESSES

The people of Arizona are able to weigh the evidence of expert witnesses. In fact, we have our own opinion of expert witnesses. California has a reputation with reference to expert witnesses. It was a Californian in a famous murder trial, testifying as an expert witness, who invented the disease "Dementia Americana" to free a murderer. Of course he did it for pay.

Numerous expert witnesses have testified concerning the development of the Colorado River and particularly concerning the proposed Boulder Canyon Dam.

I want to discuss for just a few moments the evidence submitted by one of them. Mr. F. E. Weymouth testified very vigorously against the State of Arizona and very belligerently in favor of Boulder Canyon. In fact, he became so enthusiastically in favor of his plan for the development of the river and so unfair in his testimony that he discredited his own evidence. And the testimony of many of the other expert witnesses for California, when measured by the same tests as that applied to Mr. Weymouth's evidence, will prove it to be equally as accurate and authentic.

Mr. Weymouth put into the testimony before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, two tables which will be found on page 813 of the Senate hearings on December 22, 1925. These tables purport to be a comparison of the LaRue and Weymouth plans for irrigation of lands in the lower basin. A table in Senate Document No. 142, which is known as the Fall-Davis report, which Mr. Weymouth also helped to prepare, states that the maximum number of acres of land that can be economically and feasibly irrigated in the State of Arizona from the Colorado River is 270,000 acres.

The Arizona Engineering Commission, of which Mr. E. C. LaRue, of the United States Geological Survey, was chairman, suggested that in addition to these 270,000 acres it was possible to irrigate some 700,000 additional acres of land in what he designated as the Parker-Gila project.

In the comparative plan submitted by Mr. Weymouth in the Senate hearings he includes in his own plan the 702,000 acres of the Parker-Gila project and leaves it out of the LaRue plan in order to show that the Weymouth plan will irrigate approximately 700,000 more acres than the LaRue plan.

I leave it to you to find the proper words to characterize such testimony.

The Mulholland plan for lifting water by pump 1,200 feet in order to bring to Los Angeles some 1,500 second-feet of water when submitted to the same tests as to the cost of power for pumping in comparison with the interests on capital investment for a tunnel to bring the water to Los Angeles by gravity also indicates that the factor of the capitalized value of the perpetual use of 200,000 horsepower of electrical energy for power is eliminated in the figures put forth for the edification and enticement of the citizens of California, according to the statements of a United States Government engineer.

We think it rather strange in Arizona that Government engineers, with the exception of those who have been discharged from the Reclamation Service, are nearly all on record as testifying against the Boulder Canyon project. It is strange also that private capital seeking opportunity to invest in the development of the Colorado River, in nearly every case, proposes to develop elsewhere than at Boulder Canyon.

It is also strange that expert engineering witnesses who were formerly in the Reclamation Service, who appear to testify from time to time for California and the Boulder Canyon scheme have all been connected with Fall-Davis report which contained the proposition of irrigating approximately a million acres of land in Mexico.

Arizona resents the attempt to ram through Congress the Swing-Johnson bill. We appreciate the fact that with Mr. Hoover and Mr. Wilbur in the Cabinet, Mr. Mead as Commissioner of Reclamation, and Senator JOHNSON and Congressman SWING and Senator SHORTRIDGE California wields a powerful influence with the administration at Washington.

They may succeed in forcing the adoption by Congress of the Boulder Canyon scheme, but if they do the courts of the United States are going to have to pass upon its legitimacy.

California representatives are failing to recognize the fact that this is a Nation of 48 States, each of which is a sovereign within its own borders, and it will take a decision of the United States Supreme Court to declare that Arizona has no sovereignty over the resources which California is endeavoring to appropriate to herself.

I make no predictions as to whether the bill will pass or not, but I ask you to reflect, if speed is desired in the development of the river, why should this Nation have one policy at Muscle Shoals and another on the Colorado River?

And again I ask, Was anything ever settled until it was settled right? Did expediency ever win? Did it win for Los Angeles when it acquired Owen Valley water? Los Angeles is now beginning to pay for water it secured from Owen Valley.

If California wants to grow and prosper, it can only be upon terms of amity with her sister States. Up to date her representatives have shown little inclination to deal fairly and justly with Arizona. When California gets ready, you will find Arizona ready and waiting to work with her. We would rather work with California than fight her, but if fighting is necessary we shall do our best to defeat her purposes.

A PLAN OF DEVELOPMENT

I suggest that the economical, feasible, and practical way to develop the Colorado River is for the States of Arizona, California, and Nevada to get together, compose their differences, and either form a giant power and irrigation district, develop the river, and apportion the benefits equitably to each State, if public instead of private development is preferred. Federal control will handicap the States.

Arizona can afford to deal generously with California, and California can not afford to deal other than equitably with Arizona.

ARIZONA PROPOSAL FOR DIVISION OF WATER

A committee appointed by me to represent Arizona made a proposition to California for the division of the water of the Colorado River on the following basis:

Each State in the basin was to be recognized as having the right to use all the water it produced that it could use economically and beneficially; that of the surplus which comes down from the upper basin Nevada was to be given 300,000 acre-feet, which is all she asked for, and the remainder to be divided 50-50 between Arizona and California.

Remember that Arizona has nearly ten times as much drainage area in the Colorado River Basin as California.

That is more than an equitable division, yet the representatives of California rejected it.

POWER DISTRICT

In reference to power, the committee representing Arizona proposed the formation of a power district to comprise the States of Arizona, southern California, and Nevada to develop and produce electric power. But instead of remaining home and cooperating and working out a plan, California representatives went "hightailing" to Washington, chasing a will-o'-the-wisp because the Secretary of the Interior changed his mind and recommended the construction of a dam at Boulder Canyon.

ALLEGED NEGATIVE POLICY

Attempts have been made in Congress by representatives of California and others to infer Arizona is causing delay in the development of the river, and they criticize what they designate as the "negative policy" of this State.

I deny that Arizona's policy has been negative. On the other hand, a very definite idea as to how the river should be developed has been proposed by this State. We have a filing on record with the Federal Power Commission for a permit to build dams at Bridge and Glen Canyons. If we are given a permit by the Federal Power Commission, we would have no difficulty in building these dams.

HIGH LINE CANAL

Another proposal has been advanced by citizens of Arizona who advocate the construction of a project embracing dams at Glen Canyon and Bridge Canyon, thereby providing for storage and diversion at a point sufficiently high on the river to permit of the diversion of the water for use on some 3,000,000 acres of available lands in Arizona and the development of a tremendous amount of hydroelectric power.

WHAT WE HAVE BEEN DOING

I remind you of the fact that Arizona has only been a State for the past 14 years. During this period we have developed a school system second to none in the United States.

Our university is recognized by the American Association of Universities as a class A institution, whereas only about one-third of the State universities have such a high classification.

In the report of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States Arizona ranks ahead of 15 other States as to the number of miles of highways constructed up to Federal-aid standards. Competent critics tell us we have the best gravel-surfaced highways in the United States.

Our university and our roads and our State property are paid for. The State has no outstanding bond issues. We have paid as we have gone along.

When the United States Reclamation Service wants to refer to some project to justify its administration, to point to something successful that Federal bureaucracy can claim credit for, you will find that the first project it refers to is the Salt River Valley project in Arizona, which is managed by citizens of this State; and you will also find the Yuma project in Arizona near the top of the list.

A reference to statistics will indicate to you that over 50 per cent of the copper produced in the United States comes from Arizona, and we also rank near the top of the list in the production of gold and silver.

I do not refer to these things in a spirit of boastfulness, but to indicate that we have not been wasting our time during the past 15 years since the incubus of Federal control has been taken from our backs, and that we have carved out and built a State out of the 113,000 square miles of territory which constitute the State of Arizona; that our population has been busy and that we have made this progress in spite of the fact that we have participated in a World War, the records of which will show that Arizona furnished more men to the American forces in proportion to the per capita of population than any other State.

These items are also cited for the reason that we wish to direct your attention to the fact that the citizenship of Arizona is intelligent, self-reliant, courageous, and is not to be overawed because Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, feels piqued because his proposition which was drafted at Santa Fe was not accepted without careful scrutiny, and in which serious flaws were found which affected this State. We are not concerned with Mr. Hoover's aspirations for (obtaining the backing of California) the Presidency of the United States, and his hope of obtaining the support of the seven States in the Colorado River Basin in attaining his ambition.

PROPOSED TREATIES

I notice also, from Associated Press reports, that negotiations are being considered with Mexico leading up to the making of a treaty affecting the division of the water of the Colorado River. I implore you to be on guard in connection with any such proposed treaty.

In this connection I direct your attention to the masterful speech made in the United States Senate by Senator Thomas, of Colorado, in connection with another treaty negotiated with Mexico, and in which similar questions were involved in connection with the waters of the Rio Grande River.

I especially refer you to that part of Senator Thomas's great speech in the United States Senate on March 23 and 24, 1914, as I anticipate it may accurately summarize the effect of such a treaty as may be negotiated upon the welfare of Arizona. Among other things Senator Thomas stated was that—

"The treaty was a consummation of a sordid, shameful, and successful intrigue conducted in the interest of private parties impelled by greed and gain, based upon the existence of no legal, political, or moral claim whatever on the part of the Mexican Government or any of its citizens against this Government or any of its citizens."

CONCLUSION

In conclusion I again repeat that the State of Arizona has endeavored to carry out the provisions of that act of Congress which authorized the negotiations of a compact to apportion the water of the Colorado River "among the States," and that any delay in carrying out the provisions of this act can be attributed to one State only—California, which is still delaying meeting with our representatives.

The present attempt of some of the members of the Cabinet and representatives of California to force through Congress a measure designed for the benefit of that State and to the detriment of the State of Arizona and which will contribute materially to the benefit of California owners of lands in a foreign nation is something that I do not believe the Congress of the United States will force upon a State that was admitted to the Union presumably upon a equal footing with all the other States.

I also repeat that if I am in any position to prevent it, and I hope that I may be, if Congress is so derelict in its duty—so inconsiderate of the rights of the State of Arizona as to endorse the nefarious scheme that is proposed under the terms of the Swing-Johnson bill—that I shall endeavor to have the Supreme Court of this Nation pass upon the constitutionality of such work.

I also desire to remind you that California witnesses have declared that the Pescadero cut may silt up in from 7 to 12 years and cause a flood in the Imperial Valley. I direct your attention to the fact that the tactics being pursued by California in connection with this legislation does not tend to facilitate the early construction of storage works on the river, and that if it were floods that California fears her representatives would now be negotiating with the representatives of this State and of the State of Nevada instead of lobbying in Washington in an effort to despoil the State of Arizona of her heritage and, if possible, leaving the State of Nevada also without recompense for her resources.

Very respectfully yours,

GEO. W. P. HUNT, Governor.

COURTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3028) to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district into five divisions. It is a local bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill by title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether the bill will require additional quarters to be purchased by the Government, involve the appointment of more clerks and deputy clerks and marshals, and otherwise entail additional expense upon the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLEASE. On the contrary, Mr. President, it will save expense. The bill merely provides that criminal cases shall be tried in the divisions where the indictments are brought. It will eliminate the necessity of witnesses having to travel from one part of the State to another. The committee reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. KING. There will be no impediment to a change of venue, then, from one district to another?

Mr. BLEASE. That is the vital point of the bill, that the venue can be changed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the bill merely provides for a roving judge.

Mr. BLEASE. No; the bill the Senator has in mind is a different bill; that is a House bill, while this is a Senate bill. This bill merely provides that criminal cases shall be tried in the nearest court, unless the judge shall change the venue. No additional officers will be required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments in section 3, page 3, line 3, after the word "all," to insert "criminal"; in the same line, after the word "cases," to strike out "both civil and criminal" and insert "shall"; and in line 4, after the word "which," to strike out "the cause of action arises or" and insert the word "the," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That all criminal cases shall be tried in the division in which the offense was committed, unless upon proper showing the venue would be changed by the judge from one division to another, and this change be made only upon affidavits and motion made in open court after four days' notice to the adverse party.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LEVIN P. KELLY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2111) for the relief of Levin P. Kelly, which were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "in full settlement against the Government," and in line 5, to strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,740."

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGES

Mr. STEPHENS. From the Committee on Commerce I report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10351) granting the consent of Congress to the Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss., and I submit a report (No. 636) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the city of Natchez, Miss., and a point in the city of Vidalia, La., connecting with the Lone Star Trail Highway, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States; and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

SEC. 3. The said Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Mississippi, the State of Louisiana, any political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property); and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purposes the said Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of the records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors or assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage, foreclosure, or otherwise is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS. From the Committee on Commerce I report back with an amendment to the bill (H. R. 9758) granting the consent of Congress to the Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Vicksburg, Miss., and I submit a report (No. 637) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point in the city of Vicksburg, Miss., at or near the crossing of the Dixie Overland Highway, and a point opposite in the State of Louisiana, at or near the continuation of the Dixie Overland Highway, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States; and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

SEC. 3. The said Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Mississippi, the State of Louisiana, any political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property); and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide, as far as possible, a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purposes the said Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of the records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors or assigns; and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 20, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would wait patiently for Thee, O Lord. Consider us and incline Thine ear and hear our prayer. Thou art the bread of life and all the material and spiritual wonders which this suggests. When these forms yield us their bounties may we realize that behind them all is our heavenly Father, full of infinite glory and mercy. Help us to have always a compelling gratitude for all Thy blessings. May all our labors bear the mark of a high and Christian consideration of our fellow countrymen. Be with any who may be in trouble; look through their clouds and brush away their tears. Be our guide, our strength, our comfort, and our all, and Thine shall be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, April 22, immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], which have been made a special order for that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes on the subject of retirement in the civil service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that on Thursday, April 22, immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], he be permitted to address the House for 35 minutes on the subject of retirement in the civil service. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask for an indefinite leave of absence for my colleague Mr. KERR, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

REGULATING FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on Senate bill 2465, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up a conference report on the bill S. 2465, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes,' approved August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended (a) by striking out the words 'red top' wherever such words appear in such section and (b) by inserting, after the word 'flax' in the second proviso of such section, a comma and the words 'broomcorn millet, early fortune millet.'

"Sec. 2. Such act of August 24, 1912, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 5. (a) On and after the effective date of this subdivision the importation into the United States of seeds of alfalfa or red clover, or any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of the seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited unless such seeds are colored in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe and, when practicable, the color used shall indicate the country or region of origin."

"(b) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after public hearing, determines that seeds of alfalfa or red clover from any foreign country or region are not adapted for general agricultural use in the United States he shall publish such determination. On and after the expiration of 90 days after the date of such publication and until such determination is revoked the importation into the United States of any of such seeds, or of any mixture of seeds containing 10 per cent or more of such seeds of alfalfa and/or red clover, is prohibited, unless at least 10 per cent of the seeds in each container is stained a red color, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent the importation into the United States of any seeds the importation of which is prohibited.

"(d) Subdivision (a) of this section shall become effective upon the expiration of 30 days after the date of the passage of this amendatory act.

"SEC. 6. (a) No person shall transport, deliver for transportation, sell, or offer for sale, in interstate commerce, any seed which is misbranded within the meaning of this section; except that this section shall not apply to any common carrier in respect of any seed transported or delivered for transportation in the ordinary course of its business as a common carrier.

"(b) Any misbranded seed shall be liable to be proceeded against in the district court of the United States for any judicial district in which it is found, and to be seized for confiscation by a process of libel for condemnation, if such seed is being—

"(1) Transported in interstate commerce; or

"(2) Held for sale or exchange after having been so transported.

"(c) If such seed is condemned by the court as misbranded, it shall be disposed of in the discretion of the court—

"(1) By sale; or

"(2) By delivery to the owner thereof upon the payment of the legal costs and charges, and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such seed will not be sold or disposed of in any jurisdiction contrary to the provisions of this act or the laws of such jurisdiction; or

"(3) By destruction.

"(d) If such seed is disposed of by sale, the proceeds of the sale, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(e) Proceedings in such libel cases shall conform, as nearly as may be, to suits in rem in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury on any issue of fact if the value in controversy exceeds $20; and facts so tried shall not be reexamined other than in accordance with the rules of the common law. All such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States and, under its direction, other courts of the United States are authorized to prescribe rules regulating such proceedings in any particular not provided by law.

"(f) As used in this section—

"(1) The term 'person' means individual, partnership, corporation, or association;

"(2) the term 'interstate commerce' means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any other State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia; and

"(3) The term 'district court of the United States' includes any court exercising the powers of a district court of the United States.

"(g) For the purposes of this section, seed shall be held to be misbranded if—

"(1) The container thereof, or the invoice relating thereto, or any advertising pertaining thereto, bears or contains any statement, design, or device that is false and fraudulent; or

"(2) If such seed is required to be colored, under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder, and is not so colored; or

"(3) If such seed is colored in imitation of seed required to be colored under the provisions of section 5 and the regulations issued thereunder.

"(h) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"(i) This section shall take effect upon the date of the passage of this amendatory act; but no penalty or condemnation shall be enforced for any violation of this section occurring within 30 days after such date."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees is to accept the House amendment, with three minor changes.

The House amendment required the coloring of imported seeds in such manner and to such extent as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. Under the bill as agreed to in conference the color used must, when practicable, indicate the country or region of origin.

The prohibition on importation, under the House amendment, became effective upon the expiration of 90 days after the passage of the bill. The bill as agreed to in conference reduces this period to 30 days.

The House amendment provided that no penalty or condemnation for misbranding should be enforced for any violation of the misbranding section occurring within 90 days after the passage of the bill. The bill as agreed to in conference reduces this period to 30 days.

CARL E. MAPES,
OLGER B. BURTNESS,
TILMAN B. PARKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the adoption of the conference report. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PARKWAY BETWEEN ROCK CREEK PARK, THE ZOOLOGICAL PARK, AND POTOMAC PARK

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4785, with a Senate amendment, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the bill H. R. 4785, with a Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4785) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to complete the acquisition of the land authorized to be acquired by the public buildings appropriation act, approved March 4, 1913, for the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park, the Zoological Park, and Potomac Park.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, this is a vital matter, and I think we ought to have more Members here. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seven Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

PARKWAY BETWEEN ROCK CREEK PARK, THE ZOOLOGICAL PARK, AND POTOMAC PARK

The SPEAKER. The Chair will restate the motion. The gentleman from Maryland moves to concur in the Senate amendment to House bill 4785.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in 1913 Congress created a commission known as the Potomac and Rock Creek Parkway Commission, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture. This commission was authorized and directed to acquire land to connect Potomac and Rock Creek Parks. Pursuant to this authorization, which was for the sum of $1,300,000, and which it was provided should be paid one-half from the Federal Treasury and one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia, there was expended from 1916 to 1925 the full sum authorized, namely, $1,300,000, which was payable in the manner provided by the act. This bill authorizes the further expenditure of $600,000 to complete this work and to link these two parkways together.

The bill as submitted to the District Committee by the National Capital Park Commission, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the Director of the Budget, provided that all of this amount, $600,000, needed to complete this work should be paid out of money in the Federal Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. That was a mistake, and, of course, the mistake ought to be corrected.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The Committee on the District of Columbia changed the wording of the bill and provided that the $600,000 should be paid out of the surplus moneys of the District of Columbia made available by the act of Congress passed during the Sixty-eighth Congress. The Senate, after the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia had reported this bill favorably, recalled it and sent it back to the committee. After carefully considering this question, they provided that this $600,000 should be expended one-half from the Federal Treasury and one-half from the funds of the District of Columbia now in what is known as the surplus fund.

I contend that if there is any proposition to which the Federal Government should contribute, it is the parkways of the District of Columbia. The title to this land is to be vested entirely in the United States; the land is to be entirely under the jurisdiction of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who is an Army officer designated by the President of the United States. Congress has just passed an act providing that the National Park Commission can go into Virginia and Maryland to acquire land. Is Congress going to put half of the expense of acquiring land outside of the District of Columbia and all of the expense of acquiring land in the District of Columbia entirely on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says that the title to this roadway is to be entirely in the Government?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the title to all of the roadways in the District is in the Government and the people of this District claim that because we own the roadways and help to maintain them we should pay larger taxes. There is no justification at all for this proposition.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will ask the gentleman a question. Suppose you were going to acquire a new road, say, from here to the Union Station, would you put the expense entirely on the taxpayers of the District, or would you insist that the taxpayers of the District pay all of the expense of beautifying the National Capital?

Mr. MADDEN. We will deal with that when we get to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The House has just passed on that question in connection with the proposed boulevard to the Memorial Bridge and has provided that that shall be paid for as are other expenses of the District.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. As the chairman of the District Committee the gentleman realized, did he not, that unless he agreed that this expense should be paid out of the $5,000,000 surplus which Congress provided he never could have gotten this bill reported out of the committee?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. I think the majority of the committee is in favor of parks being acquired on the 50-50 basis, but we did that in order to placate the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. You never do anything to placate "the gentleman from Texas." The gentleman from Maryland realized he could not get the bill reported out and put on the calendar unless he agreed to that, and he had to agree to it for that reason, did he not?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No; "the gentleman from Maryland" did not realize that at all.

Mr. BLANTON. But he did agree to it, did he not?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I agreed to it in the committee and I am now agreeing with the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. And after having had it passed by the House—

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The gentleman has asked for 10 minutes and I hope he will not interrupt me further.

Mr. BLANTON. I will use my own time.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What argument does the gentleman use to put a different proportion of cost on this parkway than he puts on anything else?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I tried to state the matter clearly, but owing to the noise probably the gentleman did not hear me.

Mr. BEGG. I was listening to the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Congress authorized an appropriation of $1,300,000 for this parkway.

There was provided in the authorization that one-half of it should be paid by the Federal Government and one-half by the District. Because of the lapse of time, a period of 13 years, property values increased and the authorization was insufficient, and this is a further authorization proposed of $600,000, and I am simply proposing that Congress, which provided in the original authorization that the Federal Government should pay one-half, shall provide that the Government pay one-half of this remaining $600,000 to complete the work, which means so much to the development of the National Capital park system along proper lines.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Are we not paying the Government's fair share of the District expenses in the $9,000,000 which we appropriate? If we are not, we ought to revise the figures and pay more.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman that I agree with him. If we are not paying sufficient, we ought to pay more. The lump sum is simply an arbitrary sum determined upon by the Appropriations Committee. I believe there should be an investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose we did not agree to pay anything?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. That is entirely within the jurisdiction of Congress. I am simply putting this matter up to the House as a matter of good faith. We authorized this parkway, and the authorization we made on the 50-50 basis was not sufficient, and now we are asking for a further authorization of $600,000 on the same basis.

Mr. BEGG. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose the gentleman is successful in getting through this 50-50 basis; then naturally there will have to be boulevards and everything of that kind running through this acquired land; does the gentleman intend to then come back and propose that the United States Government pay 50 per cent of that expenditure?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say to the gentleman I believe this Congress is going to determine some form of permanent fiscal relationship between the District and the Federal Government, which will take care of that proposition.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, and yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Gentlemen, I wish you would give me your attention for a moment because this is a much more important item than you imagine. The Federal Government, in addition to all of its own enterprises and its own buildings and its own improvements, has given the people of the District of Columbia for civic purposes only $218,000,000. Think of it! The Congress since 1876 has taken $218,000,000 out of the people's treasury and given it to the people of this District for their civic expenses.

Let me now tell you something else. They came in here with a plan to take about $5,000,000 of what they called a surplus in the Treasury which the District ought to have. As a matter of fact, it finally amounted to $5,300,000. I showed you through the certificate of our friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, Hon. BEN JOHNSON, who is the best-posted man in the United States on District affairs to-day—I showed you the statement of Hon. BEN JOHNSON who said that if you would properly check up the financial relations existing between the District and the United States Government, you would find that the District of Columbia owed this Government $100,000,000, and yet this Congress passed a bill giving this $5,300,000 to the District. But we put a proviso on it. You would not have passed it if you had not put on that proviso. You provided that the money should be spent for parks and playgrounds, and not a dollar of it has been spent for parks. These manipulators here in Washington came in and passed a bill providing that every year for 20 years the Congress would give the District for park purposes $1,100,000. That is the way they were going to get their additional park money.

They brought this present bill before the committee and they provided that the expense should be taken out of the Treasury half and half, but the committee agreed that that should not be done. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] would have put the bill through in that form if he could have done it, but he was not able to do it in his committee.

The committee provided that the money authorized in this bill of $600,000 should be taken out of the surplus of $5,500,000 which you gave the District. This was in accordance with your will expressed in a piece of legislation that you passed and which the President signed. Are you going to disregard your own law which you passed?

I know how easy it is to take money out of the Public Treasury, especially when you live practically in Washington, like the gentleman from Maryland does; especially when your constituents are in and out of Washington every day; especially when a great part of the 2,500 children who get their free schooling and free books here in Washington live over in Maryland. It is mighty easy to take money out of the Public Treasury for this purpose under those circumstances. I was awfully glad to hear as distinguished a gentleman as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] say he was not going to allow this move that is being attempted now to be put over this Congress. I am glad to hear it. I do not believe you will allow it either.

We ought to vote down this motion of the gentleman from Maryland, and by a unanimous vote of this House, with the exception of the gentleman from Maryland, we ought to say to the United States Senate that they can not change this House bill the way they have attempted to change it; that they are going to have to take this money out of the $5,500,000 surplus that Congress allowed.

What are you going to do about this bunch of manipulators here in Washington who are continually imposing upon the taxpayers back home. About three weeks ago we passed a measure in this House that would prevent hotels in this city from selling the streets to taxicab companies against the interests of the people of Washington, against your interests, and against the interests of your constituents who come here. There is evidence down here in one of the courts that was testified to the other day by a witness before your Senate committee, showing that the Willard Hotel received $80,000 from taxicabs to which it sold space in the street—your street, the people's street; that the Willard Hotel had a whole block reserved for its taxicabs, 14 of them, on Fourteenth Street along an entire block on the side of the Willard Hotel.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Are not these park propositions purely municipal projects for the use and benefit of the people of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, and for nothing else. Every single person in the District enjoys these parks. Did you know the Government has given this city 1,200 parks? Did you know that? Big and little. This Government has already given to the city 1,200 parks that are used here every day for the enjoyment and convenience of half a million people in Washington. I will tell you how they manipulate these things. When we passed the amendment the other day that provided that it was the policy of this Congress that the streets in front of the hotels were for public use—that no hotel should sell its space to the taxicab companies—that bill went to the Senate, and then these hotels sent their lawyer and Commissioner Fenning, who stands in with them, to the Senate committee, and said lawyer, Edward F. Colladay, said "We want this stricken out." One Senator said, "Well, that is easy; we will strike it out." And out it went.

I wish you would look into that proposition and see how much money the hotels are making every year by selling the streets in front of their hotels to the taxicab companies.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WEFALD. Are these hotels making enough out of selling the streets in front of them to pay their taxes?

Mr. BLANTON. It was testified before the Senate Committee that the Willard Hotel received $80,000 from the taxicab companies for space in front of their hotels. That was 10 per cent of the receipts of the taxicab companies.

Mr. WEFALD. It would be a great thing for the hotels in some of these smaller places if they could do that thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but what right has the Willard Hotel to Fourteenth Street any more than you have? And yet, as a Member of Congress, you can not drive down there and park on Fourteenth Street for a whole block because the space has been sold to a taxicab company by the Willard Hotel.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Without the connivance of those in charge of the administration of the District that outrage could not be perpetrated, could it?

Mr. BLANTON. I wish you knew how they are mixed up down here in the Second National Bank.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman tell us what length of time is covered by this receipt of $80,000 by the Willard Hotel?

Mr. BLANTON. They did not say for what length of time it was, and I do not know; but if I may, I will put in connection with my remarks what was said in the Senate committee.

Now, what are you going to do about this $600,000? Are you going to let it go by? Are you going to say, "Oh, yes; we will let it go; it will not cost the people of the United States much"? I want to tell you that the taxpayers of the country are going to hold you responsible for the money that is taken out of the Treasury in this way. It comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers. You ought to stop it and vote this down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that this Senate amendment should be voted down, but I do not concur with him in all of the reasons that he gives. You can very logically vote it down and you can not logically do anything else. What is the situation? In 1913 the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia shared the expenses of the District on a 50-50 basis. At this time Congress passed this park appropriation calling for $1,300,000. Congress changed its proportion of paying district expenses from time to time. For a few years it was 60-40, and last Congress a new arrangement was made. A committee of our own selection found that the Government owed the District the sum of $5,000,000. I voted for that because our own committee found that the Government owed the District that sum, and whether it was equitable or not, under the law and the facts it was an honorable obligation that we could not escape. It was furthermore provided by Congress that this money should be used for parks and schools.

Bear in mind that we changed the manner of paying District expenses by giving a lump sum, but we provided that the park system, as all other expenses, should be paid for out of that fund.

The Senate amended that in this expense and provided that this park should be paid for half by the Government and half by the District. Let us see the logic of that. The only reason they gave for such a position in their report is because it was authorized in 1913 when the 50-50 basis was in existence and that we ought to still live up and carry this out on that basis.

That does not follow. If it did follow, what would be the situation? For several years—1922, 1923, and 1924—we had a 60-40 basis. It was not contended that the appropriations that were made in those years should be borne in any other proportion than 60-40. If the logic is true because it began on a 50-50 basis, then we would be owing the District a large sum of money because for three or four years they have been paid on a 60-40 basis.

As brought out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], this Congress, in changing the arrangement and making a $9,000,000 lump-sum appropriation, must have taken into consideration these very projects, and if we are going to continue to pay any of them on a 50-50 basis, then the $9,000,000 is too much. It is just simply a method of meeting our obligations to the District of Columbia, and there is no logic, no reason, no justice in this amendment.

I do not indulge in all of the acrimony that exists in the minds of some members against the District. I think it is our home. I think we should take a pleasure in it. I do. I take a pleasure as a member of the Committee on the District in doing everything that I can to make it the best and the prettiest city in the world [applause] and with no ill feeling at all, no antagonism or prejudice against the District, but as one recognized on the committee as a friend of the District I say to you that this is not a logical conclusion drawn by the Senate, and we should not pay any part of this $600,000. We paid our part when we paid the $9,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I just want to make a business statement in respect to the pending amendment. When this parkway was commenced there was an authorization of $1,300,000 to acquire the necessary land. That authorization provided that one half of it should be paid from the Treasury of the United States and half from the District revenues, because at that time the Federal Government paid one-half of every dollar expended for any purpose in the District, whether it was the digging of a sewer or the acquiring of a park. Necessarily that expense was apportioned in that way. Later we twice changed the system, and now we take $9,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury in full of the contributions of every nature from the Federal Treasury to any expense in the District. I was the author of that lump-sum amendment when first adopted, and, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] has correctly stated, it was the purpose of that plan to make the Federal contributions definite and positive. On the one hand we did away with the returns that used to come from fees and licenses, to the extent of seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, and gave them all to the District. On the other hand, we must not start in now with the addition of a number of little dribblets out of the Federal Treasury, or large grabs, as this is, for the benefit of the District. The reason why this should all be taken out of the District fund is because we have made our $9,000,000 contribution in full of all our share in the District expenses.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] says that this is a matter in which the Federal Government should have a special interest. I think that is true. We do have a special interest in the creation of a park and in the beautifying of the city, and it is because we have an interest of that kind in many things here that we do give $9,000,000, and the $9,000,000 fulfills all of our obligations. On the other hand, when we come to digging a sewer in front of some landowner's home, I submit that is not a thing of very much interest to the Nation at large; and whether the District authorities use the $9,000,000 for sewers or parks is not our concern. We have fulfilled our obligation to the District when we have contributed the $9,000,000.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] emphasizes the fact that after we get this land it will be under the supervision and care of an Army officer. As a matter of fact, the expense of that supervision and care is paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and our $9,000,000, except the salary of that Army officer, and we donate that to the District, because he is an Army officer. They gain to that extent.

I hope the House will not start in to undermine the lump-sum system of contributions to the District by granting these appeals that will be made continually if you grant this one. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This particular sum of $600,000 was a part of the sum that Congress set aside as owing to the District, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is in addition. There was an original authorization of $1,300,000. That has been exhausted, and this is an additional authorization.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is a part of the surplus fund, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. As the House passed it, it is to be taken out of the funds in the District known as the surplus fund.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the surplus fund was created by settlement made by this Congress, was it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. That was created by a settlement made with the District. The final settlement showed some five or six million dollars due the District. We paid the bill, but at the time there was adopted an amendment which I offered which provided that the money in that fund should be used for parks and schools. While a good deal has been used for schools, nothing has been used as yet for parks, until this bill now proposes that this $600,000 shall come from that fund. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN] seeks to have half of it come out of the Federal Treasury instead.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I shall take three minutes. There is $600,000 in the District treasury awaiting this authorization to be made. Of course, if you transfer $300,000 of this obligation to the Federal Treasury, there would be still $300,000 of the $600,000 left to the credit of the District. That naturally would please the people of the District, but they do not expect you to do it. They are holding the money awaiting the appropriation of $600,000, and they are expecting that this bill will authorize them to use the $600,000 balance which they have on hand in this surplus fund for the purchase of the land for this park.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Who is holding the funds?

Mr. MADDEN. The District people know that the obligation is there.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. But who is holding the money?

Mr. MADDEN. The Treasury of the United States is holding it for the people of the District, and the people of the District, through their officials, say that they expect the $600,000 to be used to buy this land, but the gentleman from Maryland is trying to relieve the people of the District from $300,000 of this obligation and place it on the States.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And this $600,000 is a part of that surplus due to the District?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And this is a proposition to take $300,000 out of the Treasury and pay one-half of it?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and I am opposed to that, and so is everyone else who understands the facts, except the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was the $600,000 that we gave to the District by settlement accumulated during the time when we had the 50-50 arrangement?

Mr. MADDEN. They presume to say we did not pay our proportionate obligation, and that therefore we owed them between four and five million dollars. This $600,000 is part of that, and was set apart for park purposes, and we propose to use it for that, and we ought not to use it for any other purpose, and the officials of the District do not propose to do so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, of course, I recognize the futility of opposing the powerful arguments which have been presented to the House by some of the leaders, but I do want to draw attention to the injustice which has been done the District and the possibility of remedying it through the acceptance of this amendment. If you will remember, this House, after an exhaustive debate, with the idea of beautifying the city of Washington not for the people of Washington alone but for the people of the United States, authorized an appropriation of $1,100,000 each year for 20 years to carry out a concrete, comprehensive program of improvement and to secure lands available for parks which were rapidly being withdrawn from the market. Now, what happened? Although that bill was passed by the Senate and the House after an exhaustive debate, and signed by the President, the Committee on Appropriations, using their power and prerogatives, I suppose, reduced that amount to $600,000 last year, and then again this year reduced it to $600,000, thereby taking away from the District $900,000 to which the District was rightly entitled by the action of the House for the development of the park system.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think if we were to continue to appropriate every dollar that is authorized there would not be money enough in the world to pay the bills?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, I agree with the gentleman ninety-nine times out of one hundred, but this is the one hundredth time when I do not agree with him. I think it is a most penurious policy, a most mistaken policy, not to look ahead to the future and acquire such lands in the District that are on the market to-day at a reasonable price which can not possibly be acquired five years from to-day. This is the Capital of the Nation. It is not the city of Washington alone. The gentleman from Texas in making his argument referred again and again to "my streets" and "your streets," and they are my streets and your streets as much as they are the streets of the people of the city of Washington. We want to remember above all that this is the Capital of the Nation; that every citizen in the Nation has an interest in it; and that every citizen in the Nation has a pride in it. We can not afford to lose certain parcels of property necessary to complete a park program. They are available to-day and to secure them would secure the future requirements of the District. It is a mistaken policy not to do so. I believe when we deprive the District of Columbia of $900,000 that it is only a fair proposition—although I believe in the lump sum absolutely; I believe in the logic of the gentleman from Kentucky and also the gentleman from Michigan—I believe this is a just and fair recompense to the District for what we have given and then taken away.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, because we have saved the taxpayers of the District from the expenditure of $400,000 a year for several years, is that any reason why we should save a further $300,000 and take it out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman takes a provincial view of the matter. I asked the gentleman to go to Cleveland, to go to Boston, to go to Detroit, to go to Chicago, go to Cincinnati, go to any large city and see how much money they have paid for the development of their park system. The people of Boston paid over $75,000,000 over a period of 25 years. Take the city of Cleveland—

Mr. MADDEN. They pay it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; and they are perfectly willing to pay their share for the development of a national system in the District.

Mr. MADDEN. Then let the people here pay it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The people here will pay their share of it. The city of Cleveland spent over $50,000,000, the city of Cincinnati over $60,000,000, and I do not know how much the city of Chicago spent. It was this argument on the floor of the House that induced Members to vote for the $1,100,000 per annum for park purposes in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the yeas appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ZIHLMAN) there were—yeas 20, noes 105.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the House ask for a conference.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The House just having refused to concur, that is tantamount to disagreeing to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question merely to ask for a conference. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ZIHLMAN, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. BLANTON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

RECORDER OF DEEDS AND REGISTER OF WILLS

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9685) providing for expenses of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia, with a Senate amendment, and ask that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9685) providing for expenses of the recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves to concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. It is not quite so long. It is very little different.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. What does the gentleman expect to do about amendment 62?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is to come up for a separate vote. That is not in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the gentleman expect to do about it?

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall move to recede and concur, and thereafter abide by the decision of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I think there ought to be a larger attendance here to hear this discussion.

Mr. DOWELL. I am hoping that the House will defeat this amendment after an explanation has been made of what it does.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 20, 28, 35, 45, 49, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 11, 14, 15, 18, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 32, 34, 37, 38, 39, 42, 44, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 59, 60, and 63, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$810,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert: "four hundred and seventy-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$106,875"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$3,025,000, exclusive of tribal funds"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the employment of special counsel to assist State and Federal authorities in the prosecution of the person or persons implicated in the crimes resulting in the murder of Osage Indians and for expenses incident to such prosecution, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, to be paid from funds held by the United States in trust for said Indians, to be expended with the approval of, and under the supervision of, the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment add the following: ", to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "within such terms of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, in any event not more than forty years from the date of public notice hereinafter referred to, and the execution of said contract or contracts shall have been confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. Upon such confirmation of such contract as to any one of such projects, the construction thereof shall proceed in accordance with any appropriations therefor provided for in this act. Prior to or in connection with the settlement and development of each of these projects, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to enter into agreement with the proper authorities of the State or States wherein said projects or divisions are located whereby such State or States shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$72,000, and no part of this amount shall be available for maintenance and operation of the Glasgow Division after December 31, 1926, unless a contract or contracts in form approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall have been made with an irrigation district or with irrigation districts organized under State law providing for payment of construction and operation and maintenance charges for such district or districts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "within such terms of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, in any event not more than 40 years from the date of public notice hereinafter referred to, and the execution of said contract or contracts shall have been confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. Prior to or in connection with the settlement and development of each of these projects, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to enter into agreement with the proper authorities of the State whereby such State shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $40,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,431,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For investigations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Reclamation to obtain necessary information to determine how arid and semiarid, swamp, and cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States may be best developed, as authorized by subsection R, section 4, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1924, approved December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 704), including the general objects of expenditure enumerated and permitted under the second paragraph in this act under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation,' and including mileage for motor cycles and automobiles at the rates and under the conditions authorized herein in connection with reclamation projects, $15,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,819,440"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 2. Appropriations herein made for field work under the General Land Office, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Geological Survey, and the National Park Service shall be available for the hire, with or without personal services, of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 26, 31, 46, 62, 64, 65, and 66.

STATEMENT

The managers, on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1, relating to the limitation on the payment of salaries under the classification act: Provides that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade, advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade, but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate, instead of leaving such advances to the discretion of the Personnel Classification Board, as was proposed by the Senate.

On No. 2: Accepts the language proposed by the Senate specifically authorizing use of the contingent fund of the department for payment for personal services of temporary or emergency telephone operators.

On Nos. 3 and 4: Accepts the Senate proposal increasing from $600, the House figure, to $1,000 the authorization for transfer from appropriations elsewhere made in the bill for Freedmen's Hospital for contingent expenses of that institution.

On No. 5: Appropriates $115,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $123,000, as proposed by the Senate, for printing and binding for various bureaus, etc., in the department.

On No. 6: Appropriates $810,000, as recommended by the Budget, instead of $800,000, as proposed by the House, and $830,000 as proposed by the Senate, for surveying of public lands.

On No. 7: Appropriates $430,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $445,000, as proposed by the Senate, for protection of public lands, etc.

On No. 8: Accepts the Senate language making clear the limitation upon expenses of certain tribal attorneys.

On No. 9: Reappropriates for construction of the Coolidge Dam in Arizona the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1926, instead of such reappropriation and a new appropriation of $450,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13: Accepts without material alteration the language proposed by the House in connection with the appropriation for construction of power plant and for other construction purposes on the Flathead irrigation project in Montana.

On No. 14: Accepts the provision inserted by the Senate appropriating $22,000 for remodeling, repairing, and improving the Pawnee Indian School plant in Oklahoma.

On No. 15: Accepts the Senate amendment striking out the statement of acreage of land to be purchased under the appropriation for Sherman Institute in California.

On Nos. 16 and 17: Appropriates for 475 pupils instead of 450, as proposed by the House, and 500, as proposed by the Senate, for the nonreservation Indian boarding school at Genoa, Nebr., and appropriates $106,875, instead of $101,250, as proposed by the House, and $112,500, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 18: Accepts language proposed by the Senate appropriating funds remaining to the credit of the Cherokee Tribe or Nation not to exceed $3,000 for purchasing additional land adjacent to the Sequoi Orphan Training School, Oklahoma, and for certain building repairs.

On No. 19: Corrects the total for nonreservation boarding schools, appropriating $3,025,000 instead of $3,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $3,033,750, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 20 and 21: Eliminates, under relief of distress and conservation of health for the Indians, the item of $40,000 for remodeling the school plant at the Umatilla Agency and converting same into a sanatorium, but retains the total at $756,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $732,750, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 22, 23, and 25: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, from the tribal funds of the Crow Indians, instead of $90,000, as proposed by the House, for support and civilization.

On No. 24: Accepts the Senate language making the appropriation of $35,000 of tribal funds for the Shoshone Reservation for improving the domestic water supply available only for the agency and for irrigation service.

On No. 27: Appropriates $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Osage Indians for employment of special counsel to assist in the prosecution of persons charged with certain crimes, as proposed by the Senate, with an amendment making such appropriation available also for other expenses of such prosecution.

On No. 28: Strikes out the Senate language appropriating $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Navajo Indians for maintenance and repair of the highway from Gallup to Shiprock, N. Mex.

On No. 29: Appropriates from the tribal funds of the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin for a per capita payment, as proposed by the Senate, with an amendment making such appropriation immediately available.

On Nos. 30 and 67: Strikes out the language of the House in connection with the appropriation for the Bureau of Reclamation authorizing such funds to be used for employment of men with teams, automobiles, or other facilities and accepts the language proposed by the Senate at the end of the bill modifying it in such manner as to definitely authorize expenditure for such purposes from appropriations made in the bill for the General Land Office, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Reclamation, Geological Survey, and the National Park Service.

On Nos. 32, 33, and 45: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate in amendment 45 providing for an authorization of $500,000 and an immediate appropriation of $100,000 from the reclamation fund for the purpose of experimental financing of new settlers upon two unnamed existing Federal reclamation projects. Under Senate amendment 33 strikes out the House language providing for cooperation with the States and with corporations organized for that purpose in promoting the development and settlement of the Sun River, Owyhee, and Baker, new projects. Inserts new language that provides, not as a condition precedent to the expenditure of the funds for construction purposes for these new projects but prior to and in connection with the settlement and development thereof, for cooperation with the States in promoting the settlement of the projects and in the securing and selecting of settlers. Strikes out the Senate language under amendment 33 providing for repayment of construction costs on those new projects under the 5 per cent of gross crop-return plan, and accepts the House language providing for such repayment within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, with an amendment providing that such period shall not be more than 40 years. Retains the House language requiring that the execution of the contract provided for as a condition precedent to the expenditure of the funds for construction purposes of these new projects shall be confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, and adds new language mandatory in character requiring that when such condition precedent, the execution of the required contract and its confirmation, shall have been complied with, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed to construct the projects referred to.

On No. 34: Corrects a date.

On No. 35: Strikes out the Senate language appropriating $450,000 for the Hillcrest project in Idaho.

On No. 36: Appropriates $72,000 for the Milk River project in Montana, as proposed by the House, instead of $84,000, as proposed by the Senate, and makes same available for the Glasgow division until December 31, 1926, and thereafter only available upon execution of a contract with the district providing for payment of charges by such district instead of providing for the unrestricted operation of the Glasgow division through the fiscal year 1927, as provided by the Senate, and instead of elimination of any expenditure of Federal funds for the operation of that division during the fiscal year 1927, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 37, 38, and 39: Appropriates $1,500,000 for the North Platte project, Nebraska-Wyoming, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,800,000, as proposed by the House, and accepts certain clarifying language with reference to the limitations attached to it, the difference in money having been transferred to the recent deficiency appropriation bill.

On No. 40: Retains the House language requiring repayment of the construction costs within such term of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, as provided by the House, with an amendment limiting the period to 40 years. Provides that the contract required to be made with irrigators on the Spanish Springs division before water shall be delivered to them shall be confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, as provided by the House. Strikes out the language proposed by the House providing for execution of a contract with the State of Nevada whereby the State should assume the duty and responsibility of promoting the development and settlement of the division, etc., and the State or a corporation should provide the funds necessary for that purpose, and inserts new language authorizing the Secretary of the Interior prior to or in connection with the settlement and development of the project to enter into agreement with the State for cooperation in promoting the settlement of the project after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers.

On No. 41: Appropriates $40,000 for the Belle Fourche project in South Dakota, as proposed by the House, instead of $85,000, as proposed by the Senate, and makes the funds available throughout the fiscal year 1927, as proposed by the Senate, instead of until December 30, 1926, as proposed by the House.

On No. 42: Accepts the Senate language, including the Utah Lake control.

On No. 43: Appropriates $50,000 for the Riverton project in Wyoming, instead of no appropriation by the House and $250,000 proposed by the Senate.

On No. 44: Accepts Senate language with reference to Shoshone project, Wyoming, which makes the appropriations for that project available for the entire project, instead of limiting it to the Frannie and Garland divisions, as proposed by the House.

On No. 47: Strikes out the language proposed by the House permitting payment of expenses of transfer of personal effects of employees of the Reclamation Service.

On No. 48: Change of total.

On No. 49: Strikes out the language proposed by the Senate appropriating $25,000 in connection with the Columbia Basin project in the State of Washington.

On No. 50: Accepts Senate language appropriating $15,000 for investigations concerning reclamation of arid and semiarid swamp and cut-over timberlands in any of the States, with a clarifying amendment as to expenditures thereunder.

On Nos. 51, 52, 53, and 54: Appropriates $451,700, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $525,000, as proposed by the House, for topographic surveys, the difference having been transferred to the recent deficiency appropriation bill.

On Nos. 55 and 56: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $63,000, as proposed by the Senate, for investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska.

On No. 57: Appropriates $240,000, as estimated and as proposed by the Senate, for classification of enlarged homestead lands, instead of $200,000, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 58, 59, and 60: Accepts Senate clarifying language concerning appropriations and transfer of funds for the Geological Survey.

On No. 61: Change of total.

On No. 63: Accepts the language of the Senate making $10,000 of the appropriation for emergencies caused by forest insects within national parks immediately available for the purchase of equipment.

The committee of conference has not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 26: Increasing the appropriation for the support of the Osage Agency $15,000 for the purpose of complying with the Osage Act of 1924 with reference to investment of certain impounded Osage Indian funds and providing for allowance of certain travel expenses of employees of the Osage Agency.

On No. 31: Authorizing the Secretary of the Interior until June 30, 1927, to extend the time for payment of certain charges upon reclamation projects.

On No. 46: Providing for the appointment of a Commissioner of Reclamation, his qualifications, and his salary.

On No. 62: Authorizing use of certain unexpended funds heretofore apportioned to the State of Montana for construction of a highway through the Beartooth National Forest and the Shoshone National Forest to Cooke City in Montana, adjacent to the Yellowstone National Park.

On No. 64: Makes appropriations of the National Park Service available for expenses of depositing public money.

On No. 65: Making certain appropriations for Howard University.

On No. 66: Making the miscellaneous appropriation for Freedmen's Hospital available to the extent of not more than $200 for purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers, and authorizing payments therefor in advance.

LOUIS CRAMTON,
FRANK MURPHY,
C. D. CARTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record, with permission to insert certain letters and other statements that are germane.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks and insert certain letters and other statements indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the financial statement, which I will insert showing effect of the action of the conferees and of the action I shall ask the House to take with reference to Howard University upon Senate amendments involving appropriations in this bill, shows an increase of $6,700 over the bill as it passed the House and $1,300,500 below the bill as it passed the Senate. For fair comparison, however, it should be understood that the decreases of $300,000 in connection with the North Platte and $73,300 in connection with topographic surveys are apparent rather than real, those amounts having transferred to the recent deficiency bill. At the same time, the increase of $218,000 for Howard University, if granted, will be apparent rather than real, so far as the attitude of the House committee is concerned, as that is the amount that was recommended to the House by your committee and stricken out in the House on a point of order. In any event, the bill is retained remarkably near the House figure. The bill as agreed upon, including the provision for Howard University, which I will ask the House to approve, totals $228,679,438, as against $247,627,609 for the fiscal year 1926. The bill for the fiscal year 1926, however, includes $4,773,160 for the Patent Office and the Bureau of Mines, which have been transferred to the Department of Commerce, and hence no provision for those bureaus is found in the 1927 bill. The bill for 1926 is $242,854,449, omitting those two bureaus, and the amount recommended by the conference is $14,175,011 below that.

I will insert also a table showing the annual appropriations for the Department of the Interior beginning with 1916, setting forth therein some division of the sources and purposes of such appropriations:

I do not desire to take the time of the House unduly in the presentation of the matters in the report. I do, however, want to call attention to two or three things of greatest importance, and I shall insert some further discussion of others in the RECORD, so that there may be a record of the matters and the reasons that led the House conferees to the position which they took. Especially I desire to call the attention of the House to the appropriation for the construction of the Coolidge Dam in connection with the San Carlos irrigation project.

CONSTRUCTION OF COOLIDGE DAM

The Coolidge Dam, to serve about 80,000 acres in the San Carlos project in Arizona, was authorized by the act of June 7, 1924. The first appropriation for it was $450,000 carried in the Interior bill for the current year, of which it is estimated $325,000 or more will remain unexpended at the close of this fiscal year, and if not reappropriated, it would lapse. The Budget recommended a new appropriation of $450,000 for 1927 with no recommendation for reappropriation of such unexpended balance. Our committee recommended a reappropriation of such unexpended balance of $325,000 and omitted any new appropriation. In the Senate amendment was agreed to continuing the reappropriation, but providing for the $450,000 additional. This has had careful consideration in conference and an agreement has been reached accepting the House provision, the Senate receding from the proposed new appropriation of $450,000.

Because of certain political exigencies, this matter has had a great deal of publicity in the State of Arizona and the facts of the case have been presented to the people of that State with a disregard of accuracy that has been confusing to the good people of that State, to say the least. One John R. Towles is conducting a press bureau at Phoenix, Ariz., describing himself in the flood of press releases that proceeds from that bureau as collector of internal revenue; and I understand through rumor that, in addition to his onerous duties as collector of internal revenue, he finds time for some political activities. In fact, as I understand, one Frank R. Stewart, one of the best Republicans in the State of Arizona, who served several years as collector of internal revenue to the perfect satisfaction of the patrons of the office and the Treasury Department, being rated as one of the ablest men in the service, was recently removed and Mr. Towles appointed to succeed him, because Stewart did not devote sufficient time to political activities. In one such release from this bureau, marked "News—Release immediately," one reads, after setting forth some figures of the estimated cost of certain proposed work:

Mr. Towles added that this does not agree with the conditions that a recent editorial in a local paper would set forth, in which Congressman CRAMTON, of Michigan, is pictured as a friend of Arizona. "Though it may be true that CRAMTON did vote in favor of the project at first, it is probable that he obstructed speedy progress of construction of the project when, upon his recommendations, the House Committee on Appropriations eliminated the additional $450,000 appropriation sought for by Senators ASHBURST and CAMERON," Towles said. "Mr. CRAMTON would have it that the amount to be expended for the project would be the residue left over from last year's appropriation. This, as shown by the estimate of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, would be quite insufficient to bring about the speedy completion of the project, holding back the reclamation of about 100,000 acres of land for a year or more, to the inconvenience of and loss to many Indians and settlers in the valley of the Gila River," he added. "A good test of the sincerity of Mr. CRAMTON, or any other Senator or Congressman, for the speedy completion of the San Carlos project will be the position he takes in voting upon the Cameron amendment for the $450,000 in addition to the unexpended balance from last year's appropriation when it reaches the conference of the two bodies of Congress. Mr. CRAMTON will be one of the three conferees from the House," Towles concluded.

Inspired by such articles, the Miami Silver Belt, a prominent Democratic newspaper of that State, which appears in close sympathy with the political activities of Mr. Towles, says that I have "been prominent in every movement for the purpose of delaying the project" and have "overlooked no opportunity offered by parliamentary tactics to speak against beginning of work on the Coolidge Dam," and piously comes nearer to prayer than I imagine is the customary habit of the editor by exclaiming, "God save us in Arizona from friends of the Cramton type." The Silver Belt does occasionally have a germ of truth in its fulminations, and says in one of its editorials:

There is considerable evidence that certain interests in Arizona are making a political football of the Coolidge Dam appropriation.

However true that may be, Mr. Towles and his ally, the editor of the Democratic Silver Belt, should know. Certainly Mr. Towles and his political chief are for some reason grossly misrepresenting the House action in this matter.

Half of the lands to receive water from this reservoir are owned by the Pima Indians and half by whites. The Pima Indians were agriculturists, using irrigation before white men came to this continent. They are agriculturists to-day, while I have seen many of their fields, fenced, barren, due to insufficient water supply, encroachments by whites having taken the water before it reaches the Pimas. I am very much in sympathy with this program which will assure the Pimas of sufficient water and thereby perform what is really an obligation upon our people. I was glad to cooperate with Congressman HAYDEN in securing passage of this bill through the House. The act authorizing construction of this reservoir has also this provision for repayment, so far as the lands in white ownership are concerned:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior shall, by public notice, announce the date when water is available for lands in private ownership under the project and the amount of the construction charge per irrigable acre against the same, which charge shall be payable in annual installments, the first installment to be 5 per cent of the total charge and be due and payable on the 1st day of December of the third year following the date of said public notice, the remainder of the construction charge, with interest on deferred amounts from date of said public notice at 4 per cent per annum, to be amortized by payment on each December 1 thereafter of 5 per cent of said remainder until the obligation is paid in full.

So far as the lands in white ownership are concerned, therefore, this project is being built upon business principles. We are loaning the money, and the white landowners will repay it with interest. This provision was inserted in the act of authorization by the House and is a refreshing exception among western irrigation projects and adds further to my interest in and sympathy with this project.

The political propaganda which has gone over Arizona from the office of Mr. Towles is to the effect that our committee is niggardly in its treatment of the San Carlos project and desirous of delaying and handicapping it as much as possible. The truth is that our committee is very friendly to the San Carlos project and means to promote its construction as rapidly as possible with a due regard to safeguarding the interests of the Government and the water users, who eventually have to pay, and while Towles has been bushwhacking, our committee has been cooperating in an effort that has just successfully terminated that will save these water users a million dollars and clears the way for an energetic construction program.

A very thorough hearing on the estimates for this project was held by our committee December 1, 1925, at which time were present Mr. Edgar B. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Mr. M. W. Reed, chief engineer in charge of irrigation; Congressman HAYDEN, of Arizona; and others. In those hearings I stated explicitly the purpose of our committee to build the project in the most economical fashion possible, which could only be done by making the appropriations fit the proper construction units so that the construction would not be dribbled out over a series of years. We stated then that we wanted all the preliminaries disposed of, wanted to be sure that we were started right, and then would want to see the thing move. At the time of those hearings it developed that one very important preliminary had not yet been disposed of. The total cost of this reservoir has been estimated to be $5,500,000. Of this amount about $2,000,000, or fully one-third of the total cost of the project, consists of the cost of moving the tracks of one of the lines of the Southern Pacific which now for a distance of 14 miles lie on the bed of the proposed reservoir. It developed in our hearings that it was still uncertain what part, if any, of the cost of moving these tracks would be borne by the railroad company. Based upon our experience in connection with other irrigation projects, and the facts that developed in our hearings as to this project, it was the feeling of our committee that one-half of the cost of moving these tracks should be borne by the railroad company. We were advised by Congressman HAYDEN that he had been in touch with one or more officials of the Southern Pacific and that he felt sure that the attitude of that company would prove to be entirely satisfactory. We were advised by the Indian Bureau that the preliminary survey by the bureau and by the railroad as the basis of estimate as to the probable cost of such change of location had about reached the point where negotiations with the company on the question of division of such expense could actively proceed. We did not believe it desirable to provide any large appropriation for construction of the dam while this very important preliminary remained uncertain and unsettled. It seemed to us due the water users, who must eventually pay the bill, that we should take every step to properly safeguard their interests in this matter. The reappropriation of $325,000 would amply provide for carrying on all of the necessary preliminaries. We felt any further appropriation for active prosecution of the work of construction should wait the making of a contract with the railroad company. The following appears on page 263 of the hearings of December 1:

There seems to be no reason why a definite understanding could not be arrived at with the railroad between now and next April or May. This committee feels that the expenditure chargeable to the project in connection with the relocation of that railroad right of way is a very important item as affecting the burdens which these landowners under the project must assume and has a very material effect upon the success of the project that might be involved. We do feel (I do, and I think I am not saying too much in speaking for the committee) that the railroad company should cooperate in that work in a very liberal manner. It occurs to us now that a half-and-half proposition, as I have referred to before, would be entirely equitable. It is very possible that this committee would not want at this time to provide an appropriation for the project until we know what terms can be secured with the railroad company. It may be that the cost would be prohibitive. But we could reappropriate this unexpended balance with the understanding, either expressed in the act or made a matter of record here, that the $375,000 would not be used in the relocation of the railroad tracks, but would only be used in connection with other construction work. Then, if you succeed in getting a contract with the railroad company, the Indian Office can go to the Budget in the spring with that contract and ask an appropriation to enable the Indian Office to comply with the contract; and if the Budget approves an estimate for that purpose and it comes to Congress, we, then, will have before us the definite terms of the contract; and if Congress then does not feel justified in approving of such a contract and such an expenditure for that purpose, of course, the appropriation to carry it out would not be made; the proceeding would stop. On the other hand, if the contract did appeal to Congress as equitable and one that the project can stand, the appropriation could be approved, and you would not have lost any time. In other words, there does not seem to be any reason, Mr. Reed, for finally passing in this bill upon this question of our contribution to the removing of that right of way or transfer of the right of way. In your judgment, Mr. Reed, that would not embarrass your operations if final action on that were deferred possibly to a deficiency item?

MR. REED. No, sir; if that program as laid out before you is carried out, it would accomplish the same thing we proposed in the request that we made for an appropriation.

We therefore omitted from the bill any appropriation except the reappropriation of $325,000. This was nearly as much as the Budget estimate of $450,000, but we further manifested our interest in the project by emphasizing the need of an early understanding with the railroad company and the assurance of our favorable attitude toward any necessary appropriation for construction in the last deficiency bill of the session if a satisfactory contract with the railroad company should be negotiated in the meantime.

I am very glad, indeed, to be able to announce to the House at the time of presenting this report that in the past few days, in fact within a few hours after the conferees had reached a full agreement on this bill, the Bureau of Indian Affairs arrived at a very satisfactory understanding with the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., and a contract has been signed by the Secretary of the Interior and that company providing that for a flat sum of $1,000,000 the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. will carry out the necessary removal of the tracks without further expense to the project, or they will remove the tracks on a 50-50 basis, the Secretary of the Interior being given six months from date of the contract in which to elect. The cost of removing these tracks has been estimated from $1,700,000 to $2,336,000. It is the belief of Mr. Paul Shoup, executive vice president of the Southern Pacific, that the cost will be a little better than $2,000,000, of which the $1,000,000 figure suggested would be one-half. The Government has six months in which to decide whether to accept this figure or to take its chance and pay half of the cost, whether it be more or less than $2,000,000. I think the matter is of sufficient importance, so that I insert here the complete contract referred to. (See Exhibit B.) The signing of this contract makes certain the reduction of the cost of the project to the landowners to the extent of approximately $1,000,000, or about $12.50 per acre, a very material aid in the success of the project.

While our committee feels a very real satisfaction in the successful outcome of the negotiations and the fact that these negotiations have been concluded in time to permit of consideration of a supplemental estimate for construction work on the dam in the pending deficiency appropriation bill, we are frank to admit the credit for the successful outcome of those negotiations lies with Hon. Charles H. Burke, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has been very zealous in promoting and expediting the negotiations and very insistent upon proper consideration of the financial interests of the landowners, and to Mr. Paul Shoup, executive vice president of the Southern Pacific, and his colleagues in the management of that great railway system, who have shown such a commendable interest in the development of this territory tributary to their system. It is due to the interest of Commissioner Burke and Mr. Shoup that negotiations, which in many cases between the Government and a great corporation consume unending months, have in this case, through desire on both sides to do the fair thing and promote this worthy project, been consummated in a remarkably short time.

There were certain conditions in the San Carlos act with reference to appraisal of the lands of the whites, and so forth, that were set forth in section 4 of that act. The negotiations relative to these conditions have been progressing satisfactorily and are well on the way to favorable disposition. These conditions are not conditions precedent to the construction of the dam, but are precedent to any "construction on account of any lands in private ownership." The work of constructing the dam does not need to be held back for performance of the conditions in section 4, but, on the contrary, should not be held back because of the urgent need which the Indians have for this water, and the Indians are not parties to performance of those conditions.

The signing of this contract with the Southern Pacific by which half of the cost of the relocation of the tracks is borne by that company clears the way, and the engineering plans for the structure being practically complete the fiscal year 1927 should see a great start made upon the actual construction of the dam. For this purpose the $450,000 which was proposed in the Senate would have been insufficient. There is opportunity now for the Indian Bureau to present its construction program to the Budget, with a view to presentation of estimates to Congress for inclusion in the pending deficiency bill of the amount needed for construction purposes on the dam under the most economical construction program. Such an appropriation might properly follow the splendid exhibition of cooperation between the Indian Bureau and the Southern Pacific which we have just witnessed, and thereby expedite the completion of this important work a full year sooner than would otherwise be the case.

SAN CARLOS INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT

Contract for payment of damages to Southern Pacific Co. due to necessity of removing part of its Arizona eastern branch from Coolidge Reservoir site.

Memorandum of agreement entered into this 15th day of April, 1926, pursuant to the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 475-476), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, between the United States of America, hereinafter called the United States, represented by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Southern Pacific Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kentucky, hereinafter called the railroad, its successors, and assigns:

Witnesseth, the parties hereto hereby mutually covenant and agree as follows:

The railroad shall release to the United States that part of its present right of way of its Arizona eastern branch and its rights to its station and yard grounds and any and all other rights which it may have within the site of the so-called Coolidge Reservoir, which is to be constructed under the aforementioned act of Congress on the Gila River in Arizona.

2. The United States shall provide the railroad, free of cost, an adequate and complete right of way for its road as it shall be relocated around said reservoir site, and shall also provide adequate and complete station and yard grounds for said relocated line, all as the Secretary of the Interior may be authorized to do by existing law and in conformity with the rules, regulations, and practices hereunder.

3. The railroad shall have the right to, and shall retain and operate its existing lines through said reservoir site until its relocated line is built and ready for operation, and said relocated line shall be thus built and ready in ample time to permit of the flooding of the present line as soon as the Coolidge Dam, so called, is capable of backing up the water in the reservoir to that extent.

4. In full payment of damages due the railroad, owing to the construction of the said reservoir and the operation thereof by raising the water level in said reservoir to or holding it at 2,528 feet above sea level (said elevation being that used as controlling the so-called Indian Service railway survey made by Thomas Guyn between May 20 and October 1, 1925, and described in his report of said survey which was transmitted to C. R. Olberg, assistant chief engineer of the Indian Service, on October 10, 1925), the United States shall compensate the railroad in either of the two following ways: (1) By paying the railroad the sum of $1,000,000; and if this method of payment is selected by the United States the said sum shall be paid to the railroad as it shall be appropriated by Congress and shall be needed and requested by the railroad to meet the expense of building the new road as construction thereon progresses; (2) by paying the railroad one-half of the actual cost of building said new road, said payment by the United States, however, not to exceed in any event the sum of $1,200,000; and if this method is selected said payments shall likewise be made as money therefor shall be appropriated by Congress and as the same shall be needed and requested by the railroad as construction work on said new road progresses. Such costs shall be ascertained by the use of standard engineering and construction methods and shall be the full cost of building said new road, less the salvage value of the old road. In case of any dispute as to such costs or such value, the same shall be settled by three arbitrators, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and one by the railroad and the third by those thus selected. The Secretary of the Interior agrees that within six months from the date hereof he will notify the railroad in writing of the method of compensation determined upon by the United States.

In witness whereof, the parties have hereto signed their names the day and year first above written.

Secretary of the Interior.

Executive Vice President.

THE NEW RECLAMATION PROJECTS

This conference report presents a final statement of the terms on which five new reclamation projects are to be constructed, namely, the Owyhee, Vale, and Baker projects in Oregon; Spanish Springs in Nevada; and new divisions of the Sun River in Montana. The House will recall that in the deficiency act approved December 5, 1924, the so-called fact finders' reclamation act was inserted and passed under the club of threatened filibuster in the Senate without any opportunity being given the House to consider the legislation therein proposed. At the same time four of these five reclamation projects and one other—the Kittitas in the State of Washington—were initiated, only one of them having been approved at that time by the department or the Budget and no hearing having been held before any committee of Congress with reference to such projects except one or two. When the Committee on Appropriations took up consideration of the Interior bill for the fiscal year 1926, careful consideration was given to proposed appropriations for construction of these projects. In those hearings the commissioner of reclamation, Doctor Mead, declared the fact finders' bill, as above referred to, to be insufficient and inadequate to properly protect the proposed new projects, and declared them all not feasible in the absence of further protection.

The fact finders' act had changed the provision for repayment of the construction costs which had been payable in 20 years without interest, fixing such repayment at the rate of 5 per cent of the gross crop return. In connection with these projects, Doctor Mead gave it as his opinion that the repayment under that plan would vary from 75 to 138 years, all without interest. Our committee felt it impossible to consider construction of new projects under any such repayment plan, passing on for three or four generations the repayment of charges, without interest, the money belonging to a fund alleged to be a revolving fund. While the reclamation policy was inaugurated with the declaration that it was intended to serve public lands, the lands involved in these projects are chiefly private lands, with the exception of the Spanish Springs project. There has been in the law no adequate protection for the intending settler as against speculative values being placed upon such lands by the owners. In other words, the easier the terms made by the Government in connection with repayment of the cost of the water rights the greater the amount of cream that could be skimmed off by the land speculator and the greater the difficulty of making the project successful and returning to the reclamation fund the construction costs.

Previously the Government has generally been doing business with individual water users, and the difficulty of collection of operation and maintenance charges, as well as construction charges, has been materially increased thereby. To meet these difficulties and to safeguard these proposed new projects in these particulars our committee proposed, in connection with the appropriations for such projects, that the money should not be available for construction purposes until in each case a contract should be made with a duly constituted irrigation district, which contract should provide for repayment of construction charges on terms approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which we were assured would be for a stated period. Further, that such contract should provide for an appraisal of the private lands in the project, with authority given the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon the price at which any land in the project should be sold until the time should arrive when half of the construction cost of the project had been returned to the Government.

At that time a movement appeared to be making much headway in Congress for the loan of money from the reclamation fund to settlers upon reclamation projects. This was recommended by the Commissioner of Reclamation to an extent to be practically paternalistic, involving a loan of several thousand dollars to each new settler and placing, as well, the work of leveling and partial development of the farm units upon the Government. At the same time the report of the fact finders' commission, approved by the department, was recommending that over $25,000,000 of charges against a great number of projects should be wiped off the slate under a so-called readjustment scheme. Our committee felt that while some measure of credit upon easier terms than generally is possible on these projects would be of value for their successful development, this burden should not be placed upon the reclamation fund or the Federal Government. The financial strain would be greater than that fund properly can now sustain in connection with its other burdens existent and proposed. The percentage of loss would be very large because of the hazardous conditions that would surround the loans, particularly when the operations are so far removed from Washington and when political and congressional influence would operate to secure equality of credit when equality of conditions requiring credit might be lacking.

As an offset, therefore, to this Federal financing scheme our committee proposed cooperation between the Federal Government and the States and localities interested, whereby such States and localities should assume the duties and responsibilities of promoting the development and settlement of the projects and the securing, selecting, and financing of settlers. After a very prolonged conference on the bill, which delayed its final enactment until the closing day of the last Congress, these provisions were agreed to quite substantially. The idea of State financing of the settlers was in part suggested to our committee by the fact that the State of Washington had already its land settlement act and a fund for the financing of settlers upon certain of its projects. During the past year the requirement of compliance with the conditions above set forth as to the Kittitas project in the State of Washington has been the occasion of considerable controversy in that State. The matter was there worked out by the organization of a corporation with a capital of $300,000, subscribed by public-spirited citizens of Ellensburg and the vicinity of the Kittitas project, to be loaned to settlers on that project at a low rate of interest, and a contract has been entered into between the State and the Interior Department on that basis. The idea of State rather than Federal financing of the settlers, while it has been vigorously protested in some western quarters, has at the same time met with approval from the State Chamber of Commerce of the State of Washington, the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, and other sources. Mr. Asahel Curtis, chairman of the irrigation committee of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, a very active and influential organization, wrote me a few weeks ago:

The business men and stockmen of the Kittitas Valley held their annual dinner last night, and Mr. Benson, Mr. Hill, secretary of our committee, and myself were invited to attend. I am sorry that you could not have been listening in on the discussions that were made during the afternoon and at the dinner. I found everyone thoroughly solid on the idea of close cooperation with the Federal Government in caring for the settlers on the land. Sometime ago they were accepting it as one of the conditions which had to be in order to get the appropriation for development. To-day they are all firm believers in land settlement and the absolute elimination of speculation.

I told them that from the standpoint of our chamber our only interest was in the welfare of the settler and that we were bitterly opposed to any speculation. The toastmaster followed by saying that he had appointed a special committee to lynch anyone who came into the valley to engage in speculation. I know it would have done you good to have heard the kind things said about you and the Secretary and Doctor Mead. I think you can rest assured that there is one spot in the Western States that your ideas on reclamation are thoroughly understood by the people.

Construction of the Kittitas project is therefore under way and appropriations for the work to the full extent that is economical in the making of contracts will be available this session.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. WINTER. Do I understand, then, the net result? In other words, the conference agreement does away with the idea of Federal aid for the settlers and substitutes State aid?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, I can answer his question exactly. As yet I have been discussing the bill of a year ago and the action on the Kittitas. I hope to answer the gentleman fully; and if I do not, I shall be glad to yield later.

The conditions carried in the 1926 bill not having been complied with as to the other projects named, the controversy has recurred in connection with the 1927 bill. In that bill, as to the Baker, Vale, and Owyhee projects and the proposed new sections of the Sun River project, our committee proposed, with the approval of the House, the language as follows:

No part of the sums provided for in this act for the Sun River, Owyhee, Vale, and Baker projects shall be expended for construction purposes until the two following conditions shall have been met: (a) A contract or contracts in form approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall have been made with an irrigation district or irrigation districts organized under State law providing for payment by the district or districts of the cost of constructing, operating, and maintaining the works during the time they are in control of the United States, such cost of constructing to be repaid within such terms of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, and the execution of said contract or contracts shall have been confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction; and (b) a contract or contracts shall have been executed between the United States and the State or States wherein said projects or divisions are located, whereby such State or States shall assume the duty and responsibility of promoting the development and settlement of the projects or divisions after completion, the securing, selecting, and financing of settlers to enable the purchase of the required livestock, equipment, and supplies, and the improvement of the lands to render them habitable and productive. In each such case the State, or a corporation duly organized for that purpose, shall provide the funds necessary for this purpose and shall conduct operations in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. Such contract or contracts with irrigation districts hereinbefore referred to shall further provide that all irrigable land held in private ownership by any one owner in excess of 160 irrigable acres shall be appraised in a manner to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the sale prices thereof fixed by the Secretary on the basis of its actual bona fide value at the date of appraisal without reference to the proposed construction of the irrigation works; and that no such excess lands so held shall receive water from any project or division if the owners thereof shall refuse to execute valid recordable contracts for the sale of such lands under terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and at prices not to exceed those fixed by the Secretary of the Interior; and that until one-half the construction charges against said lands shall have been fully paid no sale of any such lands shall carry the right to receive water unless and until the purchase price involved in such sale is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and that upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved in such sales the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved in such fraudulent sales: Provided further, That the operation and maintenance charges on account of lands in said projects and divisions shall be paid annually in advance not later than March 1. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give public notice when water is actually available, and the operation and maintenance charges payable to the United States for the first year after such public notice shall be transferred to and paid as a part of the construction payment.

This provision would require as a condition precedent to expenditure of the moneys for construction (1) the formation of an irrigation district and the making of a contract with that district that would (2) provide for repayment of the construction costs within a period to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, (3) limitation of the price at which lands could be sold, (4) payment of operation charges in advance, (5) cooperation with a State or a corporation duly organized for that purpose in settlement, development, and financing of settlers, and (6) such contract to be confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The bill as it passed the Senate accepted these provisions as to formation of the irrigation district, limitation of the price of the lands, and payment of charges in advance. The Senate proposed that the charges should be repaid under the 5 per cent of gross crop return plan and eliminated the provision with reference to confirmation of the contract by a court and with no reference to any cooperation by the State or any local organization. The Senate further proposed in amendment 45 the authorization of appropriations to the extent of $500,000 in the next three years, of which $100,000 should be immediately available to be used in financing settlers on new units of two existing projects, the money to come from the reclamation fund, and this to constitute an experiment in Federal financing.

The House recognized that at once upon the making of this experimental appropriation the pressure upon western representatives and upon Congress as a whole for similar financial aid for settlers generally upon all existing projects would be very great. The nose of the camel would be under the tent and in no time we would be thoroughly committed to the whole scheme of extensive credit for one very limited class of farmers for whom more has already been done by the Government than for all other farmers. We, therefore, continued to oppose strenuously the idea of credit through loans from the reclamation fund, and the Senate has agreed in this report to recede from amendment 45. Further, we are assured by several of those most active and influential in reclamation matters in the Senate that in view of the agreement arrived at in conference on this bill, the Federal financing proposal is dead and is not to be resurrected. In the bill as now agreed upon in conference the matter of State cooperation in settlement and development is covered by the following provision:

Prior to or in connection with the settlement and development of each of these projects, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to enter into agreement with the proper authorities of the State or States wherein said projects or divisions are located whereby such State or States shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers.

This provision is not a condition precedent to the expenditure of the funds appropriated in the bill. The problem of development and settlement becomes active when the projects are completed, which as to the projects above discussed will be three to five or six years hence. As that time approaches this provision contemplates the Secretary of the Interior will take the matter up with the several States to bring about agreements whereby the cooperation of such States in promoting the settlement of the projects and the securing and selecting of settlers thereon shall be secured.

During the time that this matter has been under consideration in conference the department has indicated that in the absence of the Federal financing program the department would use its own discretion with reference to construction of these projects in the absence of mandatory language. To manifest the intention of Congress, therefore, the following sentence has been inserted:

Upon such confirmation of such contract as to any one of such projects, the construction thereof shall proceed in accordance with any appropriations therefor provided for in this act.

The final decision in the expenditure of funds must lie with Congress, and it is believed that the language used is sufficiently definite to make clear the purpose of Congress. Language more mandatory in character would no doubt involve inconveniences to the department which our committee, of course, does not desire.

The conference agreement provides for repayment "within such term of years as the Secretary may view to be necessary, in any event not more than 40 years from the date of public notice," and the contract is required to be confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The provision as to the Spanish Springs project is carried separately in the bill, and inasmuch as the lands are unsettled and formation of an irrigation district at this time is not feasible, the contract with the irrigation district has not been required as a condition precedent to the construction of the project, but is a condition precedent to the furnishing of water to the water users. Therefore, the language agreed upon in conference with reference to the Spanish Springs differs in some degree from the language I have been discussing relating to the Owyhee, Vale, Baker, and Sun River projects.

Personally, I have not believed that the interests of the country or the best interests of the States involved demanded construction of all of these projects at this time. It has been apparent, however, that appropriations for this purpose could not be withheld. The provisions which the bill carries for their protection we believe will be of very material aid in securing their successful settlement and development. The extent to which cooperation between the Federal Government and the States in settlement and development will profit the projects will depend upon the interest and wise discretion with which the department and the States utilize the wide authority here granted. We have insured repayment of the funds in 40 years or less instead of allowing them to run from 75 to 138 years, and we have protected the reclamation fund from overwhelming dissipation of its money through a program of credit paternalistic in character.

The provision concerning these matters as agreed to in conference is as follows:

No part of the sums provided for in this act for the Sun River, Owyhee, Vale, and Baker projects shall be expended for construction purposes until contract or contracts in form approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall have been made with an irrigation district or irrigation districts organized under State law providing for payment by the district or districts of the cost of construction, operating, and maintaining the works during the time they are in control of the United States, such cost of constructing to be repaid within such terms of years as the Secretary may find to be necessary, in any event not more than 40 years from the date of public notice hereinafter referred to, and the execution of said contract or contracts shall have been confirmed by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. Upon such confirmation of such contract as to any one of such projects, the construction thereof shall proceed in accordance with any appropriations therefor provided for in this act. Prior to or in connection with the settlement and development of each of these projects, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to enter into agreement with the proper authorities of the State or States wherein said projects or divisions are located whereby such State or States shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers.

Such contract or contracts with irrigation districts hereinbefore referred to shall further provide that all irrigable land held in private ownership by any one owner in excess of 160 irrigable acres shall be appraised in a manner to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and the sale prices thereof fixed by the Secretary on the basis of its actual bona fide value at the date of appraisal without reference to the proposed construction of the irrigation works; and that no such excess lands so held shall receive water from any project or division if the owners thereof shall refuse to execute valid recordable contracts for the sale of such lands under terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and at prices not to exceed those fixed by the Secretary of the Interior; and that until one-half the construction charges against said lands shall have been fully paid no sale of any such lands shall carry the right to receive water unless and until the purchase price involved in such sale is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and that upon proof of fraudulent representation as to the true consideration involved in such sales the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cancel the water right attaching to the land involved in such fraudulent sales: Provided further, That the operation and maintenance charges on account of lands in said projects and divisions shall be paid annually in advance not later than March 1. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give public notice when water is actually available, and the operation and maintenance charges payable to the United States for the first year after such public notice shall be transferred to and paid as a part of the construction payment.

Mr. WINTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WINTER. The gentleman got a little further than the subject about which I wanted to question him. I just want to inquire whether the proposed combination of Federal and State Governments in some kind of a contract for the selecting and securing of settlers, in the gentleman's opinion, is in any manner or any degree a provision for aid to the settler?

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to make the matter clear, if I perfectly understand the gentleman. In the first place, there is no provision as a condition precedent to construction in any way involving the State. There is no reference to any action by the State except the provision I have read which will, of course, speak for itself. It is not a mandatory provision even at the time of settlement. It is a suggestion and an authority granted to the Secretary of the Interior, when the time comes for the settlement of one of these projects, to do this. He is then authorized—and it might be properly thought that this is somewhat of a suggestion that he should proceed to do something in this direction—in his discretion to enter into agreement with the proper authorities of the State or States wherein such projects or divisions are located whereby such State or States shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers.

Now, as to what his authority is under that; this, we must remember, will be the situation: He will have before him a project, perhaps the Owyhee, with $17,000,000 invested, 42 per cent of it settled and 58 per cent of vacant land to be settled. He will have large areas on other projects. He will have a real responsibility. I have no doubt there will be some progress in public sentiment in the next few years. I think attention has now been focused upon the necessity of using some system in the matter of settling and developing these lands, and we have a right to expect that in the next three, four, or five years that will elapse before this time arrives the thought will become more clear as to what ought to be done.

Now, I believe that as to this provision it gives the Secretary authority to enter into any kind of a contract that the State is willing to enter into. Of course, it is not mandatory, and to what extent at that time a State might desire to cooperate in matters of settlement is not for me to say.

Mr. WINTER. Then is not this the fact, that the net result of the present conference agreement is to eliminate the Federal aid idea and to eliminate the mandatory State aid idea and leave the settler, so far as this conference report is concerned, and so far as this bill and any present legislation is concerned, without any aid now or in prospect on any new project?

Mr. CRAMTON. The effect of the present report is to eliminate entirely any mandatory participation by the State or the Federal Government in financing the settler, and there is no provision carried for financing the settler.

Mr. WINTER. I will ask one final question, and that is whether or not just recently and within the last year it has not been the consensus of opinion of everybody concerned in reclamation that the one thing that was necessary was some system to be provided for aided and directed land settlement on these projects.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the financing of the settler and aided and directed land settlement may be entirely different things. I will not agree with the gentleman's statement in this regard either: I will not agree with the gentleman that there is any consensus of opinion that the one thing is the financing of the settler, if that is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. WINTER. Well, the gentleman knows that in every reference to aided and directed land settlement within the last year the credit, or financial part of it was an integral part of it and always understood as a part.

Mr. CRAMTON. My own judgment is—and I am hoping that by the time these lands are ready for settlers that even the Representatives in Congress from the West and the Members of the Senate from the West will fully recognize that this is true—that the thing which would be of the greatest advantage to the settlers would be to first get the land at a fair price and not at a speculative price, and then to secure for them a line of credit adequate for their necessities at a reasonable rate. After my study of it for some time and my contact with men on projects in the West, and bankers and others, I believe that the best way to secure that and get results is not to make it a political proposition, as it would be as a Federal activity, but to get results through the operation of a local corporation, organized for that purpose by public-spirited men who realize the benefit that will come to their community through the development of an adjacent project. That has been done on the Kittitas project and they are now very enthusiastic about it.

Mr. MADDEN. And they will make their loans on a business basis.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. They will know the conditions and they will operate it as a banking corporation would be operated, except that not being organized for profit they can do business on a lower rate of interest than generally prevails in the West.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. I notice on page 7 of the statement, referring to amendment No. 3, the Vale project is not mentioned. I take it that is an inadvertence.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was an inadvertence on my part in omitting it. But, of course, it does not affect the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield just at this point for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Referring to amendment No. 31, at page 68, in which provision is made authorizing the Secretary of the Interior until June 30, 1927, to extend the time for payment of operation, maintenance, and construction charges, and so forth, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not in his judgment the provision contained in that paragraph in any way modifies or amends by implication subsection (L) of the act of December 4, 1924, I believe it is.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have been told often enough by men who know reclamation law that I am not competent to construe the law and its effect, but I will give the gentleman my best judgment. In my judgment, amendment 31 as it stands, which, of course, is not involved in the conference report and must come up for a separate vote, does not amend or repeal subsection (L) dealing with somewhat the same subjects in the fact finders act. I do believe, however, it gives an added authority to the department so that the department may elect to proceed under this instead of proceeding under subsection (L). In other words, if subsection (L) has been construed by any to be mandatory and forcing action upon the department, with the passage of this provision the department can proceed under this act instead of proceeding under subsection (L).

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In other words, the gentleman construes it as merely supplementary to subsection (L)?

Mr. CRAMTON. Or optional with, maybe.

Mr. WINTER. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WINTER. Referring to amendment No. 40 and referring to the amendment limiting the period of repayment to 40 years, that, as a matter of fact, is contrary to the provisions of the present reclamation law, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. Amendment No. 40 has to do with Spanish Springs, but as to this matter the situation is the same as to the others I mentioned. The present law that would govern repayment of these construction charges is the so-called fact finders act, under which it is mandatory that the contract provide for repayment under the 5 per cent of gross crop return plan, and as to the projects, Doctor Mead, as I have said, stated if that plan were followed it would be 75 to 138 years before the money came back. So the inclusion of this language as to these projects does take them out from the operation of that law and puts it in the discretion of the Secretary with a 40-year limit.

Mr. WINTER. I wanted to bring out the fact that that was clearly the case.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

THE FLATHEAD INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECT

Another important irrigation project, on which our committee has, in this conference report, completed a provision that I believe is of great importance and is highly constructive in character, is the Flathead Indian irrigation project.

The ultimate irrigable area of the whole project is about 125,000 acres, and the acreage for which at least partial water right is available at present is over 100,000 acres. To June 30, 1925, $5,148,320.83 had been spent by the Federal Government in construction and $624,813.74 for operation and maintenance. There had then been repaid $51,935.88 of the construction costs and $217,038.89 of the operation and maintenance charges. It was estimated that $2,000,000 would be required to complete the project.

Because of the showing made by such information as our committee could obtain, we successfully resisted any large appropriation in the 1925 bill, and gave only $35,000, chiefly for operation and maintenance, in the 1926 bill. When the latter bill was pending in the House the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] sought a larger appropriation. At that time I said, in part:

I feel that some time or other Congress should come to a definite decision as to what is to be done on those Indian projects in this State, but it is up to the department, it seems to me, to get busy and further analyze that situation out there and be prepared to give us information as to whether the project should be completed or abandoned. If completed, then to what extent and what new structures are necessary, and as to what has been done in the past, and whether readjustments are necessary. All of those things ought to be worked out in a completed plan. I have in mind myself, as have other members of the subcommittee, that this coming season, if we do visit any activities of the department in the West, we especially want on the ground to make a study of the problems with reference to these projects.

That promise was kept, and last August we visited the project and for four days made a most intensive study of its problems, there being in our little party Mr. MURPHY and myself from the Appropriations Committee; Mr. Bailey, Assistant Commissioner of the Budget in charge of Interior Department estimates; Commissioner Burke, of the Indian Bureau; Representative LEAVITT, chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee; and Representative EVANS, in whose district the project is located.

That inspection impressed us with the great natural advantages of the project, the unsatisfactory conditions as to water supply now existing on the project, and the courageous attitude, the uprightness, and the capacity of the settlers now on the project.

While water was said by the reports to be available for 112,000 acres under constructed works, we found that only a small proportion of that acreage had a dependably sufficient supply, and nearly everywhere development and settlement was seriously handicapped by lack of water through the season.

Conferences held on the several divisions developed that $165,000 for construction for certain canals or canal enlargements would provide a satisfactory water supply through the season for all present settlers and permit considerable additional development. The bill now approved carries the appropriation of $165,000 for those items.

The project is made up of several practically independent, unconnected divisions, and on the Camas division there appeared to be compelling reasons for some rearrangement of charges if the Government were to get back nearly $2,000,000 there invested. That division has a construction charge about $50 an acre heavier than the Mission Valley, the latter near the railroad and the Camas 20 miles away. But this committee has a strong feeling against wiping those obligations due the Government off the slate.

It further appeared that for the final completion of the project and its full development, reservoir construction to the extent of $700,000 or more would eventually be required.

In 1909 to 1911 there was constructed in connection with this project the so-called Newell Tunnel to use the normal year-round flow of the Flathead River in power development. This tunnel has never been utilized. The Indian irrigation service advised our committee that $786,550 would construct and equip the power plant in connection with that tunnel and construct transmission lines and substations connecting the power plant with all project towns and farming centers, this plant to be a two-unit plant developing 5,000 horsepower.

The committee have approved construction of that plant in a two-year program, the bill before us carrying an appropriation of $395,000 for the power plant, carrying this language as approved in conference:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation, except the $15,000 herein made immediately available, shall be expended on construction work until an appropriate repayment contract, in form approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have been properly executed by a district or districts organized under State law embracing the lands irrigable under the project except trust patent Indian lands, which contract, among other things, shall require repayment of all construction costs heretofore or hereafter incurred on behalf of such lands, with provision that the total construction cost on the Camas division in excess of the amount it would be if based on the per acre construction cost of the Mission Valley division of the project, shall be held and treated as a deferred obligation to be liquidated as hereinafter provided. Such contract shall require that the net revenues derived from the operation of the power plant herein appropriated for shall be used to reimburse the United States in the following order: First, to liquidate the cost of the power development; second, to liquidate payment of the deferred obligation on the Camas division; third, to liquidate construction cost on an equal per acre basis on each acre of irrigable land within the entire project; and fourth, to liquidate operation and maintenance costs within the entire project. Provision shall also be contained therein requiring payment of operation and maintenance charges annually in advance of each irrigation season and prohibit the granting of a water right to or the use of water by any individual for more than 160 acres of land irrigable under constructed works within the project after the Secretary of the Interior shall have issued public notice in accordance with the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L. pp. 123-130); all lands, except lands owned by individual Indians, at the date of public notice in excess of 160 acres not disposed of by bona fide sale within two years after said public notice shall be conveyed in fee to the United States free of encumbrance to again become a part of the public domain under contract between the United States and the individual owners at the appraised price fixed at the instance of the Secretary of the Interior, such amount to be credited in reduction of the construction charge against the land within the project retained by such owner. All lands so conveyed to the United States shall be subject to disposition by the Secretary of the Interior in farm units at the appraised price, to which shall be added such amount as may be necessary to cover any accruals against the land and other costs arising from conditions and requirements prescribed by said Secretary: Provided further, That trust patent Indian lands shall not be subject to the provisions of the law of any district created as herein provided for but shall, upon the issuance of fee patent therefor, be accorded the same rights and privileges and be subject to the same obligations as other lands within such district or districts: Provided further, That all construction, operation, and maintenance costs, except such construction costs on the Camas division held and treated as a deferred obligation herein provided for, on this project shall be, and are hereby, made a first lien against all lands within the project, which lien upon any particular farm unit shall be released by the Secretary of the Interior after the total amount charged against such unit shall have been paid, and a recital of such lien shall be made in any instrument issued prior to such release by the said Secretary. The contracts executed by such district or districts shall recognize and acknowledge the existence of such lien: Provided further, That pending the issuance of public notice the construction assessment shall be at the same rate heretofore fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but upon issuance of public notice the assessment rate shall be 2½ per cent per acre, payable annually, in addition to the net revenues derived from operations of the power plant as hereinbefore provided, of the total unpaid construction costs at the date of said public notice: Provided further, That the public notice above referred to shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior upon completion of the construction of the power plant.

Under this the Camas Division must pay only the same per acre for construction charges as the Mission Valley, the balance going into a suspended account to be repaid from profits of the power plant, this being satisfactory to the whole project.

The construction of the power plant at a cost of $786,000 therefore accomplishes these things:

(a) Provides for payment of $800,000 to $800,000 of charges on the Camas Division that were beyond the capacity of that division to pay, and gives a prospect of the Camas being able to pay as much more under a readjusted contract.

(b) By providing cheap power for pumping plants to furnish supplemental supply eventually needed for certain portions of the project, obviates the necessity of expending $700,000 to $800,000 for reservoirs as above stated.

(c) Furnishes needed cheap power to the farms and towns of the project that will aid much in attracting desirable settlers and making success possible.

There is no reason why the Flathead project should not succeed. The program carried forward in this bill is definite and constructive and clears the way for real development of this project. It opens the way for return of $6,000,000 the Federal Government has invested there, with no charge-off, and for the building of a successful American community.

NAVAJO FUNDS FOR THE GALLUP-SHIPROCK ROAD

The only other matter I desire to discuss at this time is that involved in amendment No. 28. As to this, the Senate has receded, but under protest, and the same issue is likely to be again presented hereafter. Senate amendment 28 is as follows:

The unexpended balance of the sum of $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Navajo Indians authorized to be withdrawn from the Treasury for expenditure under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Federal-aid highway from Gallup, N. Mex., to Shiprock, N. Mex., across the Navajo Indian Reservation in conformity with the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. pp. 606 and 607), contained in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1926, is hereby made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1927.

The Senate hearings and consultation with the Bureau of Indian Affairs developed these facts: The road from Gallup to Shiprock, N. Mex., runs for 82.5 miles across the Navajo Reservation; that under the present program only 19 miles is to be surfaced under Federal aid—that is to say, only 19 miles is to be a Federal-aid highway so far as present prospects are concerned; 14 miles farther is to be completed by May 1, but only as to grading and drainage structures; and a total of 63.5 miles, including this 14 miles, is to be surfaced by the State, if at all, under maintenance, and will not be a Federal-aid highway and is not now surfaced.

The act of June 7, 1924, is the only authority for the appropriation sought in No. 28. That act authorizes an annual appropriation of $20,000 of available Navajo funds "for maintenance of that portion of the Federal-aid highway from Gallup, N. Mex., to Shiprock, N. Mex., across the Navajo Reservation." Clearly this does not authorize use of Navajo funds for construction or for maintenance of any but a "Federal-aid highway."

Further, the act contemplates completion of a Federal-aid highway from Gallup to Shiprock before the Indians are called upon for maintenance money, and their funds can not, upon the authority of the act of June 5, 1924, be used to maintain the 19 miles of Federal-aid highway.

This justification for the use of the Indian funds for maintenance of this highway, as given by the department in a letter February 8, 1924, to the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate, and inserted by him in his report to the Senate on the bill which proposed this authorization (S. Rept. 263, 68th Cong., 1st sess.) makes this clear. It sets forth the necessities of the case, and says:

That portion of the road on the reservation is about 90 miles in length, and it is estimated that the annual cost of repair and upkeep thereof will approximate $20,000.

And for the reasons there set forth it was thought proper for the Indians to take the burden of maintenance of a Federal-aid highway across the reservation after construction. But that does not authorize or justify appropriation of their money for construction, or for maintenance on a constructed portion. The provision I have quoted was quoted in the Senate by the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee when defending the bill in debate (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 65, p. 8334.)

The attached correspondence makes clear the present situation:

MARCH 24, 1926.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE,

Commissioner of Indian Affairs,

Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COMMISSIONER: With reference to amendment No. 28, inserted in the Interior Department appropriation bill by the Senate, reading as follows:

"The unexpended balance of the sum of $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Navajo Indians authorized to be withdrawn from the Treasury for expenditure under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Federal-aid highway from Gallup, N. Mex., to Shiprock, N. Mex., cross the Navajo Indian Reservation in conformity with the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. pp. 606, 607), contained in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1926, is hereby made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1927."

Examining this matter, I find that the actual approval, June 7, 1924, known as Forty-third Statute 606, authorized an annual appropriation of $20,000, reimbursable from the tribal funds of the Indians of said reservation, "to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for maintenance of that portion of the Federal-aid highway from Gallup, N. Mex., to Shiprock, N. Mex., across the Navajo Reservation." I find that through Mr. Meritt, your office, before our committee in connection with the hearings on the Interior appropriation bill for 1926, page 984, justified an appropriation of $20,000 for 1926 on the basis that the road in question is to be constructed entirely from Government funds apportioned to the State of New Mexico under the Federal highway act of November 9, 1921. In the course of the hearings on the 1927 bill before our committee in November Mr. Meritt stated: "But the State has not yet provided the funds for the construction of the road, and we thought it would be inadvisable to ask for further appropriations until they actually constructed the road."

Before the Senate committee Senator BRATTON presented a telegram from Governor Hannett, under date of January 8, 1926, stating in part: "The road is 85 per cent constructed and should be completed by July 1, with the exception of one project which should be completed by October 1."

Further in the Senate hearings, at page 29, I find a letter to Senator BRATTON from State Highway Engineer French, in which it is stated:

"... In addition to this, the State has had the Navajo Indians pile surfacing rock at designated points along the entire route of the highway between Gallup and a point 19 miles south of Shiprock and is now having the same crushed to be used as surfacing on the highway which will be constructed. The reason the money appropriated for maintenance last year was not applied for by the State was because we felt that this money could be used to better advantage on the new highway which is under construction than if it were used on the old highway, which was very crooked and improperly drained."

"It has been the intention of this department to request this money as soon as we could obtain the right of way for the proposed new highway from the Department of the Interior, and in various conferences between Governor Hagerman and the writer it has been understood that we would endeavor to get this appropriation to be used by the State highway department for maintenance on the proposed new highway as soon as said right of way was granted. We have just received the approved right-of-way map from Washington covering the right of way for the proposed new highway across the Navajo Reservation from Gallup to Shiprock, said approval being signed by John H. Edwards, Assistant Secretary, Department of the Interior, and it is our intention to immediately ask for last year's appropriation to be used in maintaining the new highway by placing surfacing already crushed, etc."

Reading this gives me the impression that the idea is not that a real road is to be constructed under the act of 1921 and that this $20,000 per year from the funds of the Indians shall be used for ordinary maintenance thereof, but that, having secured the right of way from the Government across the Indian reservation and graded same, the money of the Indians is to be used in completing the construction by proper surfacing.

Will you please advise me fully as to the present situation concerning this proposed appropriation and your recommendation with reference to it?

Thanking you, I remain,
Yours sincerely,

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 24, relative to amendment No. 28 to the Interior Department appropriation bill, which proposes to reappropriate the $20,000 from Navajo tribal funds appropriated by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1163), for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Federal-aid highway from Gallup to Shiprock, N. Mex., across the Navajo Indian Reservation.

It is true that the appropriation is from tribal funds directly, while the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 606), authorizes an annual appropriation of public money to be reimbursed from the tribal funds. When this matter was first presented to Congress the Navajo Indians had no tribal funds; hence no appropriation could be made therefrom, which explains why the authorization law specifies public money to be reimbursed from tribal funds. However, by the time the estimates for the fiscal year 1926 were made, tribal funds had accrued from oil leases. Therefore it was thought that the simplest and most direct way to handle the matter would be to make an outright appropriation from tribal funds and thereby obviate the necessity of a reimbursable appropriation.

As stated on page 984 of the hearings on the 1926 bill, it was the original intention that the entire cost of that part of the road on the reservation should be paid from Government funds apportioned to the State of New Mexico under the Federal highway act. However, the State did not have sufficient Federal-aid money therefor, and to expedite the construction of the road a plan was adopted whereby certain parts of the road would have Federal aid entirely; others, Federal aid in part; and others, State and county. Nevertheless this will not affect the status of the road as a Federal-aid highway, as it is included in the State's approved 7 per cent system.

At the time the 1927 estimates were prepared our information received from the Bureau of Public Roads was that the highway would not be completed for a year or so, and it was thought that no funds would be required for maintenance purposes next year. However, the work has progressed more rapidly than anticipated and 14,033 miles of the road in the reservation will be completed by May 1 under contracts approved by the Bureau of Public Roads and the Secretary of Agriculture, which provide for grading and drainage, but not for surfacing.

The State engineer advises that maintenance will be necessary as soon as the road is open to traffic, and he asks that the $20,000 be made available for this purpose. He states that the length of that part of the road across the reservation when completed will be 82.5 miles, of which only 19 miles will be surfaced initially under Federal aid and that the State will be required to surface as maintenance the remaining 63.5 miles. The State engineer takes the position that it is only with respect to the 19 miles to be surfaced under Federal aid that surfacing can be regarded as part of the construction cost, and that as to the other 63.5 miles—which includes the 14,033 miles to be completed by May 1—the surfacing thereof comes within the category of maintenance, for which he thinks the appropriation from tribal funds may properly be used.

It is, of course, our intention to comply literally with the terms of the act and use this money only for maintenance and repair purposes, as provided thereby. This particular phase of the matter is therefore being taken up with the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads in order to obtain his views so that we may definitely determine at just what stage construction ends and maintenance begins, as no doubt that bureau has formulated definite rules on the subject.

For your further information there is attached hereto copy of a letter from Mr. James A. French, State highway engineer, on this subject.

Cordially yours,

CHAR. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives,

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1926.

HON. CHARLES H. BURKE,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BURKE: Reference is made to your letter of March 29, relative to the appropriation of $20,000 from Navajo tribal funds for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Gallup-Shiprock Highway across the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico. You state that a question has arisen as to the use of the appropriation for surfacing purposes, which Congressman CRAMTON seems to feel should be regarded as a part of the construction costs, while Mr. French, State highway engineer of New Mexico, would have it considered as maintenance on the 63.5 miles of this highway which will not be surfaced with Federal aid. You, therefore, request an expression of my views on this point and also ask to be advised as to any definite rules which this bureau may have adopted for determining when construction ends and maintenance begins.

The Federal highway act (sec. 2, par. 5) defines the term "maintenance" to mean "the constant making of needed repairs to preserve a smooth surfaced highway." There has been no rule adopted by this bureau for determining just when construction ends and maintenance begins. Based on the information submitted, I agree with Congressman CRAMTON in his view that the surfacing of this 63.5 miles of earth road would seem more properly to be a construction cost rather than a maintenance charge.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS H. MACDONALD,
Chief of Bureau.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 18, 1926.

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Referring to previous correspondence on the subject, there is attached hereto for your information copy of our letter of April 7 to Mr. James A. French, State highway engineer, Santa Fe, N. Mex., relative to the expenditure of the $20,000 appropriation for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Gallup-Shiprock Highway on the Navajo Reservation.

Cordially yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE,
Commissioner.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 7, 1926.

MR. JAMES A. FRENCH,
State Highway Engineer, Santa Fe, N. Mex.

MY DEAR MR. FRENCH: Commissioner Hagerman has referred to this office your letter of March 11 relative to the $20,000 appropriation for the maintenance and repair of that portion of the Gallup-Shiprock Highway on the Navajo Reservation.

You say that projects Nos. 146-B and 146-D, which aggregate 14,033 miles within the reservation, will be completed by May 1 under contracts, which provide for grading and drainage structures only; that of the total length of the road on the reservation (82.5 miles) only 19 miles will be surfaced under Federal aid; that the State will be required to surface under maintenance the other 63.5 miles, which include the 14,033 miles comprised in sections 146-B and 146-D; and that maintenance will be necessary as soon as the road is open to traffic.

Presumably the State desires to utilize part of the $20,000 for initial surfacing on sections 146-B and 146-D and the other portions of the road on the reservation which will not be surfaced under Federal aid. In this connection there is attached hereto a copy of a letter from Hon. Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, expressing the view that the surfacing of these 63.5 miles comes under the category of construction rather than maintenance. Such being the case, no part of the $20,000 appropriation can be used therefor. You also say that projects Nos. 146-C (19,865 miles) and 147-C (20,355 miles), except the bridges, will be constructed entirely at the expense of the State. As the appropriation is for maintenance and repair of that part of the Federal aid highway on the reservation, no part of the money can be used on these two sections thereof. In other words, the expenditure of the appropriation must be limited to the maintenance and repair of such portions of the highway as have been or will be constructed from Federal aid.

You further ask just how the expenditure of this money will be handled and say that your office will be glad to supervise it. Mr. Hagerman recommends that the money be turned over to the State, in view of the fact that the highway department has the necessary machinery, equipment, facilities, and organization for the maintenance of the road. However, the act prescribes no procedure; and as this office was in doubt as to the correct method to follow, the Comptroller General has been asked to render a decision relative thereto. Upon receipt thereof you will be advised in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

MR. CRAMTON. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 26: Page 59, line 22, strike out "$134,100, to be paid from the fund held by the United States in trust for the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma," and insert "$149,100, of which $15,000 shall be immediately available, to be paid from the funds held by the United States in trust for the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma: Provided, That any employee of the Osage Agency paid from tribal funds, who, since July 1, 1924, or who may hereafter be absent from his designated headquarters at a greater distance than 5 miles on official business, may be allowed his actual expenses while away from headquarters, in addition to his salary."

MR. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur, and in support of that motion and in brief explanation, I should say this amendment really covers two matters as inserted by the Senate. First, it increases the appropriation for administrative purposes among the Osage Indians $15,000, in order that the Osage act of 1924, as to investment of certain impounded funds of these Indians might be carried out. The second part of it is a provision with reference to certain travel expenses of employees of the Osage agencies, these expenses and appropriations being from the tribal funds of the Osage Indians.

The motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 31: On page 68, line 19, after the word "engineer," insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, until June 30, 1927, to extend the time for payment of operation and maintenance or water-rental charges due and unpaid for such period as in his judgment may be necessary, not exceeding five years. The charges so extended shall bear interest, payable annually, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized, in his discretion, until June 30, 1927, to contract with any irrigation district or water users' association for the payment of the construction charges then remaining unpaid within such term of years, as the Secretary may find to be necessary. The construction charges due and unpaid when such contract is executed shall bear interest payable annually at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid."

MR. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

This is the amendment that the gentleman from South Dakota and I were just discussing.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 46: On page 90, after line 16, insert:

"Under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the reclamation of arid lands, under the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, shall be administered by a commissioner of reclamation, who shall be equipped for the duties of said office by practical experience in irrigation of arid lands and the agricultural development and utilization thereof, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the first commissioner appointed under the provisions herein shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum."

MR. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Hereafter the reclamation of arid lands under the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, shall be administered, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by a Commissioner of Reclamation, who shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

MR. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I think I should state the difference between the amendment of the Senate and this provision is this: That the Senate amendment sets forth the qualifications so that they might fit only the one man who is now holding the job, and some time we may want some one else. Further, the Senate amendment provides for confirmation by the Senate, while I believe the Commissioner of Reclamation should be independent, and that provision is not desirable.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. Under this amendment would it not be possible to have a commissioner in addition to a present director under the present law? In other words, the amendment simply creates a commissioner at $10,000 a year and still leaves in force and effect the position of Director of Reclamation with a salary of $7,500.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amendment submitted creates a commissioner expressly for the administration of all these lands in order to avoid any such question as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. BYRNS. I ask the gentleman if his amendment abolishes the position of Director of Reclamation. If this amendment is adopted, will you not be in a position, so far as the law is concerned, of having a commissioner at $10,000 a year, a new position, and at the same time have the position of Director of Reclamation at $7,500 a year?

Mr. CRAMTON. The present official is known as commissioner. I think the Senate amendment might be open to the criticism which the gentleman suggests, but the amendment I have offered expressly takes away from the present officer all duties and puts them under the new official.

Mr. BYRNS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but if it is the purpose to abolish the present position of director, why not say so?

Mr. CRAMTON. I thought I had accomplished it in this amendment:

Hereafter the reclamation of arid lands under the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior by a Commissioner of Reclamation—

And so forth. That is all the present official is doing. I thought when we took away his duties—and the present official is not a statutory officer; he holds office at the will of the Secretary of the Interior—I think it would be difficult to provide that the present office should be discontinued.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman says that the present officer holds his position at the will of the Secretary of the Interior. The gentleman may be correct, for he knows more about reclamation law than I know or ever will know. I think the gentleman is mistaken—I think that the appropriation bills refer to him as director; but even if the gentleman is correct about that—

Mr. CRAMTON. For many years it was director, and when the change was made they changed it from director to commissioner. But it is entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BYRNS. Conceding that, the gentleman says that the Director or Commissioner of Reclamation at present simply exists by virtue of the will of the Secretary of the Interior. Unless we make a provision to that effect that there shall not be any such position as now exists, is it not possible under this amendment that Congress will have created a statutory position of $10,000 a year and at the same time some Secretary of the Interior may continue the present Commissioner of Reclamation? I do not mean the present official, but the present position.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am agreeable to accept any amendment that seems likely to improve the situation; but let me say that the expenditures from the reclamation fund have been left up to this time to the discretion of the department very largely. We have not specified the official. When they have wanted to appoint a commissioner of finance they have done it; when they wanted to appoint an agricultural economist they have done it. We can say that they shall not have any other official as Commissioner of Reclamation, but I do not think they would have two officers of the same title.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, there is no statute designating the Director of Reclamation.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is by order of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And afterwards it was changed to Commissioner of Reclamation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The office is certainly worth $10,000 a year.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think there is something in the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], but this is the first time my mind has been called to that situation. Since he has mentioned it, I believe there is some substance to what he says; but there was no intention upon the part of the conferees of the House, and I am sure on the part of the conferees of the Senate, except that the present

Director of Reclamation should be dispensed with and that office abolished and a new office created to take its place. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, and I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] would have no objection, to having the bill amended, but the conference report has already been adopted by the Senate, and, of course, that would involve some little bit of work that has already been done. But for that, I would be glad to see it come back.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan has suggested that he will not object to an amendment to the amendment. I have not a copy of the amendment before me, it has just been offered from the floor, and I can not offer an amendment at the moment. I think the gentleman from Michigan should correct that situation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, my original purpose was to move to recede and concur with an amendment that would simply state that the commissioner should be appointed by the President and receive a certain salary. The very efficient clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Shields, called my attention to the fact that the amendment I proposed might have the same vice that the gentleman has suggested, only in a greater degree, and that I was not transferring to that official the duties under this statute, and so the clerk of the committee, to guard against that, prepared this amendment which I have offered. If the commissioner were a statutory official, it would be very easy to provide, but let me suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that we so amend my amendment to read in this way:

Hereafter the reclamation of arid lands under the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, now administered by the Commissioner of Reclamation, shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior by a Commissioner of Reclamation, who shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, and the present position is hereby abolished.

Mr. BYRNS. I think that would certainly relieve one very serious objection to this amendment, but I say to the gentleman that I have another fundamental objection to the amendment as amended. I should think that amendment ought to be offered, and if the amendment is to be adopted, it ought to carry that language. That does not relieve my other objection, however.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When Doctor Meade was before the subcommittee in the hearings he appeared as commissioner. It is so stated here.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think this will meet the views of the gentleman from Tennessee, and if I meet one of his serious objections, I think he ought to be willing to forget the others. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I have offered and offer this other one in its place, which I now send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Hereafter, the reclamation of arid lands, under the act of June 17, 1902, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, shall be administered under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by a Commissioner of Reclamation, who shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year; and the present office of Commissioner of Reclamation under appointment from the Secretary of the Interior is hereby abolished."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order upon that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wish the gentleman would state his point of order, so that it may be disposed of now.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The point of order is that it is an amendment offered in the House to incorporate in the bill new legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment from the Senate on this same subject, and I am simply offering to recede and concur in that amendment with an amendment, which is germane and within the terms of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). It seems to the present occupant of the chair that that is entirely germane to the Senate amendment, and if it is it must be in order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the colloquy that occurred here a moment ago demonstrates the vice of attempting to legislate on appropriation bills. The rules of the House very strictly provide that no legislation shall be in order upon any appropriation bill. Here is an amendment that is put in by the Senate, which is brought back to the House by the House conferees, under the rules, and the chairman moves to concur. As adopted by the Senate some of us, whether correctly or not, were of the very firm impression that it might result in creating a big office of $10,000 per year without dispensing with the present position of director, and it is sought to be amended on the floor of the House during a brief consideration, so as to eliminate this objection. That is a clear illustration of the wisdom of the rule of the House of Representatives prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills. The Appropriation Committee in a few rare cases has brought in legislative amendments to appropriation bills, and in nearly every instance many Members upon the floor of this House have risen and very strongly and severely censured that committee for bringing in that legislation.

I am not complaining about that, because I think they were not only justified abundantly under the rules of the House in doing so, but I think the Committee on Appropriations ought to be most careful in proposing legislation on any appropriation bill, and that it ought never to do so except in emergency cases or in cases in which the House is practically unanimous or in cases where possibly the insertion of a little language will save much money to the Treasury of the United States. The House has criticized the Appropriations Committee in some instances. I ask the Members of this House whether they are going to permit another body, in which they have no voice, to do something that they will not permit a committee of this House, which is under their direction and control, to do? If you adopt this amendment, we are simply continuing to open the doors and to permit the other body to propose amendments in direct violation of our rules. There is no reason why a proposition of this kind should not come from the regularly constituted legislative committee in this House and be brought up under the rules of the House and discussed in the committee and on the floor under the general rules of debate instead of under a conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I want to know am I right in inferring from what the gentleman says that this is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. BYRNS. It is clearly legislation; this is a Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thought the Committee on Appropriations and all members of the subcommittees were firm with the positive declaration that there would not be legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I am happy to say that under the leadership of our splendid chairman [Mr. MADDEN] we adhere to the rule. What I am complaining about is that one of your own committees over whom you have control is prevented from bringing in legislation of that kind and that we are now asked to permit another body to come in and propose legislation in defiance of the rules of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has it not come to this in the House? What we can not do in the way of adding legislation to appropriation bills we can send over to the other body and let the other body do what we might want to do?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is clearly correct, and the legislative committees of this House ought to be protected in these matters. I think you gentlemen who are members of the legislative committees ought to stand up and protect yourselves and your committee when these matters of legislation are brought in—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. May I have some more time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will give the gentleman from Tennessee as much time as he wishes, but I am going to make this appeal, however, to the committee, that we be as brief as we can.

Mr. BYRNS. This is an important matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, he will have his time, but this afternoon has been set aside for a conservation discussion, and I do not desire to infringe upon that time any more than I have to do. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BYRNS. Five minutes; and I may not use more than three.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to the gentleman that in reference to this discussion upon general conservation I do not think it is quite as immediately important as this matter of legislation that is now pending before us and which involves the creation of a new position at $10,000 a year. Now, what has happened?

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Briefly.

Mr. SMITH. The Senate has already passed a bill, and the bill has been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation accomplishing what is desired—

Mr. BYRNS. That is all right, but Members have not had an opportunity to vote and pass on it. The gentleman says the Senate has passed the bill and the House committee has reported it, and yet he wants to put that bill upon this appropriation bill denying the Members under the rules of this House the right to take their time and discuss it pro and con. He wants to force them to take it up on an hour's debate yielded by one gentleman who has appealed to Members not to consume time, rather than bring it up under the general rules of the House. That is what I am protesting against. [Applause.]

Now, another matter. What are you seeking to do? We passed a reclassification law. We thought and were told at the time that it was going to settle the question of salaries. Under the reclassification act—and I am subject to correction if I am in error—the present Commissioner of Reclamation is now drawing $7,500 a year. Is he a member of the Cabinet? No; he is the head of a great and important bureau of this Government, and I say frankly to you with the exception possibly of one or two bureau chiefs, like the chief of the Bureau of Standards or Domestic and Foreign Commerce, I think if the chief of any bureau is to receive $10,000 possibly he ought to get it, but I protest against this action, gentlemen, of going outside the reclassification act and undertaking by piecemeal, by amendment from another body, to increase the salary of this officer. If you do you will gradually build up a system and a situation which we had before the reclassification act was passed. That is what you are doing when you undertake to give the head of this bureau $10,000. Why, he is getting $7,500 to-day, which ought to be regarded as sufficient for the various heads of bureaus.

Why give him 33½ per cent increase? Will it not mean that you will be called upon to increase all others, whether large or small?

Mr. SMITH. For the reason this gentleman—

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman can make his speech in his own time. I can not yield to the gentleman for an argument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. BYRNS. Now, gentlemen, I appeal to you to vote this proposition down, and let us say to the other body, as we did in the last appropriation bill in the case of the Alien Property Custodian, that we are going to stand by the reclassification act, and that in this day and time we are not going to increase salaries to $10,000 in subordinate positions in the various departments. If you are going to increase bureau heads, increase them all. Why, if you do this, when you come back here in December, mark my prediction, you will find practically every head of every bureau of this Government of any consequence and importance coming to your Budget Director, coming to you, coming to the Committee on Appropriations, and failing there, they will go over to the other body, and through the favor of some distinguished Member of that other body they will be able to get in an amendment, and then they will bring it before you. There will be a motion possibly to recede and concur, and you will be asked to vote the increase. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say this, in answer to what my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has suggested: The gentleman from Tennessee says this is brought back in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. No; I did not say exactly that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, that it was put in in the Senate in violation of our rules. The fact is, whether the House wants to do it or not, it is before the House exactly in accordance with the rules of the House. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate. This legislative provision was inserted in the Senate. The bill then went to conference. The conferees could not agree upon it in conference. We have done as the rules say we must do in connection with such an item, unless the other body recedes, and in this case they did not recede. We have brought it back to the House, and the House has the chance to vote upon this proposition.

Now, further, this is a matter that has been acted upon by the legislative committee of the Senate. The bill has been reported out and it has come to the House and a similar bill has been considered by the House and favorably reported by the House committee; and so far as I know, no one on the House legislative committee has objected to this course.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment. At the present time no one on the House committee is objecting to this. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the committee having charge of this subject, has reported a similar bill to the House, and he has been on his feet vainly endeavoring to give his expression of his sympathy to the proposition contained in this amendment, but was not recognized by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question only.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman says the House conferees did not agree because the rules did not permit it.

Mr. CRAMTON. No. We had no authority to agree, and we did not agree in conference.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. You did not agree in the written report, but is it not a fact that you privately agreed with the Senate conferees and told them you would report this to the House and favor the Senate amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. If it is important to the gentleman to know, I will say that the House conferees told the Senate conferees that they had no authority to agree upon that amendment. On the insistence of the Senate, however, we stated that we would bring the matter back to the House and submit it to the House on my motion to concur with an amendment, which amendment the Senate conferees never saw.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The position taken by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], as I understand it, is this: If we continue to indorse the action of the Senate in violating the rules of the House by inserting matters of legislation on appropriation bills, we thereby eliminate our rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Alabama and others will undertake a crusade to prevent any matters of a legislative character from being agreed to under those conditions in the House when brought back under the rules, I will have no quarrel with them. Possibly it might accomplish a very desirable object. It is a little strange, however, that this particular proposition, to which the gentleman from Tennessee would oppose anyway if it came up under any rule and under any legislative situation—he expressed his opposition in his statement—it is strange that this should be the one case where this particular burning reform should come into prominence.

Mr. BYRNS. That is not fair to me. I have opposed the proposition to raise the salary of the Alien Property Custodian. I am sorry the gentleman did not cooperate with us in this present case.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there anything here on record to show why this man should receive $10,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can explain in a moment. I want to apply a limit to myself as well as to others. This officer has the responsibility of administration over something like $150,000,000 of more or less precarious investments and new appropriations of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year. It is a position that requires the very highest skill and the greatest amount of training and experience. The present incumbent is receiving $7,500 a year. He was receiving that amount when the classification act became a law, and this amendment, of course, would give him an increase to $10,000. He has offers to-day to receive a larger salary outside of the Government service; and personally I am frank to say this, that in the present involved situation as to our reclamation fund and the many projects involved I think it would be a calamity to have a change in that office at this time, and I feel the position is worth the money. I think there are other bureau chiefs that are worth that money.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what is knocking the Government service.

Mr. CRAMTON. I believe that this official and the head of the Bureau of Mines and the Chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the heads of many other bureaus, are worth as much as a Member of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. It depends on who the Members are. Some might make a million dollars a year, and some might not be able to make anything, or some others of us might be earning only a few thousand dollars. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment substantially for the same reasons that were stated by the gentleman from Tennessee. In the first place, it is argued that this amendment is needed so as to give the Commissioner of Reclamation more independence. It is argued that if you provide for his appointment by the President and require the Senate to confirm him, that will give him a larger amount of independence.

Now, as a matter of fact, I think the most unwise part of the Senate amendment is that part of it which requires that he be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, as the Senate proposed it confirmation is required, but my amendment does not require confirmation. I agree entirely with the gentleman about that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am glad to know that, because your amendment to the Senate amendment certainly ought to be adopted if the amendment is to be adopted at all. I am glad that part of the controversy is disposed of.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman explain what he means? I do not catch his point there.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Inasmuch as it is involved, I would rather go ahead, as I have only three minutes. The most important question involved in this amendment is this: We have the reclassification act that was passed in 1923. That act reclassifies all of the important executives of the Government bureaus and undertakes to equalize the salaries. I have not a word to say derogatory to the ability of Mr. Elwood Mead; I am confident he is an able, conscientious, and valuable public servant, but we have good men, like Doctor Burgess, at the head of the Bureau of Standards. He gets no more than $7,500 and he may not get over $8,500. I do not know; but he could not get over $7,500 under the reclassification act.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, Doctor Mead is getting a salary of $7,500, because he was getting that at the time of the passage of the reclassification act; but if a new man should come into that position, he would get only $6,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am glad to have that information. Then we have the able Doctor Klein, at the head of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. He gets no more than $7,500.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then we have the chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, the largest concern of its kind in the world. He is classified under the classification act. Then we have the Public Printer, Mr. George Carter, and he is at the head of the largest printing establishment in the world. He comes under the reclassification act.

Mr. BYRNS. He gets $6,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I know he is not paid $7,500 yet, but he may get that later.

Mr. BYRNS. No; he has a statutory salary of $6,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Now, gentlemen, I submit that if we are going to rearrange these salaries—I am not contending that we ought not to do it, and perhaps we should—we ought to do it in a legislative way; we ought to bring in a legislative bill and let Congress do it. I think that would be much the wiser and better legislative policy to pursue, and therefore I shall vote against this Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If the first commissioner is to receive $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, what will the fifth commissioner receive?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, we have the Senate amendment before us, but the amendment I have offered fixes a permanent salary.

Mr. BUTLER. It looks to me as though it is a sliding scale.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Gentlemen of the House, I am for this amendment. I do not care how it got on this bill. I know it is no violation of our rules for the Senate to put on an amendment and our conferees to bring it back here for House action. It ought to be there. It may not have gotten on the bill as our rules provide, but we can not abridge the Senate's right to put on amendments. This amendment ought to be on this bill, because this is a $10,000 position. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] spoke about Cabinet positions. I want to state to my friend that the man who does his duty in this office, as the present occupant, Doctor Mead, certainly performs it to the fullest extent, works as hard as any Cabinet head in this Government.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not question that, I will say to my friend from Texas, but does not the gentleman think that these other positions, to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has referred, ought to receive the same consideration? These other positions were put in the bill by the Senate, but the House conferees would not agree to them in conference.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state that those salaries ought to be increased in many instances.

Mr. BYRNS. This will cost a half million or a million dollars a year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state to my friend that we had a Director of Reclamation for a long number of years, and a very efficient one—Mr. A. P. Davis. He went out of that office, after serving for very many years, without a dollar, so I am informed, and that condition ought not to continue. This is a $10,000 position. We have a $10,000 man down there.

This was thrashed out by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. A full hearing was had upon this measure, and it was reported unanimously by that committee. So it does come from a legislative committee, although we have not, of course, an opportunity to pass upon it at this time. I certainly think this amendment ought to be adopted by the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: I understand the Senate has passed the bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. And the House committee has reported it. We have six weeks or two months during which the Congress will be in session, and is it not possible to take that bill up under the rules of the House and conform to the rules of the House with reference to appropriations? Is it not possible to pass it and provide for this salary in the deficiency bill, and the gentleman knows it will be taken care of?

Mr. HUDSPETH. My friend from Tennessee knows it is almost impossible to get up a bill of that kind in this House, especially this late in the session. We can not do it, and this amendment has been put in this bill, and it ought to be concurred in by this House, because the position calls for that salary. I am very partial to the gentleman now holding the position of Commissioner of Reclamation and have a very high estimate of his ability. He earns every dollar asked for; but I also advocate the raise because the dignity and responsibility of the position demand it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why this amendment should be adopted, one of which is that this gentleman has spent his life in reclamation work. His experience and qualifications for this service have been recognized not only by this country but by foreign governments, which have on different occasions employed him in an advisory capacity. He gave up a position in the faculty of the University of California at Berkeley, paying $11,000 per year, in order to take this position, on the assurance that he would receive $10,000 per year.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Who assured him that?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Various gentlemen assured him of that, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. I may also say that I know this gentleman has positions offered him which will pay twice as much as he is now receiving; but he has undertaken the work of rehabilitating these reclamation projects which is now only about half completed, and it is of very great importance to the Government that he be continued in this position because of the importance of the work, which involves the expenditure of from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 every year.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. As I understood the gentleman, one of the important reasons why he is urging this increase in salary is because this gentleman is liable to leave this work for other service.

Mr. SMITH. He is not urging it. It is being urged by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BEGG. I was just wondering what would happen to the Reclamation Service if this man should die.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think it is proper to discredit the services and the ability of a man who has the reputation that Doctor Mead enjoys.

Mr. BEGG. Nobody is discrediting the ability or the service of this man.

Mr. SMITH. Of course, if he should leave the service, either by death or by resignation, it would be very difficult to find anyone who could take up his work where he would lay it down.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK of Texas) there were—ayes 46, noes 48.

So the previous question was refused.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for tellers unless I can satisfy the time for debate in less time than a teller call would require. All I want is expedition.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I suggest to the gentleman we have some understanding about time.

Mr. BLANTON. I want three minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I had forgotten my promise to the gentleman from Texas. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to show you how this classification works and how the Committee on Appropriations in the House and Senate work outside of the classification. What is the use of having a classification law and a commission to fix salaries when Congress is going to come in and pick employees out here and there and show favoritism?

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I can not yield now. The gentleman has had his time.

We have in the District a District alienist, and up until 1914 his salary was $1,000. In 1916 it was raised to $1,500 and was held at that right along until the classification bill was passed, and there were 50 prominent doctors any one of whom would have been glad to have had the job, but as soon as the classification bill was passed it automatically increased that salary from $1,500 to $3,300. That is the way the classification act works.

Now, you are not satisfied with that kind of a law, you are not satisfied with the operation of a law that has doubled, and in some instances trebled, the salaries of various chiefs of bureaus, but you come in and single them out now and raise them from $6,500, as you are doing in this amendment, to $10,000. Do you not know that just as soon as you raise this salary of Doctor Mead—and I will grant you that Doctor Mead is a man who may be worth $10,000—but the very minute you do it, I can name you 20 chiefs of important bureaus, who are just as important to this Government as Doctor Mead, who could come in here and say, "Congress has done us an injustice." What are you going to do about it?

Mr. BUTLER. Raise theirs, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. You will get tired of raising these salaries some time. The people will stop it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not know anything about Doctor Mead. He may be worth many thousands of dollars a year, but I want to submit a few remarks to the House with reference to what this House is doing with its own privileges and its own powers.

In the first place, under the rules of this House this amendment could not be offered on the floor. It formerly could, but the House got the idea it wanted to keep the Committee on Appropriations busy with appropriations and not legislation, and we changed that rule. Now the bill goes to the Senate; the Senate puts on this amendment. The rules of the House prohibit the conferees from agreeing to any Senate amendment like this, but what do the conferees do? They do not agree in black and white; they do not agree in the report and put it down over their signatures, but they privately agree with the Senate conferees, "We will agree on the q. t.; we will take your amendment back over to the House; we will get up and offer it and we will recommend that it be adopted." What does that do? It is an affront to this House and to the dignity of this House. The old rule was much to be preferred, because under the old rule when the House could put legislation on an appropriation bill Members had the benefit of going before the committee of this House and threshing it out, and then it came on the floor of this House in Committee of the Whole and there was an opportunity to debate it and vote it down or to vote it up—to act upon it. But now we have abdicated that power. We have denied ourselves the right to do that. The result is it goes over and the Senate puts it on, and the House conferees in a little private conference behind closed doors say, "Yes; we will not put it in the report, but as men of honor we will take it back to the House and we will recommend it, and being on the Committee on Appropriations the House will swallow it on account of our prestige."

What does it do? Only a few of us here, a conference report is brought in—a matter of high privilege—got to get it through quickly; and the result is we are denying the House the right of legislating. This amendment ought to be defeated. The Committee on Reclamation ought to do its duty. The chairman of the Committee on Reclamation ought to have gone to the steering committee and gotten the opportunity to have the legislative bill considered.

Mr. SMITH. We have brought in a Senate bill, and it is on the calendar awaiting consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why did not the gentleman get it up? Why did he not go to the steering committee?

Mr. SMITH. There are hundreds of bills on the calendar that can not be brought up under the rule until they are reached in order, and this is one of them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this in connection with what the gentleman from Texas has said about the rules or the change of rules. He says there was a time when the Appropriations Committee could have done this. There never has been a time in 20 years when an appropriating committee could put any legislation on a bill, except it was also a legislative committee that had charge of the bill. The Naval Affairs Committee could do it, but the Irrigation Committee never had the appropriating power and never had authority to put this on a bill.

The great change in the rules is this: Under the old rule riders on appropriation bills were inserted in the Senate, and there was no restriction on the part of the conferees, and they were agreed to in conference. Now, under the present rules that can not be done, but anything that is legislative in character must come back for a separate vote.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What effect on the gentleman's mind does this have on the idea of classification?

Mr. CRAMTON. Under the classification the highest salary that you could have is $7,500. If a new man came in, he could only get $6,000. This gives the commissioner $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, there never has been a time during my 19 years of service when this committee, having power of appropriations, had the right to propose legislation on appropriation bills. But that was often done in the old days on the floor of the House when points of order were not made against such an amendment.

When I heard my genial friend from Texas tell about what happened in the conference I wondered if he was omniscient, and then I wondered if I was in that conference, because I never heard in my life such a mess of stuff put upon the conferees. There was no agreement in conference to do anything, absolutely no agreement. The gentleman from Michigan said:

We will have to take this back to the House.

The conferees might have had their opinion about what was going to be done, and we had our opinion of what we would do. If the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from Ohio ever at any time indicated that they were going to try to have any amendment adopted or try to comply with the request of the Senate conferees, then I never heard of it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If this amendment is adopted, is not this the first break over on the classification act?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I can not answer that. The gentleman from Ohio is better posted than I am.

Mr. BEGG. I think it is; and if there is this one, would not there be other applications for us to make discrepancies in the future?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, I am discussing another phase of the matter and have only three minutes.

Mr. Speaker, your subcommittee has complied simply with the rules of the House. The rules require that the subcommittee shall not bring in an amendment not authorized by law. They shall not bring in any item into the appropriation bill not authorized by law, or changing existing law, and that is exactly what your subcommittee has done—it has obeyed the law.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Where have the rules been violated?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not in any way. We have complied strictly with the rules, which require that when the Senate puts on an amendment obnoxious to the House rules the conferees shall bring it back here for full and free action of the House, and that is what the conferees have done. We have not violated the rules of the House in law, spirit, or principle.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are you not aiding the Senate to violate the rules of the House?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We are not doing anything but bringing this back for your action. You may aid the Senate by your vote; I could aid them; but that is the gentleman's individual right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 49, noes 65.

So the motion to recede and concur with an amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk proceeded to report amendment No. 62.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] It is evident that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 62: Page 103, after line 22, insert:

"The proviso at the end of section 21 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, which requires that any amount of Federal funds apportioned to any State under the provisions of said act which shall remain unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under said section shall be reapportioned within 60 days thereafter to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis as if it were being apportioned thereunder for the first time, shall not apply to such portion of the sum apportioned to the State of Montana from the appropriations made for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1924, and June 30, 1925, respectively, as may remain unexpended on June 30, 1926, and on June 30, 1927, respectively, the dates on which will expire the period during which the funds apportioned for the fiscal years 1924 and 1925, respectively, are available for expenditure; and the portion of the sum apportioned to Montana for said fiscal year 1924 which shall remain unexpended on June 30, 1926, and the portion of the sum apportioned to Montana for the fiscal year 1925 which shall remain unexpended on June 30, 1927, or such amount thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the construction of the road from Red Lodge, Mont., through the Beartooth National Forest and the Shoshone National Forest and Cooke City, State of Montana, so as to connect with the existing highway into the Yellowstone National Park, leading to said town of Cooke City: Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein referred to shall be used on roads outside of national forest reserves."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 62 and concur in the same.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, this amendment to the appropriation bill has to do with a road that leads through property that belongs to you, through two national forests and into a national park that also belongs to you—not through two national forests that belong to the State of Montana and the State of Wyoming and into a national park that belongs to the States of Montana and Wyoming and Idaho. It is altogether through property that belongs to all the States of the Union. The situation is this: The conditions in Montana have been such during the last few years—and I am glad that those conditions have now become so much better that the future will take care of itself in matters of this kind—that it has been impossible for that State to meet all the Federal-aid funds that have been available. There will be funds the State of Montana will not be able to meet as required, and which, under the law, will revert.

The proposal is that these funds for two years shall be used to construct a highway that will lead through these two national forests, and that means through lands without settlement, without any tax-paying property along the highway, into the Yellowstone National Park. This was a measure introduced in the regular way in the Senate, and which, after consideration and with the complete approval of the Department of the Interior, was passed. There has been nothing underhanded, nothing in any way secretive about the way this was then put into this appropriation bill as an amendment. After the bill had passed the Senate, I went to the chairman of the Committee on Public Roads of the House and talked with him about this procedure. I said that the bill would come over in the regular way, and that it was felt by the Department of the Interior that it covers an emergency matter. Because it is an emergency matter we would be justified, I felt, as they felt in the Senate, in adding it to the Interior Department appropriation bill, where it could be quickly considered. I made that whole situation plain to the chairman of the Committee on Public Roads. I understand to-day that he is going to oppose this because he thinks his committee should handle it. It has been in the hands of his committee in good faith for a matter of several weeks, and no one could be more surprised than I at his changed position, as I understood it. There has been no trying to slip anything over on this House, either in the Appropriations Committee or by the conferees.

I said that I would tell the House why this is an emergency matter. Cooke City is a small mining camp, growing in importance at the present time, located at the northeastern corner of the Yellowstone National Park. There is but one way of hauling out the ore. That is on a road of something over 50 miles which goes for practically all of the distance through the Yellowstone Park. They haul the ore in large trucks, and it will become a danger and inconvenience to the people of the United States who are using the highway. With the recently increased activities of that mining camp it is certain that this season and the seasons to come will provide such a tonnage of ore and machinery during the tourist season that it may even result in the loss of life by accidents.

The proposal is that these funds shall be used to construct a new road of some 65 miles into Cooke City and on into the Yellowstone Park, a distance of a mile or two more, so that there will be another outlet for this ore to the town of Red Lodge, which is at the end of a railroad. It will also furnish a fine new entrance to the Yellowstone National Park, and I can say from personal knowledge it is into one of the most attractive and beautiful parts of that park.

It will make the park more available to all the people of the United States. This will be a road for the benefit of all the people of the United States expended in this one place instead of scattering the money back to the different States in comparatively small amounts.

I have said to you that the Interior Department very strongly favors this measure. I will read to you very briefly just the concluding statement from the Secretary of the Interior to Senator MOSES:

While this proposed highway is entirely outside the park, it is believed that its construction would materially relieve the park road if the predicted increase of commercial travel should become a reality, which seems probable.

If I had time to read the report, I feel you would be fully convinced—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Interior Department is at the back of this particular bill, or merely desires an appropriation for the construction of the highway?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is back of this particular bill. This provision is in the form of the Senate bill which was before the Secretary of the Interior when he made the report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the road bill is generally under the Agricultural Department for administration. I wondered if the views of that department were considered as being worth anything in this matter, and I wondered if the Department of Agriculture had been consulted?

Mr. LEAVITT. It was before the Bureau of Public Roads. From the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads there is a statement, and all the way through I am told there has been an understanding between the different departments. The Director of National Parks and the Forest Service have been in the operation from the beginning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, if he will yield further, that it involves a question of broad policy, and, as far as I am concerned personally, I do not care anything about the opinion of either department, but in view of the fact the gentleman mentioned the Interior Department, I thought it well to know if the Department of Agriculture had expressed any views on the subject.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will.

Mr. LOZIER. Aside from the question of this being legislation on an appropriation bill, I will ask the gentleman from Montana if this provision does not emasculate the fundamental provisions of the Federal aid road act?

Mr. LEAVITT. That is a broad question, but I will answer by the word no.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to state to the House that the Bureau of Roads is favoring this bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. I understand so, and I have talked with the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House the Bureau of Roads is in favor of this bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. I understand so by talking with the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads.

Mr. DOWELL. And his statement to the gentleman is that he is in favor of it?

Mr. LEAVITT. I understand so.

Mr. DOWELL. Is he for it or against it?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not know that I understood what the gentleman stated; what was it?

Mr. DOWELL. I asked the gentleman if the Bureau of Roads was for this measure or against it?

Mr. LEAVITT. I think they are for it.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman, I think, answered he was.

Mr. LEAVITT. He was for it; or, at least, not opposed. Now, just a minute to explain this. The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads does not consider this the most important road to build in the State of Montana and the State of Wyoming from a forest-road standpoint, but from the standpoint of broader purposes my discussion of this matter with the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads convinced me he is in favor of the construction of this highway. Now I will agree to this, that there is a seeming departure from established policy in the use of unmatched Federal funds rather than their redistribution. But the road is entirely within national forests on a location which would some time in the future be entirely constructed out of Federal funds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield the gentleman three minutes additional.

Mr. LEAVITT. If this were a highway outside of territory that would not at some time come under 100 per cent Federal funds, the situation might be different, although I will say to you this, that as a Representative from one of the States within which are one of the national parks and part of another there should be legislation enacted such as I have proposed in another bill that would make the Federal Government construct out of Federal funds entirely necessary highways leading into the national parks for a distance of 20, 30, or 40 miles, or as far as might be necessary to make them safely available to the people of the United States, instead of throwing the burden on sparsely settled communities. The Government should build many of them out of Federal funds.

Now, I say to you, Members of the House, that this is not a proposal which I introduced. It passed the Senate. It was introduced by Senator WALSH, a bill that he carried forward in an open way, a bill upon which he had hearings, and upon which he took the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations into full confidence. It is not my bill. It has come over here, however, in a way that makes me intensely interested in it, because I know it is valuable in a great territory belonging to the Nation and not alone to my State.

Mr. MANLOVE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. MANLOVE. Can the gentleman tell us of what length this contemplated road will be?

Mr. LEAVITT. Sixty-five miles long, through an unsettled country.

Mr. MANLOVE. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. LEAVITT. Something over $900,000.

Mr. FORT. Where does this road lead from?

Mr. LEAVITT. From Red Lodge to Cook City.

Mr. MANLOVE. What kind of a road is contemplated?

Mr. LEAVITT. It will be a 12-foot road, somewhat narrow, but good enough to carry the traffic going in and out of the park with safety to the people.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. What kind of a road is there from Cook City to the park?

Mr. LEAVITT. A very good road. It can be taken care of by the national park funds.

This matter is a thing that should be taken care of now, without awaiting the delays that might come through another consideration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, this amendment not only does violence to the rules of the House, but it seems to me it does violence to the Committee on Appropriations itself.

A bill was introduced in the Senate and passed very similar to this. So far as I have been able to learn, there were no hearings, and no investigation was made with reference to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? May I interrupt the gentleman? The gentleman does not say there were no hearings on this amendment?

Mr. DOWELL. Not before the Roads Committee. The bill came before the House and was referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. No one has asked for hearings, and no one has asked to present anything before the committee. It is now pending in the committee. Whatever may have been done in the Committee on Appropriations, the amendment presented here presents a peculiar situation. Mark you: The road fund is under the Agriculture Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. The subcommittee which recommends this amendment is appropriating for the Interior Department, and is by this amendment disposing of the road fund heretofore appropriated by the Agriculture Subcommittee.

Under the Federal road act the State of Montana is given a certain part of the appropriations made by Congress of the $75,000,000 on the condition that Montana matches it with a certain amount of money. In 1923 the State of Montana failed to pay its share to match the Federal aid allotted to that State, and that part of the appropriation was taken from the State, as provided by law.

This amendment is an attempt to save for the State of Montana the amount which was appropriated by the agricultural branch of the Committee on Appropriations for 1924 and 1925 and aggregates over $1,000,000, and this subcommittee now undertakes to take from the appropriation this amount and convert it to another purpose than a Federal-aid purpose, to wit, building a road in the forest. Seven million five hundred thousand dollars is annually appropriated for the Forestry Service for the purpose of building the forest roads and trails; and if this is not sufficient, I have not learned of it. That branch of the Government was before the committee and did not ask for more than $7,500,000 annually, and that is the amount that is being appropriated every year.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that if you adopt this amendment you absolutely destroy every principle in the Federal road act. [Applause.] You not only destroy that, but you make an exception of one State and provide in effect that this State need not comply with the provisions of the Federal aid act. If one State may receive its share of the Federal-aid funds without complying with the Federal aid act, why has not another State the same privilege? [Applause.]

The Federal road act was enacted to apply to all the States of the Union under equal conditions, and it seems to me that the House to-day should say that this principle must be maintained. The House should not permit a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee to divert more than a million dollars of money from the Federal-aid fund and make a special exception in one State. Unless this amendment is defeated to-day, you are going to destroy all that has been done by the Government in establishing a great Federal-aid-to-roads system throughout the United States. [Applause.]

I insist that if we are to maintain this great system, which has done so much in the past years, we should not make an exception of one State in the Union and say that it shall not be made to comply with the plain provisions of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How did they pull the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] over on this proposition?

Mr. DOWELL. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. BLANTON. They certainly have got him pulled over.

Mr. DOWELL. But I am able to say that this amendment not only transfers from the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Roads over to the Department of the Interior, but it takes from the Federal-aid fund over a million dollars and places it into a fund to go into the forestry department to build a forest road.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. How does it transfer this to the Department of the Interior when it is used on building a road through a national forest that is exclusively under the administration of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. DOWELL. How did the gentleman extend his jurisdiction in the Interior Department over to the Federal-aid fund in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. CRAMTON. Simply because the Senate has put an amendment in the bill and in accordance with the rule it is brought back for the action of the House. It does benefit a national park that is provided for in this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. But there is an appropriation for the national parks. If there is not a sufficient appropriation for the national parks, why does not the gentleman's committee recommend it and pass it so we will know what we are doing. [Applause.] But do not take it from the fund that has been appropriated for the purpose of aiding in the building of good roads.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman does not wish to give the House the impression that this is being spent altogether in Montana? The fact is that about half is spent in Wyoming.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not care where it is being spent. It is being diverted from the purpose for which it was appropriated and, therefore, should not be passed.

Mr. PEERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. Is it not true that Montana participates in the $7,500,000 that is appropriated for good roads?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; it gets its share, but it does not pay its share to match the Federal-aid road fund in that State. It wants the Government appropriation for 1924 and 1925 without contributing its share as provided in the Federal aid act.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. I will say to the gentleman that Montana is initiating an act that will enable it to meet all of these funds dollar for dollar, as it has in the past.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is asking that we pay all of the fund and put it into a forest road or trail.

Mr. LEAVITT. Let me say to the gentleman that there have been a couple of years during which they have not been able to meet it, but they have met it in full in the past and will in the future.

Mr. DOWELL. It has not met it in the past.

Mr. LEAVITT. They have met it very fully in the past.
 Mr. DOWELL. Approximately $600,000 was turned back in 1923. It did not meet that; it is not meeting it in 1924, and it is not meeting it in 1925. The reason this bill is an emergency is because the time is near at hand when, if it is not used in Montana, it will be turned back where the law of 1921 provides it shall be turned back.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not just a $1,000,000 proposition. It establishes a precedent which, if applied to all of the 48 States alike, would cost this Government $64,000,000 in the ultimate.

Mr. DOWELL. And not only that, but absolutely destroy the Federal aid law.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman's statement that this would apply in 48 States is not well founded, because there are national parks and national forests in only a few States.

Mr. DOWELL. But if one State is made an exception under this law by an act of Congress, the same privilege should apply to any other State. I want to say now that the way to maintain the Federal aid system is to make no exceptions under the law. The act of 1921 gave to every State an equal right under it. Do not make this change. Do not destroy the whole policy of Federal aid legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and members of the committee, I think if I were trying to accomplish what I would like to see accomplished ultimately I would favor this proposition. I have no hesitancy in saying that I think the Federal Government has gone too far in Federal aid. If I could cut the 15,000 miles down to about 6,000 or 7,000, I would do it in a minute; but I know I can not do it at this time.

There are two reasons why this amendment ought to be defeated. The first reason why it ought to be defeated is that we ought to turn back every single Senate amendment that is tacked onto an appropriation bill unless it is to care for an emergency. [Applause.] I do not believe anybody contends there is an emergency in this proposition. Consequently this House, to maintain its dignity, ought to defeat the amendment. That is reason No. 1. Reason No. 2 is just exactly what my colleague from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] outlined. The State of Montana has put into the Federal Treasury $6,500,000 over a certain period of time, and they have been given back for highway purposes $5,500,000. They have been paid out of the Federal Treasury $5,500,000 of it. Now, they have met, with an equal tax levy, a portion of that $5,500,000, but there is $1,000,000 of it, in round numbers, that they have not met.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to correct the gentleman. The Government puts in 80 cents out of every dollar and Montana 20 cents.

Mr. BEGG. But that is not the point at all.

Mr. LEAVITT. That should be corrected. The gentleman is on the Committee on Roads and should know better than that. As I recall, it is 53-47.

Mr. BEGG. Well, that is so near 50-50 that I am not harming Montana. If there is any prejudice, it is against the Government. The State of Montana complied with all of that appropriation save $1,000,000. Now she comes in, under the guise of supposed increased traffic over a piece of highway, approximately 20 miles in length, and asks to have the Government build the road. Nobody knows for a certainty that that traffic is going to increase. Montana asks the Federal Government to waive that part of the law that compels Montana to meet her proportionate share of the mileage cost.

Again, I say if I wanted to help kill the Federal aid plan I would help adopt this, because if Montana can escape so can Idaho and Nevada and so can every other State in the Union under some kind of guise. But I do not believe that is a fair way to play.

Now, what about the roads in the Yellowstone National Park? The gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] tried to leave the impression with this House it was dangerous to travel in an automobile through that national park because of congested traffic due to the increased traffic from that mining community.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I would rather finish my statement and then I will yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. But the gentleman wants his statement correct?

Mr. BEGG. I believe I am making a correct statement, I will say to the gentleman.

Now, what are the conditions? In the Yellowstone there is traffic only in the summer time. I was there last year in August and traveled practically every mile of highway in the Yellowstone and it is fairly good highway. There is one thing I think the Government could well afford to do, and that is to find some kind of element that will lay the dust; but so far as smoothness and solid roadbed are concerned, there is nothing to complain of; not when in Ohio we are being taxed to death on our farms to pay this tax into this Federal fund.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has stated that the farmers of Ohio are being taxed to pay money into this fund for the improvement of the highways of the country. I want to say to the gentleman that if the Ohio farmers are taxed for that purpose they are far more prosperous than farmers in other sections of the country.

Mr. BEGG. That is true, nevertheless. I know of 80 acres of land which is as good agricultural land as there is anywhere in the United States that because of the improved Federal highway going past it bears total taxes of $600 a year. Now, you are crying about agriculture needing relief, when one way you can relieve agriculture throughout the Middle West would be to devise some kind of scheme to make the people who wear out the roads pay for their rebuilding and repairing, and you will not have to pass any subsidy or anything of that kind to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Has the State of Ohio a gasoline tax?

Mr. BEGG. Yes; we have.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has made the speech I intended to make, and I therefore yield back my time. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I confess that since learning precisely what is in this amendment I have no very great interest in the outcome of this controversy; and I have only arisen because this presents, perhaps more forcibly and more conspicuously than any other incident has presented it since the passage of the organic Federal road act, the trouble into which the Congress brings itself when it enters upon this scheme of 50-50 appropriations.

What have we here? The citizens of Montana have paid their Federal taxes—their income taxes, and the Federal taxes that are collected from them by indirect methods. There has been a law passed providing that the State of Montana may have back some or maybe all—I do not know how much Federal taxes they pay—of that which they have paid into the Federal Treasury provided they will tax themselves again through their State and local agencies in order to match it 50-50. The State of Montana in part has complied with that, but as to a part she has found herself unable or unwilling to comply. Therefore she is to be denied, under the law as it stands, receiving along with her sister States benefits of that act in so far as it applies to the Federal taxes which her citizens have paid.

A few days ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], when the maternity bill was under consideration, pointed out the fact that the State of Illinois had never chosen to avail herself of the Federal participation. The State of Illinois is one of the great Federal taxpaying States, because they have the material upon which to be taxed. They have not seen fit to accept this coercion attempted on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. Does the gentleman know that Montana ranks second in the production of the copper of the United States and has first rank in the production of zinc, and that the Federal taxes on that production are almost totally paid in the city of New York, which is the reason Montana's Federal taxes do not appear as large as those of some other States?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not criticizing the State of Montana. I hope the gentleman understands that perfectly. What I am seeking is to reiterate what I have often said upon this floor touching what I conceive to be the essential wrong in this system.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman to spare me three or four minutes to finish this thought?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The State of Illinois did not see fit to take advantage or, rather, to impose upon herself the burden suggested in the maternity measure, and yet the State of Illinois continues to pay her proportion of the Federal taxes that are taken and distributed among all the other States of the Union that do see fit to accept the burdens of the 50-50 plan.

As I have said, entertaining the views I do, I care practically nothing about the outcome of this amendment, but I am taking advantage of this opportunity to express the hope that the Congress will stop now these 50-50 matters and not extend this plan into new fields of activity. [Applause.] We have an illustration of the unfairness, the injustice of the system prominently brought before us at this very hour and at this very minute, and I hope we are never going to extend it into the field of education and all the other fields that have been suggested. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my great regret that my distinguished and valued friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] seems to take a position antagonistic to a policy which has been in effect a long time, and which I believe is as thoroughly favored by the people of the country as any policy Congress has devised. [Applause.]

There is a great deal, if one could debate the question, which is now impossible, that might be said about the inherent justice of contributions being made by the Federal Government to match State contributions for the purpose of building up our highway system. But this can be said which can not be controverted, namely, that many States did not fairly start upon a satisfactory and efficient method of building highways until the present plan was adopted. Since then, during the years that have intervened, the people of the Nation have been securing what was as much needed as any other one thing, a system of good highways serving their welfare in the broadest sense. [Applause.]

Whatever may be the individual opinion of Members upon the general subject, or whatever may be the opinion of Members upon the pending proposition, I for one, coming from a State whose resources to a great extent go into other States and produce the basis upon which Federal taxes are largely paid, would much deplore the day, if it should arrive, when we will abandon the present policy and substitute the former policy, which was marked by such inertia and delay. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] a moment ago, in regard to the taxes on 80 acres of land, I want to state that no 80 acres of land in the United States, no 800 acres and no 8,000 acres in the United States, ever paid, directly or indirectly, $600 in Federal-aid road taxes in one year, and I challenge any Member of the House to prove that such tax was ever paid.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Ohio did not say that. He said the total tax—all taxes levied against 80 acres was $600.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The House did not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. If I did not say it, I intended to say that the total tax levied against the 80 acres was $600.

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is with much regret that I rise to oppose this amendment. I have a very high regard for the gentleman from Montana, but this amendment certainly violates the Federal road law of the Nation. It undertakes to take this million dollars and build forest roads. For the present year and for the next three years following this House has already authorized $7,500,000 a year to build forest roads, and that amount of money is to be apportioned among all the States that have forest roads. This amendment means that Montana will get her part of that $7,500,000, and in addition will get a million dollars to build forest roads. This does not go to build any roads in the national parks; this does not go to build any State highways; this is to build a road in a national forest.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman realizes that this road is not all in Montana—half of it is in Wyoming, and it goes through the national forest only as a matter of chance and leads into a national park. It is not being built as a forest highway except by the chance of nature.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Wyoming and Montana get their respective parts of the forest road fund. This is unfair to Idaho and every other State that needs forest roads.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I think Members of the House will all realize, if they stop to think a while, that you can talk about the dignity of the House and the dignity of this committee and that committee, but when representatives of the House sit down in conference with Members of the Senate the House can not expect to have everything its own way. We have come back with a conference report which you have approved this afternoon without a word of criticism—approved it unanimously—in which we passed on the things within our authority, and in that conference report let me remind you that the report as approved only increases the House bill $6,700 and reduces the Senate bill $1,300,500. [Applause.] Your House conferees have not been negligent of the interests of the House. As to this amendment, we have done only what the rules of the House authorize us to do; we have brought it back here for your consideration.

This committee should not be subjected to criticism for bringing it back. Of course, we will abide by whatever decision you gentlemen make.

What is the real proposition before you? I think that no act of Congress is sacrosanct. I think that there is no act of Congress that can not be repealed when Congress wants to repeal it or changed when Congress wants to change it. Under the road laws, the money is apportioned to the several States and can be expended when the States match that money in certain proportion. The State of Montana suffered all of the depression of other States a few years ago and, in addition, due to a great crop failure, suffered more than many of the other States. Being a one-crop State, where there was, with the failure of that crop, the wheat failure, it was so serious that the Congress made appropriations to furnish even seeds to these farmers so that they could again plant. With those conditions, is it to be wondered at that the State of Montana, in which one-third of its total area is exempt from taxation because it is taken up with parks and forests and Indian reservations, was not able at that time to match the Federal aid and avail itself of the privilege that the State of Iowa or the State of Michigan or the State of Ohio enjoyed?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In just a moment. I want first to make a connected statement. Then I shall be glad to yield. That State failed to match that money. It is not that Montana is going to get more than other States, but Montana is going to get less because her poverty under these conditions made it impossible for her to match the Federal contribution.

What do we propose to do to relieve that situation? We propose that the money which otherwise has been apportioned to Montana as her share and which she was unable to match, in order not that it shall not be turned back into the Treasury, but over to her more prosperous sister States, to the extent of about $1,000,000 shall be used to construct a highway through a national forest in the State of Montana and a national forest in the State of Wyoming, which whenever it is built will be built 100 per cent out of Federal funds, because that is the law. [Applause.] There is nothing monstrous about that. We are not "destroying every principle of the road-fund policy," as my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] suggests. We are providing that that money shall be used to build a road, which ought to be built and will some time be built 100 per cent out of the Federal funds. But instead of doing it now out of the $7,500,000, because that is not enough to reach this situation, we propose to spend this money which would otherwise revert to other States that have had their share. The $7,500,000 for roads in forests are naturally to be used, first, to construct roads that are needed for the development of the forests for forest purposes. This road under consideration is in a forest and can not otherwise be built, but it is not of primary importance to forest development, and, therefore, its construction will have to wait unless you do the thing that we here propose. Why should you do that?

It is not only to let the poor State of Montana retain that money which she has been unable to match because of her poverty, but there are two reasons why that road ought to be built from the Federal point of view, connecting, as it does, with the Yellowstone National Park. In the first place, it will be a new avenue of approach to the park. I do not go as far as the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] in saying that highways leading to national parks should be constructed at Federal expense, but when they go exclusively through Federal lands that are exempt from taxation by the State we are confronted with an obligation; and if we want the road built, the Federal Government has got to build it. Second, it ought to be constructed as a benefit to the national park, the greatest, perhaps, of all of our national parks, because all of the traffic now coming into the area which will be opened up by this new road has to go through the park, and with new mining developments opening up and increasing that traffic will increase and will interfere with park traffic and wear out our park roads. If this road is constructed, then the traffic, instead of going through the park to the mining region, will go through the other way and will not interfere with the park or wear out the park roads.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Michigan really need this additional approach to the park? Can not he go around the next time he goes out there and go in the other way?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are four approaches to the park.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman use all four of them?

Mr. CRAMTON. It depends on which side of the park one is and where you are.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not a great inconvenience to the gentleman to go to one of the other approaches?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is no inconvenience to me. This will open up a new avenue of approach, and it will remove from the park roads the burden of this traffic which has been referred to, which ought not to be upon the park roads. We have brought this to you, gentlemen of the House, and we ask you to approve of this item which the Senate conferees have insisted upon. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 49, noes 126.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 64: On page 108, after line 15, insert:

"Hereafter appropriations made for the administration, protection, and maintenance of the national parks and national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior shall be available for expense of depositing public money."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that by the use of the word "hereafter" he is making this permanent law on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the way he wants to legislate, to take away from the legislative committees their function and assume it by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I will state to the gentleman the purpose of this amendment, and then, of course, he will vote as he pleases in reference to it. The House has a habit of doing that anyway.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is making it permanent law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly; that is very plain. For a long time the expense of depositing these moneys of the park service has been borne out of the appropriation and the ruling of the Comptroller General has decided against that, and so we are authorizing that the appropriations made here bear the necessary expense of the deposit of public moneys.

Mr. BYRNS. What does the gentleman mean by the expense of depositing money? What is that expense and how does it arise?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a trifling amount.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure of that, but I was wondering what the expense was.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The expense of accounting and getting the money in the depositories, and so forth.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course there are no banks in the parks and they are out-of-the-way sections and collections are made of park fees, and so forth. I have not the exact information of that, but there is a statement, however, that it was a small amount, and they have been doing it for years, and it is to clear up that situation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 65: On page 118 of the bill, after line 13, insert:

"HOWARD UNIVERSITY

"For maintenance, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, teachers, and other regular employees of the university, ice, and stationery, the balance of which shall be paid from donations and other sources, of which sum not less than $2,200 shall be used for normal instruction, $125,000;

"For tools, materials, salaries of instructors, and other necessary expenses of the department of manual arts, of which amount not to exceed $21,800 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, $28,000;

"Medical department: For part cost needed equipment, laboratory supplies, apparatus, and repair of laboratories and buildings, $9,000;

"For material and apparatus for chemical, physical, biological, and natural-history studies and use in laboratories of the science hall, including cases and shelving, $5,000;

"For books, shelving, furniture, and fixtures for the libraries, $3,000;

"For improvement of grounds and repairs of buildings, including replacement of steam line from central heating plant, $30,000;

"Fuel and light: For part payment for fuel and light, Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University, $18,000;

"Total, Howard University, $218,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it worth while for me to try to handle the discussion I want to give here in five minutes. I am really convinced that we ought to have more time for this discussion, and I do not believe that, as the gentleman from Michigan says, we are all decided as to what we want to do in this matter. I believe I shall decline to accept the five minutes. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman would accept five minutes, and all I am seeking to do is to conserve the time of the House; and if the gentleman feels he must have 10 minutes, if there is the alternative of the point of no quorum, I have to accept it.

Mr. LOWREY. If I can get my map brought in and have 10 minutes, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. CRAMTON. I extend the allowance to a total of 10 minutes to my friend from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, this is an old question that has been much before the House, the question of appropriations to Howard University. About 50 years ago this Congress began to make these appropriations and in that 50 years has given about $3,000,000 of the people's money to that institution for the higher education of colored people. Now, I am not here to oppose any rights of the colored race; I am not here to oppose any opportunities properly to be given to the colored race, but for three sessions of this Congress it has been admitted that this appropriation had no foundation in law, and, being illegal, it has been knocked out on a point of order in the House; but it has then gone to the Senate, and each time the Senate has put it in through a conference report. Now, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] spoke very clearly on that this afternoon, the way the Senate puts into a conference report an appropriation which the House has rejected and thus puts it over on the House. The gentleman from Washington spoke strongly against this method of procedure. Two other men have spoken against it to-day. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAD] said he would not submit to a thing of that kind except in a real emergency. I submit this is not an emergency. In the first place, there are abundant opportunities for the schooling of the Negro race without our appropriating $200,000 a year for this one university. In my State there are a dozen boarding schools for negroes—and I wish you gentlemen to get this fact—worth from $100,000 to $500,000 each in material equipment.

That is more boarding schools, more equipment, more money-backing for schools than the white people of that State have in proportion to the number of people of each race who are really ready to go away from home for the purpose of attending boarding school. I am ready to assert it without fear of contradiction that in my State the Negro race is better provided with boarding-school facilities in proportion to their needs than the white people are. Of course, we have scores of young white people prepared for college to where we have one negro. Only a small proportion of negro boys and girls ever advance in their studies to where they are really prepared to enter these higher institutions.

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Is it not because they have a vote in your State and they have not one here on these municipal questions?

Mr. LOWREY. No, sir. Very few of them vote in my State; exceedingly few.

In my district there are at Holly Springs two large and well-equipped negro colleges with good brick buildings that compare favorably with the average of our institutions for white people. Then, there are somewhat similar institutions at West Point, Meridian, Jackson, Tugaloo, Edwards, Utica, Piney Woods' School, Alcorn, besides some others of smaller pretensions. In almost every southern State that is the case. In other words, we have boarding schools that are called colleges which amply meet the demand for negro education all over the southland. Many of them are not standardized, however, but we have a number of boarding schools, called colleges, for white people that are not yet standardized. In fact, the work of standardizing our so-called colleges is now the great educational task of our southern people. To one of these negro schools in my State the State has just appropriated $50,000 for a new building. Three others, I believe, have recent gifts of from $75,000 to $100,000 each. About two years ago a Chicago paper announced $8,000,000 of recent contributions to negro schools. My contention is that with the abundant provisions that have already been made, and with the great tide of philanthropy that is flowing into this channel, there is neither need nor excuse for our appropriating illegally from the Public Treasury to maintain this one institution in Washington.

I know the situation in the South, and it is simply unquestionable that we have a full supply of institutions for the education of the colored race and that they are given opportunities at much less cost than can be had at Howard University, with all its free appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

In the North nobody would say, I suppose, that the negroes are suffering for lack of educational opportunities. Hence we do not need to pass this amendment in order to meet any emergency.

Now, another question: Does this institution provide what it is claimed to provide? Here is a statement from the Howard Welfare League. This is not a southern Democrat talking; this is not a northern Republican talking; this is a negro, a prominent graduate of Howard University, speaking for an organization of Howard University graduates organized for the promotion of the interests of the university. Here is what he says:

The trustee board as constituted and selected does not pursue and will not pursue such policies as would tend to place upon the shoulders of the graduates of the university the responsibility of its perpetuation. Any legislation which fails to include this as its chief object will hurt, rather than help, Howard University. The Howard Welfare League wants more money for the university, of course, but with this we want the university organized so that it will eventually become strong and seek its support largely from its constituents rather than be a permanent burden upon the Government.

Now, that is the word of the alumni of the institution organized for its support, that they ought not to rest upon the Government for the support of an institution which is not a Government institution, when the alumni could do it and ought to do it, and they are appealing to us to let them do it, instead of resting upon the Government. Here is another message from the same organization:

The reason for presenting this memorial is that the present corporation known as Howard University has degenerated into a political machine financed by funds of the United States Government.

And the writer goes on to show that it ought to be self-sustaining and supported by the colored people.

Here is the question: The same article says that the institution is in the hands of a self-perpetuating board of trustees, not responsible to the Government or anybody else. The Government appropriates funds to it annually and has no direct control of the funds. It is the only institution in America for whites, Indians, negroes, or anybody else where the Government does that. My claim is that it is not necessary and is contrary to our fundamental law. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to discuss this proposition in three minutes, and I only invite the attention of this House to two particular phases of this legislation. One is, I contend, that Congress is making an appropriation illegally; that is, we are making an appropriation without even the color of legal justification. Furthermore, we are making an appropriation and attaching to it no control and no supervision of its expenditure. We are making an appropriation of $218,000, and when we convene here next December we shall not know whether this $218,000 was spent in teaching the young idea how to shoot or whether it was spent in riotous living. This Congress will not know and there is no way of knowing.

I take the position that if we are going to appropriate money regardless of the purpose, we ought to know what becomes of it and how it is disposed of. In the last few weeks we have been enlightened by illuminating disclosures of misappropriations of funds in the District of Columbia, and if I had the time I could bring to the attention of this Congress facts to show that the $218,000 for this university has been squandered and used for purposes for which it was not appropriated.

I have evidence to show that the trustees a few years ago suspected irregularities in the expenditure of these funds for duplication of work and as a result of their investigation four persons, classed as professors, were discharged at a saving of $8,000 per annum. I understand further that the president of the university appointed a secretary two years ago at a salary of $10,000 whose sole duty apparently was to prepare and publish propaganda to promote the selfish and ambitious aims of the president. Yet the proponents of this amendment are urging this appropriation in behalf of the helpless and deserving colored people of the United States. I submit that in all fairness, if the appropriation is to be made, some provision should be attached requiring that it be spent judiciously. I know it is claimed that the expenditures are closely scrutinized, but in view of the evidence already referred to, I have my doubts about it. I have evidence to show a great many more irregularities and suspicions as to the expenditure of these funds in the past, but the chairman of the committee has seen fit to limit my time to such an extent that it would be impossible to enumerate at length. However, I will state that there is evidence to show that there is now pending in one of the courts of the District of Columbia a case in which the secretary-treasurer of Howard University and two of its trustees are charged with illegal methods in the conduct of the business of another corporation in which they were officers. I do not know whether the charges are true, but if I were going to place my money in their hands I would certainly want to know, and I am equally anxious to know whether it is true before I vote to take money from the People's Treasury and place it in their hands. For these and other reasons I want to register my protest against the passage of the proposed amendment.

Furthermore, I am unable to see any good reason why Congress should be called upon to make an appropriation for this institution. It is a private concern and this amendment provides $30,000 for the improvement or erection of buildings in which the Government has no claim whatever. If it has been the practice to appropriate this amount annually for the past 40 years, the Government now has invested in buildings or real estate at Howard University upward of $1,200,000 and has no right, title, or legal interest in it whatsoever. I submit that if this money is to be spent in erecting buildings the title of same should be vested in the Government.

We have negro colleges in the South doing just as good work as Howard University, and they are not receiving one penny from the Federal Government, and, if I am correctly informed, do not want any. There is Shaw University, at Raleigh, N. C.; Fisk University, at Nashville, Tenn.; Atlanta University and Clark University, at Atlanta, Ga.; and others I could name that are doing just as much for the Negro race as Howard University, and they have just as much right to ask this Government to give them $218,000 a year as Howard University; and I want to say in conclusion that this Congress has no legal right and no legal justification for making this appropriation. It is an unwarranted and unjustified raid on the Public Treasury, and I hope that the American people will in some way register their protest against the action of Congress in making this annual appropriation.

I could show you from evidence in my possession that men have been carried on the rolls of this institution for a period of 12 months or longer and have not done one iota of school work in the meantime. I could show you from further evidence that two deans of this university were compelled to take a forced leave of a year and then three others substituted in their places, and all of them drawing a salary of $3,000 or $3,500 annually and at the same time. I could go further and tell you that the president of this institution, while employed and paid $7,000 a year from the funds that were appropriated, has been given in addition to that an amount approximating $3,000, in the way of his home, emoluments, and so forth, and at the same time he has been president of another institution drawing a salary, being at the same time editor of American Negro Biography, what you might call a negroes' Who's Who, and he charges from $100 to $300 to every negro who wants to place a photographic plate of his "mug" in this publication. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe that however much we have done so without lawful authority, the money which the Government of the United States has spent on Howard University is one of the most valuable investments the Congress has ever made. I have made a study during the nine years I have been here of what that university is doing for the colored race.

Have you ever thought what you would do if God Almighty had made you black? Have you ever thought about that? My God, what a curse you would consider it. If there is any race of people on earth who in my judgment deserve great commendation for progress it has made under great handicap, it is the colored race. Just think what they have done since 1865. Howard University prepares colored doctors for colored people.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Does not the gentleman think the greatest commendation we could give them would be to send them to some isolated territory where they could have their own republic?

Mr. BLANTON. I would not object to that.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Without discussing the merits or demerits of the proposition, there is much in what the gentleman says; but these points of order have been made for two, three, and four years.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not been making them. I have made a lot of points of order against improper legislation, but I never made one against Howard University.

Mr. BYRNS. Neither have I; but regardless of that they have been made and the House has been put upon notice. Does not the gentleman think we ought to proceed in a regular legislative way and have legislation directly authorizing this?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I think so; but when we have no legislation, and until we do pass it, we ought to give them this money to conduct this school. [Applause.]

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Is it not true that that particular race has more than furnished its share of soldiers when it was called upon during any crisis?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman to get me off on that, because I know what some of these colored soldiers did in Houston, Tex., where I was born.

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Well, that is just a few.

Mr. BLANTON. One company of them went down the streets of my native city and ran bayonets into the stomachs of little girls, and things of that kind; but I do not condemn the whole race because of what these few did.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is for this appropriation, although there is no authority of law for it. Was not the gentleman on this floor not over an hour ago opposing an amendment because he said there was no authority of law for it?

Mr. BLANTON. I was.

Mr. HUDSPETH. So the gentleman is not consistent.

Mr. BLANTON. I was not in that instance; no.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is inconsistent in this instance, is he not?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; because this is a most meritorious proposition. Sometimes it pays to be inconsistent, just as there are exceptions to all rules.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I know; and I want to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman says they are doing a great deal for the colored folks out here at Howard University.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish the gentleman knew what I know about all the good work they are doing.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Are they doing any more than we are doing in Texas, where we give them every facility on earth?

Mr. BLANTON. No, indeed; and I congratulate the gentleman, because he did a great deal for them when he was in the State senate.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; I gave them a double appropriation down there.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to use a little bit of my time. I have checked up on this proposition. This colored race needs doctors, it needs colored nurses, it needs dentists, and it needs teachers to teach in their schools, and Howard University every year prepares teachers for the colored race—colored teachers, if you please. The only kind of teachers who ought to teach the colored race is colored teachers and not white teachers. [Applause.] Howard University is providing trained colored teachers to teach the race; it is providing trained colored dentists to wait on them, and trained doctors. It is a good investment, and let us keep it up, law or no law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, I have been in touch with Howard University. It has been suggested that we do not know how this money is spent. Every penny of it is passed upon by the Interior Department and by the Comptroller General. More than that, in the last five years I have been in touch with the university; and I say it is a very great credit to the Negro race that so soon after they emerged from slavery, from the days when they were forbidden to learn, they now have a university here, with 2,000 students, that is rated as class A among the universities of the Nation. That is a credit to the race. Howard University has been built up with aid from the Federal Government for 50 years, and your committee did not feel it had the right to interpose anything in the way of the House expressing its will upon that which it has been doing for 50 years.

Mr. LOWREY. Will not the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to my friend because that reminds me of something I overlooked.

Mr. LOWREY. I think it is fair I should say, inasmuch as my time was so limited, I am not here to deny what the gentleman says about the university being creditable and doing good work. My position is there are abundant schools to do this work without the Government running one, and that some of them are doing it better and at less cost than Howard University.

Mr. CRAMTON. I disagree entirely with the gentleman from Mississippi, in that there are large sections of the country where very little, if anything, is being done; other sections where enough is not being done; and nowhere in the country where all the things are being done that are being done in Howard or being done as well.

The gentleman, with his admitted approval of the institution, has referred here to some report put out by some welfare league or organization of the alumni of this institution. This has also been brought to my attention. Let me only say this: I suppose there is not a university or a college anywhere but what has a few alumni who feel they could run it better than the established authorities. [Applause.] They all have a few knockers and kickers, and Howard University is in line with all other universities in having some of them.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LOWREY) there were—ayes 68, nays 22.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 66: Page 120, after the word "ambulance," in line 2, insert "and not exceeding $200 for the purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers for which payments may be made in advance, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $52,894."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur. The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5858. An act for the relief of Charles Ritzel;

H. R. 120. An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Porto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 6874. An act for the relief of James Madison Brown;

H. R. 8192. An act authorizing the designation of postmasters by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers, for performance of authorized service on power boat and star routes in Alaska; and

H. R. 9341. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 3624. An act for the relief of Hannah Parker;

H. R. 5012. An act to legalize a pier into the Atlantic Ocean at the foot of Rehoboth Avenue, Rehoboth Beach, Del.; and

H. R. 8132. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes.

THE PROSPERITY OF THE FARMER DEPENDS UPON THE TARIFF

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD some remarks I made over the radio last Saturday night on the subject of the tariff.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech recently delivered by him over the radio on the subject of the tariff. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks I submit the following:

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY ERNEST R. ACKERMAN, OF NEW JERSEY, FROM STATION WRC, WASHINGTON, D. C., ON SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 17, 1926

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, the subject of my address to you is "The prosperity of the farmer depends upon the tariff."

If we could be in possession of sufficient silver dollars to place them in a row side by side on the equator until they extended completely around the globe and touched the point of beginning, we would have $1,056,000,000, or exactly the amount of money that, according to recent newspaper dispatches, the people of this Nation paid out in 1925 for agricultural commodities which came in direct competition with the products of American farms.

As we could have produced these articles here, the farmers in the United States would have received that money instead of the foreign farmers. That billion-dollar-plus purchase of the products of American farms certainly would have helped toward solving any kind of problem, agricultural or otherwise.

If this billion and over of farm products comes in, and its entrance being barred would help to the extent indicated, why should the tariff, if it is a barrier and restricts imports, be lowered? Why increase the difficulty for the farmer? Why not further assist him?

What the people of the United States want most of all is to be steadily employed at remunerative wages, so that they will have spare cash to invest in those things that will add to their enjoyment and comfort.

The farmers' healthiest condition prevails when he enjoys the proceeds at satisfactory prices of the products of his farm through the constant demands of an increasing home market.

To help to attain this end the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce bends all its energies. Congress now appropriates the sum of $3,200,000 for this purpose.

Since the Fordney-McCumber tariff became a law, a little more than three years ago, our imports and exports have both very materially increased. Our customs revenue has also increased from $451,356,000 in 1922 to $570,829,000 in 1925. This increase of $119,000,000 has been a contributing cause toward reducing taxes. At the same time our imports have increased from $3,112,000,000 to $4,224,000,000, an increase of more than $1,112,000,000. During the same period our exports rose from $3,831,000,000 in 1922 to $4,908,743,000 last year, an increase of $1,077,000,000. Its excess was $77,000,000 over a billion dollars.

You accepted the bald statement made a moment ago when I visualized for you this figure of $1,000,000,000 by placing silver dollars side by side. May I explain further? Thank you.

Eight silver dollars placed side by side in a straight line and just touching each other measures practically 1 foot of 12 inches. As there are 5,280 feet in a mile, multiplication would disclose 42,240 dollars in a mile. You all know that the circumference of the globe at the Equator is approximately 25,000 miles; therefore multiplying the number of dollars in 1 mile by 25,000, the earth's equatorial circumference, a resulting figure of $1,056,000,000 is obtained, which is $21,000,000 less than the excess of exports of the United States in 1924 amounted to over the exports for 1922. For a 3½-year-old baby that is a very fine increase in size and weight.

Those opposed to the policy of protection complain that imports are hindered by the tariff; but, strange as it may appear, there never has been a time under a protective tariff when imports were so large as in 1925 under the present law. That year the imports showed an increase of 17 per cent over 1924. Rubber being first, then raw silk, and sugar, coffee, wool, petroleum, newsprint paper, furs, hides, tin, burlaps, copper, wood pulp, tobacco, fertilizers, diamonds, lumber, raw cotton, cocoa, tea, in the order mentioned, as far as value in dollars is concerned. Six hundred and eighteen million more in all than the value of all imports in 1924, causing one of the news agencies recently to observe that "foreign goods are finding their way into the American market with greater and greater facility." This does not look like restriction and curtailment. The same group of persons opposed to protection say that the "tariff is a tax" and is added to the price of the articles sold, thus causing the American people to pay four to six billions of dollars more than would otherwise be the case; or, in other words, we take it to mean that if a tariff for revenue only prevailed that sum of money would have been saved to the public.

Let us subject that statement to a microscopic and critical analysis. I am unable to find any figures comprising such a sum being taken in through the customhouses, for less than one-tenth of six billions is the greatest peace-time sum that has been taken in by the Treasury on imports in any one year. That being so, however, those opposed to the protective policy claim, strange as it may seem, that there is some special alchemy that manifests itself whenever money is paid in for tariff duties that changes the payments thus made at least ten times, to the injury of the ultimate consumer.

Six billions of dollars is a large sum of money; equal to fifteen times as many actual silver dollars as there are in the United States Treasury, or to 30 bands of paper dollar bills extending around the earth at the Equator. It is nearly twice the sum of the annual Budget for running all the expenses of the United States Government, including all the payments and bonuses paid to the veterans for a year, and more than three times the amount of the income-tax payments last year. When carefully examined this claim of pocket extraction of the sum of 6,000,000,000 will be discovered not to have been founded on bedrock facts, but on the unstable sands of prejudice and a highly imaginative and distorted basis.

If the tariff is a tax, it can not amount to more than $570,000,000, the amount paid in by those who have duties to pay. No highly expansive inflation takes place when dollars are paid into the Treasury when importers settle their bills with Uncle Sam. Verbal gaseous fulminations seem to be generated only by the dollars paid in for customs duties and not when paid in for tobacco, income taxes, or stamp taxes, thereby suggesting to the inquiring mind that subtle propaganda to inflame the imagination is the aim of the orator when he discusses the fiscal policy of the Government. To many the word "imported" has an attractive, appealing, seductive sound. That foible in human nature is capitalized and a greater profit is demanded on the actual cost of the goods because of the fact that a customs tax is paid.

Are my hearers aware that if the whole amount of duty were considered a tax and demanded of the people as an assessment on the inhabitants of the country irrespective of age, rank, or condition it would not amount to a 2-cent postage stamp a day, year in and year out. Computed on a weekly basis, it would not reach "a dime a week," the price of a comparatively cheap cigar, as can be easily proven. A dime a week paid by each person in the United States of America would exceed by $38,400,000 the amount brought to the customhouses last year by the rates imposed by the Fordney-McCumber Act. It has never cost the people of the United States of America as much as a red postage stamp per person a day. It never will cost each person 2 cents a day until the customs revenue reaches $839,500,000 per annum, or $209,000,000 more than is now being collected.

Canada and Great Britain are both pointed to as shining lights as examples for us to follow for our benefit; but the charges then would be doubled, for the normal charges of both countries viewed from this angle are 100 per cent greater than the situation I have just explained to listeners.

The South, which numbers among its national legislators many who vociferously proclaim against the fundamentals of a protective policy, has prospered generously in the matter of exports, 33 per cent of what is nationally exported having its origin in one or the other of the 13 Southern States. Texas in 1924 exported more than any other State in the Union, even surpassing by several millions of dollars the Empire State of New York in the volume of her consignments to points abroad. As an additional comparison, Texas exported as much in value as all the remaining dozen Southern States with the exception of Mississippi and Arkansas, or more than Pennsylvania, Illinois, Washington, and Wisconsin put together. These facts are easily verified at the Department of Commerce.

Louisiana exported the same year as much as North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, and Oklahoma combined, and more than either Michigan, Ohio, or Massachusetts, whose originating exports each exceeded $100,000,000. Virginia's primary exports exceeded the combined total of Ohio, Colorado, North and South Dakota, Idaho, and Wyoming. Georgia's exports matched in 1925 the sum of all the articles originating in Connecticut, Iowa, and Rhode Island. North Carolina shipped to foreign points in 1925 more than did Kansas, Kentucky, and Missouri.

If there is a situation that it is believed can be cured by legislation, certainly the farmers, above all others, want a market for their products, a greater one than they now enjoy, if possible, where their present surplus, although small, will be consumed.

As manufacturers supply sixty billions of the Nation's internal and external commerce the unrestricted opening of the American markets to foreigners by removing or decreasing duties would be like pouring "oil on a fire." It would lessen the opportunity for the farmers to market what they are now getting paid for. If what they are now receiving is not sufficiently remunerative, they should want more factories darkening the skies with their smoke, in the event hydroelectric power is not used.

More home consumers for their products in every State, city, town, village, and hamlet in the country should be the cry of the farmers, not an urge to restrict the manufacturing enterprises which create their only stable market. Protection in the form of tariff duties never closed a factory or threw a workman out of employment. Soup houses and bread lines come when factories are closed, because of an excessive influx of foreign articles, for it is a fact that the farmer sells 90 per cent of his crops at home. Only 1 per cent of the corn crop is exported.

The fact that automobiles to the amount of $3,000,000,000 out of the $14,000,000,000 marketed last year were sold on the installment plan and that over 20,000,000 machines are traversing the roads daily shows that the people as a whole are prosperous. I believe they have a right to assume good times are going to continue.

Sometimes there comes out of the West the tale that the people living there are in a deplorable and depressed condition. The official registration of automobiles in 12 Western States show that in Ohio the people have nearly 253,000 more motor vehicles than two years ago; in Minnesota, 121,000; in Iowa, 87,000; in Missouri, 126,000; in North Dakota, 35,000; in South Dakota, 47,000; in Nebraska, 75,000; in Kansas, 81,000; in Indiana, 135,000; in Illinois, 294,000; in Wisconsin, 131,000; in Michigan, 293,000. These facts I obtained directly from the various States. In the last two years then there has been enough loose money and credit in those 12 States to enable the people to own and operate nearly 1,600,000 more machines than they formerly owned and operated. Or, in other words, the people of those 12 States alone have to-day something like a billion more money and credit invested in machines than they had two years ago.

The purpose of the Fordney-McCumber tariff was to hinder imports that would hamper the industries of America, at the same time creating a free list so comprehensive that it would be helpful to the American public in general without injuring native industries and the result was the lowest protective tariff, namely, 14.5 per cent, that has ever been enacted. The percentage of the Payne law being 19.3 per cent, the Dingley law 25.5 per cent, and the McKinley law 22.1 per cent.

Since the Fordney-McCumber tariff was enacted life insurance has increased from $50,000,000,000 in 1922 to $63,000,000,000 in 1924, nearly 35 per cent. Savings-bank deposits have increased from $14,351,000,000 in 1922 to $15,533,000,000 in 1924, over a billion dollars. Building loan association assets in the same time have increased from $2,890,000,000 in 1922 to $3,942,000,000 in 1924, or 40 per cent.

Manufacturing products in the United States annually exceed $60,000,000,000, while agriculture has a turnover of $12,000,000,000. Foreign commerce, imports, and exports together, nearly, $9,000,000,000, while mining exceeds $5,000,000,000.

For the month of January, 1926, imports exceeded exports by $15,000,000, and they were the largest for that month since 1920. For February they were $36,000,000 over 1925. In March they leaped $24,000,000 more. That being so, the joy of those who advocate the increased use of foreign goods must be on an ascending scale. Their argument that the Fordney-McCumber tariff hinders imports totters and falls to the ground and is utterly demolished.

Let me leave this thought with you as I conclude: The farmer if he did not have the activity of manufacturing to sustain him might be—yes, would be—more hampered in marketing his crops than he is at the present time. If the American market is ruined by the cheap labor of either Europe or Asia, the surplus of farm products would be so great as to cause the farmers to suffer a degree of adversity without a parallel in the history of the world.

The exhilaration of war, of course, had its detrimental after effects. Friends of the farmer are very sorry that as yet he has not fully recovered from the blow then inflicted. For those engaged in industry other than farming know very well that the farmer experiences vicissitudes away and beyond those who are engaged in other occupations. They also know that a thunder storm of unusual intensity, a cloud-burst, unseasonable heat or cold, prolonged drought or untimely frost may create losses which can not be provided for, or for which insurance is not available. He did suffer acutely, but the situation of to-day is less severe than it was two years ago, and the healing process will progressively increase in the immediate future.

Should a revision of the tariff be undertaken it should be approached from the angle of helping the farmer, and I am firmly of the opinion that a scientific revision of the tariff on an ascending scale in the farmer's favor would be most acceptable to him as well as be beneficial in its effects upon the country.

I am now and have been for years an ardent protectionist, and the opportunity has been mine to have seen at first-hand the workers of the world in many quarters, if not in nearly all parts of the globe, as well as to have seen the prosperous and happy conditions of multitudes in our magnificent country enjoying an average wage of $27 per week, which is the highest ever paid to any workers in any country under the sun. Therefore, I am more convinced than ever that the policy of protection is one the United States should continue to follow.

Thank you.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the House proceed to debate the question of conservation and reforestation for three hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call attention to the fact there are two orders for speeches on that day, one of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] for 35 minutes and one of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] for 35 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will be glad to amend my unanimous-consent request to follow those speeches and ask that the House then proceed to debate the question of conservation and reforestation for three hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that on next Thursday, after the approval of the Journal, disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and the two orders following thereafter, it be in order to discuss for not to exceed three hours the general subject of conservation and reforestation. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the floor leader been consulted about that, and is the gentleman sure there will be no conference reports to be taken up?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That has taken up this entire day.

Mr. TILSON. The gentlemen will have to take their chances on that. Of course, if a privileged matter comes up, it will have the right of way.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Can the majority leader give us any assurance about the likelihood of a conference report coming up at that time?

Mr. TILSON. At this time I do not know of any conference report that will be ready on that day.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will this interfere with considering the Private Calendar on Friday?

Mr. TILSON. It may; I can not promise the gentleman. I shall ask for the consideration of the Private Calendar at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. We certainly ought not to dispense with Private Calendar day this week.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that Saturday afternoon is open, and I take it if the Private Calendar is not considered on Friday the majority leader may ask that the Private Calendar be considered on Saturday.

Mr. BEGG. Why do you not have this debate on Saturday afternoon?

Mr. BLANTON. Why not have this forestry debate some night?

Mr. DAVEY. We have been displaced to-day, and I think we should be given Thursday.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman agree that this discussion may take place in Committee of the Whole instead of the House?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That would be perfectly all right with me if it can be done under the rules of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it in order for the gentleman to amend his request to have this debate in Committee of the Whole instead of in the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course, such unanimous consent can be given, but the Chair does not see how that would be of any advantage to anyone concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. There would be the advantage that it would perhaps keep somebody from disturbing the session by a demand for a quorum.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I do not think there is any ground for that, because I do not know of anyone who would make such a point of order. This is American forestry week, and it is being observed all over the United States, in the schools and everywhere else, and I think the House ought to set aside three hours for the discussion of the subject here.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday after the conclusion of the order heretofore granted my colleague Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNING, be each permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the order just adopted has been completed his colleague Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNING, may each be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the time has been allotted up to nearly 5 o'clock. Does the gentleman want to fix the schedule so that it will run until 6 o'clock, have roll calls and call Members in? I do not think it is wise, but I am not going to object.

Mr. RANKIN. Will not the gentleman from South Dakota change his request to Friday?

Mr. TILSON. I think the gentleman ought not to do that.

Mr. RANKIN. I think some of this veteran legislation is very important and these gentlemen ought to have an opportunity to discuss it in the House.

Mr. TILSON. There will be about four hours and 10 or 15 minutes on Thursday after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RANKIN. I know it sometimes takes two or three hours to dispose of matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; and it oftentimes takes but a few minutes to dispose of matters on the Speaker's table. It seems to me that this will fill the day and I hope that the permission will be given.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the three hours' debate set aside for reforestation on next Thursday that the time be equally divided between the majority and the minority side and that the majority leader control one-half and the minority leader control one-half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan supplements his request that the time for debate on reforestation be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MONUMENT IN FRANCE TO AMERICAN INFANTRY REGIMENTS

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may file minority views on the bill (H. R. 9694) authorizing the erection of a monument in France to commemorate the valiant services of certain American Infantry regiments attached to the French Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to file minority views of the bill H. R. 9694. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FRENCH STEAMSHIP "MADELEINE" (H. DOC. NO. 335)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to a claim presented by the Government of France against the Government of the United States on account of the losses sustained by the owner of the French steamship Madeleine as the result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood, which at the time of the collision was being operated by the War Department, and I recommend that an appropriation be authorized to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Washington, April 20, 1926.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of Samuel D. Maxwell (H. R. 6528), Sixty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT

And then, on motion of Mr. TILSON (at 5 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 21, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1848. By Mr. BANKHEAD: Petition of sundry citizens of Atlantic City, N. J., protesting the passage of House bills 7179 and 7822; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1849. By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Memorial of Lake Geneva (Wis.) Painters' Union, urging Congress to restore to Eugene V. Debs his civil rights; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1850. Also, memorial of Lake Geneva (Wis.) Trades Council, urging Congress to restore to Eugene V. Debs his civil rights; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1851. By Mr. DOUGLASS: Petition of the Massachusetts Modification Conference, by its executive committee, consisting of Mary McGill, of Brookline; John A. Larkin, of Worcester; and Francis J. Horgan, of 40 Court Street, Boston, Mass., chairman, protest against further use and misuse of public funds to force upon the people of the United States the Volstead Act and demand amendment to the law be made that will permit each State to govern itself in the matter of laws regulating the use and sale of intoxicating beverages; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1852. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Massachusetts Modification Conference, Francis J. Horgan, chairman, 40 Court Street, Boston, Mass., protesting against further use and misuse of Federal appropriations to force upon our people the unjust, unpopular, and illegal Volstead Act, and demanding a modification of such act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1853. By Mr. GARBER: Resolution by the Columbia section of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, at its regular monthly meeting at Spokane, April 2, 1926, favoring the Temple Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1854. Also, letter from the Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia and vicinity, approving the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1855. Also, resolution of the Ministerial Alliance of Tulsa, Okla., urging strict enforcement of prohibition and protesting against any modification of the law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1856. Also, resolution of the Common Brick Manufacturers' Association of America, urging that a tariff be placed on all brick and that section 304 of the Fordney Tariff Act, requiring the marking with the name of the country of origin of all articles made in foreign countries, be immediately and rigidly enforced as to brick; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1857. By Mr. KINDRED: Petition of the Fredericksburg Chamber of Commerce, Fredericksburg, Va., favoring prompt action upon the report of the Battle Field Commission, concerning the battles fought in Spotsylvania County, Va., from 1862 to 1865; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1858. Also, petition of the Long Island Federation of Women's Clubs, of Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing the passage of the Wadsworth-Perham bills; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1859. Also, petition of the Metal Trades Council of Brooklyn, N. Y., urging the Congress of the United States to give immediate favorable consideration to the Stanfield-Lehlbach retirement bill (S. 786 and H. R. 7); to the Committee on the Civil Service.

1860. By Mr. LEA of California: Petitions of 40 residents of Eureka, Calif., and 71 residents of Martinez, Calif., protesting against the passage of House bill 7179, the Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1861. By Mr. O'CONNELL of New York: Petition of A. R. Rubenstein, of 1501-1511 West Sixth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., with reference to the pending Upshaw and Swoope bills; to the Committee on Education.

1862. By Mr. PRALL: Petition received from residents and voters of Station Island, N. Y., favoring House bill 6233, Federal regulation of motion pictures; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1926

(Legislative day of Monday, April 19, 1926)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 26, 31, 64, 65, and 66 to the said bill, and concurred therein, and that the House had further disagreed to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 46 and 62.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 120. An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Porto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 5858. An act for the relief of Charles Ritzel;

H. R. 6874. An act for the relief of James Madison Brown;

H. R. 8192. An act authorizing the designation of postmasters by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers, for performance of authorized service on power boat and star routes in Alaska; and

H. R. 9341. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. REED of Missouri obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Asburat	Fernald	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bayard	Ferris	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bingham	Foss	La Follette	Sackett
Blease	Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Bratton	George	McLean	Shortridge
Broussard	Gerry	McMaster	Simmons
Bruce	Gillett	McNary	Smith
Butler	Glaas	Mayfield	Smoot
Cameron	Goff	Metcalf	Stanfield
Capper	Gooding	Moses	Stephens
Caraway	Greene	Neely	Swanson
Copeland	Hale	Norbeck	Trammell
Couzens	Harrell	Nye	Tyson
Cummins	Harris	Oddie	Wadsworth
Curtis	Harrison	Overman	Walsh
Dale	Hedlin	Pepper	Warren
Deneen	Howell	Phipps	Watson
Dill	Johnson	Pine	Weller
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Randell	Wheeler
Edwards	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Mo.	Williams
Ernst	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Willis

Mr. PHIPPS. My colleague [Mr. MEANS] is detained on account of illness. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 26, 31, 64, 65, and 66 to the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and further disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 46 and 62.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments still in disagreement, ask a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. JONES of New Mexico conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4785) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to complete the acquisition of the land authorized to be acquired by the public buildings appropriation act, approved March 4, 1913, for the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park, the Zoological Park, and Potomac Park, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. KING conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, it was impossible for me to address the Senate on the subject of the Italian debt settlement before this morning, and I did not know until the present moment that the time is limited at this hour. I thought it was at 3 o'clock that the time limit went into effect. I am going to ask the Senate if it will not give unanimous consent to me to have an hour this morning, if some one else does not want the time. I can not make my statement in 30 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it does not interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement, I certainly hope the Senate will give the Senator from Missouri an hour's time as he has requested. If it does not set aside the unanimous-consent agreement already made, I submit that request.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not ask it if there are other Senators who want the time; but if there are not, I would like to have that much time, because I can not complete my statement in 30 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a Senator asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri be given an hour's time instead of 30 minutes, as fixed by the unanimous-consent agreement of April 14, 1926, can that be done?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would hold that it can be done without abrogating the balance of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri be given one hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senate for its courtesy, and I thank the Senator from Utah for his courtesy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will proceed for one hour.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, for many years prior to 1914 the various great nations of Europe had been preparing for war. Great Britain desired to maintain her supremacy upon the seas and her supremacy in commerce. Accordingly she was enlarging her fleets and furnishing them with every modern instrumentality of destruction. For nearly a year before the war broke the master of the navy of Great Britain had been engaged in equipping England's whole fleet with a new type of guns, and for months before hostilities ensued had mobilized that fleet at strategic points and held it ready for instant action.

Germany, ambitious to extend her dominion and her trade, had been constructing a vast navy and had been concentrating her efforts in the creation of the greatest land force ever organized.

Italy, avid to conquer portions of Africa and to establish her dominion over Italia Irredenta, the "lost Italy," as she termed it, had been drilling her men and organizing her forces in a manner not known to Italy since the days of the Caesars.

Austria, determined to gain better access to the seas, had been enlarging her armies, and by forced military servitude had amassed a mighty body of men.

Russia, in order to maintain a large share of the balance of power of Europe, was determined to retain her hold in the Balkan States.

France was obsessed by the desire to regain Alsace and Lorraine, to increase her foreign empire, and to assert her supremacy on the Continent of Europe.

The broad picture was of great nations, all of them ambitious, all of them arming to the teeth, in order that they might extend their domains and perpetuate their power.

When on the 28th day of June, 1914, the Archduke Ferdinand and his morganatic wife were assassinated at Sarajevo, in Bosnia, it was not the cause of the war, but it afforded Austria an opportunity to make humiliating demands upon Serbia and to hold Serbia responsible for that crime.

Austria did not intend to be satisfied by any explanation from Serbia. On July 23 she delivered to Serbia an ultimatum containing the most humiliating demands, and insisted upon an answer within 48 hours. On July 25 Serbia replied, making concessions that were humiliating. Notwithstanding those humiliating conditions, Austria promptly declared war upon Serbia.

Within a few days Russia came into the war. Within five days thereafter France had mobilized 200,000 men along the borders of Belgium, and Germany had issued an order equivalent to the creation of a military dictatorship. France was ready to invade, and did have her troops in Belgium, probably as soon as Germany's troops entered that Kingdom, although not in so great force.

What I am seeking to impress upon the Senate is the thought that this war was a planned war, was a concerted war, was a war that all of Europe was ready for, and that back of it stood rapacity and ambition. It was not a war of accident or of chance.

Italy had long been bound by a defensive alliance with Austria, but years before the war occurred on several occasions she had clearly manifested her purpose to abandon that alliance, because forever the eyes of Italy had been upon Italia Irredenta, the unreclaimed Italy.

Italy stood back and bargained for 10 long months. She bargained with Austria, and Austria agreed to make large concessions, but England and France outbid Austria and agreed to give to Italy greater advantages and concessions than she could secure from Austria. So, in as cold-blooded a bargain as ever was made, for the sake of her own advantage, and in order to extend her territory, Italy entered the war.

Mr. President, as a result of that war she achieved a settlement concerning her African possessions; she extended her borders so as to take in Italia Irredenta; she gained everything she demanded except a small portion of Dalmatian coast, which was withheld from her in the final settlement.

In the war which ensued the other nations that were victorious took their share of the spoils. England extended her dominion over a vaster territory than Rome controlled in the proudest days of the Caesars; Belgium increased her possessions; Japan gained incalculable advantages in the Orient; and if it had not been for the protest of America and of the world, would by this time have cut the heart out of China. These nations were fighting to satisfy their ambitions, and the victorious did glut themselves with the spoils of war.

Great Britain expended $27,236,500,000, but Great Britain gained a territory vastly more valuable than that. France expended $18,405,000,000 and regained Alsace and Lorraine and large territories elsewhere. Italy expended $7,650,000,000, but realized gains to which I have already adverted.

These nations went into the war to satisfy national lust for power, for lands, for peoples, for dominions. There may have been reluctance at holding back, but every one of them acted in pursuit of ambitions ingrained in their people and embraced in their national policy.

Italy entered the war on August 27, 1916. Prior to that time and thereafter our associates in the war had been able to keep the field because American markets were open to them.

Had they been equally open to Germany—that is to say, if Germany could have reached our shores and obtained supplies from us—a different story would probably have been told of the war. I think it may be said now that from the first our Government was friendly to the cause of Great Britain and her allies. Indeed, it has been recently stated on what seems to be good authority that there had been a substantial agreement arrived at, long before the American people were advised, that America would go into the war at the proper time. However that may be—and I do not digress to discuss it—the cold fact is that the resources of this Nation were open to Great Britain, to France, to Belgium, and to Russia. Moreover, not only were our resources open to them for the purchase of supplies but large sums of money were loaned in this country by private institutions, so that they obtained here not only the goods, wares, and chattels but the credits necessary to procure them. No sooner had we entered the war than requests for loans were made by the nations with which we were associated.

As soon as bills could be rushed through Congress provision was made for raising large sums of money by borrowing from the American people. Those measures expressly stipulated that a part of this money, aggregating some ten thousand millions of dollars, could be loaned to foreign nations engaged with us in the war, but upon the condition that these nations should give to us for this money, at the time the money was delivered to them, bonds exactly like the bonds we had issued to the American people, so that the interest upon the moneys we loaned to them would equal the interest we were obliged to pay to the American people, so that when the debt came due the money would come from the foreign countries to take up the bonds that had been negotiated with the American people.

That was the express condition of each of the three or four acts authorizing the turning over of money to these European countries. It was violated. The Secretary of the Treasury, instead of receiving bonds in due form, took from these various countries obligations that they would thereafter issue bonds upon the request by the United States. I do not harshly criticize him, but the incident serves to illustrate how a failure to do business in the right way frequently results in interminable trouble. His reason assigned was that the European countries needed the money so badly that they could not wait to print the bonds, and hence he delivered to them, without requiring the formal bonds being delivered, the money of the people of the United States.

When we obtained that money from the people of the United States we promised them by word of mouth, by literature, by propaganda of every kind, that they would never be taxed to repay the bonds which they themselves had been obliged to buy. We said to them from the steps of this Capitol, from every rostrum and forum and pulpit of the United States, that if they would loan money to our Government to be reloaned to foreign governments the part reloaned to foreign governments would be paid by those governments, would be collected by this Government, and that the bonds would be canceled, and they would not be taxed to pay the very debts the Government had created with them through their purchase of bonds.

The money was turned over. It reclothed, it revictualled the armies of France, of England, and of Italy. It put new heart and spirit in their people; and then immediately they called on us for men as well as money. They urged haste, and every haste was made; and from the moment we declared war on until its final close America played a full and a great part.

I do not stop, sir, to pretend that America won this war herself. I would take no laurel from the wreath of fame and glory that rests upon the brow of any Englishman or Frenchman or Italian; but I do say that at the time our troops finally filed into the line the armies of France and Great Britain and Belgium had been driven back and back and back until, exhausted by fighting, they were holding the line by the sheer strength of nerve and of courage, and it is in all probability true that they could not long have defended Paris from the German onslaught.

We sent our men there, our money there, and we rendered this great service; and what, pray, was America's stake? Simply the vindication of American honor; simply the demonstration to the world that America could not be warned from the high seas; for all the American ships that had been seized, all the American ships that had been sunk, could have been purchased with the cost of one day of this war. We went into this war to vindicate our honor and to assert the continuance of our sovereignty as a people; and then we stood by in the negotiations after the war was over until France and England and Belgium had extorted the kind of contract they believed they ought to have. We refused to withdraw our troops from German soil until the German had signed away the right of his country to maintain an army or maintain a navy, and agreed to the heaviest indemnities levied in all the course of time.

Now, sir, having done all that, having claimed no part of the spoils of war, having stood by while our associates in the war were extending their dominions in the islands of the sea, upon the southern portion of the Eastern Hemisphere, in every part of the world, fortifying and solidifying themselves, taking territory in which some day we will want freedom of trade and it will be denied to us—after all that has occurred we are asking what honor never should have waited to be asked, what honesty ought never to have required us to ask—an honest settlement and a fair payment.

We hold the obligations of these countries. They are in writing now, sir, as solemn a promise as can be written, signed and sealed and delivered; and if we were to stand upon that obligation, and this were a controversy between individuals, we could collect at the present time, presently due, every dollar they borrowed from us and 5 per cent interest.

We do not exact it. We ask only to be made whole. We ask only that they shall pay to the American Government the amount of money the American Government must pay to those from whom the American Government borrowed this money.

Mr. President, coming to the case of Italy, with whom, sir, are we dealing?

We are told that Italy has not the ability to pay. Italy, sir, has the ability to keep a standing army, in active service, of 220,000 men, an air force, and a secondary army, which brings the entire military force up to 5,680,000 men. In addition to this, she has the Fascist organization, every man of which is practically sworn as a soldier of the dictator. She is rebuilding her battle fleets, she is extending her air service more rapidly than the United States of America, and she is doing these things at the demand of a dictator who has stricken down the liberties of Italy and destroyed the last vestige of free government.

Listen to Mussolini:

At one word from me 3,000,000 youths will rush to my side and draw their swords to vindicate the rights of Italy. . . .

I will quickly bare my sword to defend our frontier on the Brenner. . . .

I judge the future by the past. In the history of nations every serious dispute between one nation and another has been settled by the arbitrament of the sword. . . .

I feel sure of peace when I rest in the shadow of my sword. . . .

In every revolution some of the conquered have been put to the sword. The Fascists have not done this until now, but it is never too late.

That, sir, sounds like the roar of a wild beast, not the utterance of a man. That sounds like the voice of hell turned loose into the wholesome atmosphere of the earth.

A good Fascist cares nothing about elections and parliament. . . .

I believe in force, not the private force to avenge personal injuries, but the force necessary to beat down rebellion against the new state created by the genius of Fascism. . . .

The deputies who have dared to accuse me of complicity in the murder of Matteotti can only return to the Chamber of Deputies if they will sign the apology I will draw up for them. Even then they will only be tolerated and must not open their mouths. If necessary, we will carry the flag of Italy beyond the present confines of the Kingdom.

It is to this man and to this man's government it is now proposed to present $1,500,000,000 of the American taxpayers' money. It is to fatten this monster and strengthen his arm, to sharpen his sword, to enlarge his cannon, to increase his war fleets, that it is proposed to settle with Italy in a manner that is nothing but grand larceny perpetrated upon the American people.

Mussolini! The throne of his power rests upon the bodies of an oppressed people. His sword is at their throats. The vision that delights his eye is a field of the slaughtered. The picture that most entrances his soul is an ocean of blood, through which he can walk with brutal, tyrannical feet.

He proposes to extend his dominions by the sword at a time when all the world cries out for peace. His men are organized now; his battalions are mustered; his divisions are under command; his arms are bright and in the hands of desperate men whom he controls; and it is proposed to vote a credit to Italy of $1,500,000,000 to carry out these monstrous purposes—a credit exacted from the American people; and that is all there is in this settlement.

This is not a settlement. This is a surrender. This is not a settlement between honest people. This is a surrender of poltroonism to dictatorship. It is the foulest blot that has ever been proposed to be placed on the financial record of the United States.

It is a military contribution to the most dangerous man living. It will increase his power. It will increase his prestige; this man who has the cruelty of Caligula, who has the monstrous egotism of Nero, who possesses the soul of a monster, who would again set the fires of war burning and again sweep the world with a conflagration of destruction.

It is proposed that we give this money to Mussolini.

It will not please even the native-born Italian who lives on our shores, for deep in his heart he does not want his country's oppressor to prosper.

Mr. President, the figures I am about to use I shall put in my address not as new matter but because I want them in juxtaposition with what I am about to say. They are figures which were compiled by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], a great engineer and a man competent to compute these questions of dollars and cents.

By an examination of the Treasury books on November 14, 1925, we find that Italy owed us $2,150,151,000. This commission, as its first step, reduced the debt by $108,000,000, without authority or right. My understanding is that the excuse is that for a certain period of time England is to pay us only 3 per cent, and therefore we extended the same rate to Italy. That is not a conclusive argument by any means, but it might seem justified by the rule of parallels if they had gone on and made the same kind of settlement with Italy that was made with Great Britain. But to give to Italy the benefits Great Britain received and then refuse to exact from her the payments Great Britain made is the lowest point of puerility, and can be justified by no reasoning, by no logic.

Taking the total of all they are to pay us for 62 years, they will pay us an amount which equals interest at the rate of 1.1 per cent. I would like to borrow all the money in the world at that rate. That is not a rate of interest at all. They try to cover this up under the pretense that the Italians are paying their principal, but taking the principal they pay and every dollar they will have paid at the end of the 62 years, and averaging it throughout the 62 years, it is proposed that we give to that country this money at the rate of 1.1 per cent per annum.

More than that, during the first 31 years we are to collect only 26 per cent of the total amount that is to be paid. Where will Italy be after 26 years? She may have realized the dream of empire that is in the soul of Mussolini. Rome may have been rebuilt and from her seven hills again survey a conquered world. I think not, but that might happen. But, sir, no man can tell as to her ability to pay at the end of 26 years, whether it will be greater or less.

In contradistinction to this foolish policy advocated in this bill, witness the wisdom of Great Britain. Great Britain gets her larger payments in the earlier part of the period. We get ours at the end of the period, 62 years from now, when the body of every Senator now on this floor will be moldering in the dust, when his memory will be largely forgotten, when the only men remembered, probably, will be those who put over this infamous thing on the American people, and remembered then, not with honor but with regret. Sixty-two years from now, when you are all dead, when the babes now in the arms of your wives, if any of you are so fortunate as to have babes, will be old men and old women; sixty-two years from now Italy will make a payment of $79,400,000.

What is the value? Let us get out of the clouds and quit talking technicalities. What is this paper they are to give us? What is it worth upon the market? Let me illustrate what it is worth on the market. Let me ask Senators what they would give for it, if they had a thousand dollar bond, with the stipulation this commission has made. How much humor there is in it all; the commission has stipulated that Italy shall give us these bonds, if we demand them, in a merchantable form, so that we can put them on the exchanges, and Italy is graciously going to come over and list them on the exchanges, so that we can sell them and get our money, and get it now.

What is a bond of $1,000 worth under this contract? Sirs, for the first five years that you hold that bond you would not get a single cent. Not until 1930 would you begin to collect, and in 1930 you would get the princely sum of $1.25 on a $1,000 bond.

Between the years 1940 and 1950 you would get the munificent sum of $2.50 on your $1,000 bond. Between 1950 and 1960 you would get a larger sum. You would then be getting to a point where you could really be rich if you had three of these bonds; you would get $5 a year. From 1960 to 1970 you would get $7.50 a year. But that is a long time ahead, 35 or 40 years. Long before any now in the Senate who buy any bonds get $7.50 you will be gathered to your fathers, and looking down from the bosom of Abraham you will undoubtedly witness with great delight the fact that some of your remote descendants have collected $7.50 that year on the bonds.

Between 1970 and 1980 you would get $10 a year. Oh, how you will long for that day to come! How you will hug that bond to your bosom! How your descendants will, I should say, not you, for you will all be dead; dead, and, let us hope, not damned, just dead. You will delight in the fact that your remote descendants go down and get $10 a year. From 1980 to 1987, which closes the fateful circle, someone will get $20 a year.

The fact is that estimating the Italian debt with interest at 4½ per cent, assuming that we were to receive the face of the debt in obligations bearing 4½ per cent, which is exactly what we paid for the money we loaned Italy, and assuming Italy's credit to be good, such bonds would bring the face of the debt, or $2,150,151,000.

Upon the other hand, the securities which we will receive from Italy bearing the rate of interest which includes also the cancellation of the principal of 1.1 per cent would bring on the market, again assuming Italy's credit to be good, only $528,000,000. That is to say, we are in fact accepting securities which are worth $528,000,000 for a debt of $2,150,151,000.

In other words, the securities we are to receive will be worth $1,612,000,000 less than the face of the Italian debt. The amount of our donation to Italy is $1,612,000,000. This, however, is only part of the story. If the United States should be obliged to continue to pay 4½ per cent on the money it loaned Italy for the period of 62 years, and if we were to receive during that 62-year period the amount Italy is to pay, the annual average loss to America is $67,000,000, which, multiplied by the 62 years the debt is to run, shows a loss to America in difference of interest of $4,150,000,000. Add to this the principal of the Italian debt, namely, $2,150,000,000, and it will be seen that the loss to the people of the United States is $6,300,000,000. The State of Missouri's proportional loss amounts to $18,500,000.

That is the bargain it is proposed that we make, and with what irony, with what satire, with what ineffable contempt the Italian must have suggested to this commission, "Gentlemen, we will be so glad to help you make your bonds merchantable. We will go down and help you list them on the exchange. We will write it in the contract with you." The mellifluous tongue of the Latin, distilling its poison into the unaccustomed ear from Utah, did its deadly work.

What is that bond worth on the market? That is what we are getting to now. What is the bond worth on the market? It could not be sold for 5 cents on the dollar. Are Senators going to vote for a thing of that kind and call it a settlement? If so, let us give this debt to Italy. Let us send it all over to them and ask them graciously, just as an act of good faith, to send us one bunch of bananas, and we will cancel the whole thing.

Gentlemen talk about the ability of a nation to pay. What do they know about it? What do they know about its ability to pay now? They told us that when the war was over all of Europe would be depopulated. Nature has a wonderful regenerating power.

At the end of the Thirty Years' War this is what the historian said of Europe:

This war brought political disintegration of Germany and desolation upon the country.

Scarcely any part of Europe had escaped the horrors of the conflict. The people had been made the victims of the licentious soldiery, whose excesses remain in popular memory.

Whole regions were laid waste; prosperous towns wiped out; commerce and industry destroyed.

Germany lost one-half of her population and two-thirds of her wealth.

In Bohemia the decrease in population was two-thirds, or more.

Religion and morality sunk to a low ebb, and the loss sustained on the intellectual side was one which it took generations to make good.

And yet, like the Phoenix from her ashes, Germany and all Europe rose, and in a few years of time the scars of war had been healed, the fields that had been plowed and furrowed by cannon shot and shell were turned over by the husbandmen, ground that was saturated with blood brought forth abundant crops, and Europe rose from the Thirty Years' War within a few years' time, stronger, more powerful, more potential than she had ever been in her history.

Frederick the Great marched his legions back and forth across Prussia, surrounded and hemmed in by the forces of mighty nations. So impoverished was the country that Frederick's soldiers had even taken the roofs from the houses. There was scarcely a horse or an ox left in all of Prussia. And yet within 10 years' time Prussia stood erect and mighty and laid the foundation for her final mastery of a larger part of Europe.

Napoleon's armies and those of his enemies decimated all of Europe, covered her fields with bleaching skeletons, saturated her soil with blood, burned her cities and destroyed her industries, and yet within a few years of time Europe rose richer, more powerful, more magnificent than she had ever been before in all her history.

We were told when the World War was over that there would be nothing but starvation and want, that misery would stalk through the alleys and through the great streets of cities, that want would everywhere paint its pitiful picture upon the countenances of the people. We were told these stories until our hearts bled. Of course, there was severe suffering, but behold now the story. Has the population been destroyed? Here are the latest figures. The population of Belgium in 1912 was 7,579,000, and notwithstanding all her losses it is now 7,666,055. Canada's population has increased from 7,467,000 to 8,788,488. France's population has decreased very slightly from 39,602,000 to 39,402,739. Germany's population has decreased slightly from 66,096,000 to 62,500,000. That is because her territory was taken away from her. The population of Greece, partially through the acquisition of territory, has increased from 2,666,000 to 5,447,000. The Italian population has increased from 34,687,000 to 38,835,941. Japan's population increased from 52,312,000 to 58,481,500. The United Kingdom has suffered a slight loss, largely due to emigration, her population in 1912 having been 45,653,000 and in 1925 was 44,147,000. The United States has increased in population since 1912 from 98,464,000 to 113,493,720 in 1925.

Mr. President, that answers the question of rejuvenation, revivification. It answers the question so often asked, Can these nations die?

But again, sir, the national wealth of Belgium in 1912—poor Belgium, downtrodden and overrun Belgium, Belgium that was bleeding at every pore, Belgium whose sons gallantly defended the last little strip of their country that was not in the hands of the German force, a little strip scarcely larger than a man's hand, figuratively speaking, but they held on with tenacity. Belgium's wealth increased from $5,800,000,000 in 1912 to $12,000,000,000 in 1920. Canada's wealth increased from $11,000,000,000 in 1907 to $22,195,000,000 in 1924. The wealth of France increased from $58,500,000,000 in 1912 to $90,000,000,000 in 1922. What it has become since I have not the figures to demonstrate, but if it has increased in this ratio, it may well be said that it is now over $100,000,000,000.

Germany's wealth has decreased, according to the present estimate, but I am here to say that Germany still has her fields, her cities, her industries largely, and that it will not be 10 years' time until Germany will be on her feet in the full flood of prosperity. Indeed, I have here documents from Germans of great repute sustaining that statement.

Japan's wealth has grown from $11,700,000,000 in 1912 to $22,500,000,000 in 1922. The wealth of Great Britain in 1912 was $70,500,000,000, and in 1922 was $120,000,000,000, and is very much greater now.

Italy's wealth—this nation which has been pictured here as a pauper; this nation which it is said can not pay; this nation which according to the pictures we have is trundling along over the rocky road to the poorhouse and to obscurity and destruction—this nation of Italy in 1912 had $22,000,000,000 of wealth and in 1922 had $35,000,000,000. If the increase from 1922 to 1926 has been as correspondingly as great, that wealth must now exceed $40,000,000,000.

In face of that fact, who can soundly assert that Italy is unable to pay her debt?

But at this point we are met with another curious argument; namely, that even though Italy has the wealth to pay her debt, she can not obtain the exchange with which to make payment.

I shall not dignify this argument by taking the time to analyze it and show its fallacy further than to say, first, a country possessing $40,000,000,000 of wealth must produce and must sell a considerable part of her manufactured goods beyond her borders. Even though she should not sell them to America in the course of international trade, the transactions can be balanced. It is not necessary for Italy to receive the gold from the United States with which to pay the United States, because she has all of the world to draw from.

Second, Even if the argument which is referred to be sound, nevertheless the fact is that there is sent from the United States annually much more than enough money to pay the interest upon Italy's debt.

According to the best available and official estimates, there is sent to Italy from the United States by Italians living in America $117,000,000 annually. These remittances are in gold or its equivalent in American exchange.

It is further estimated that American tourists expend in Italy annually another sum of $117,000,000. That is to say, there is flowing from this country to Italy every year American gold or its equivalent to the amount of $234,000,000. Taking this into consideration, it is manifest that the gold necessary to pay the interest upon Italy's debt to us can be drawn and is being drawn annually from the United States.

So when I am told that a nation can not pay, when it is put on that ground, I place the cold facts and figures before you and I demand to know why it is you come here and tell me that a nation can maintain an army in the field, or potentially, of half a million men, a nation whose population and wealth is increasing, a nation which has dreams of empire and of power and speaks of rebuilding ancient Rome in all its glory, of restoring its monuments and its libraries and making it again the wonder of the world—why such a nation should have given to it this vast sum of money that some Senators would saddle onto the taxpayers of the United States in absolute violation of the contract we made with the people of the United States is beyond my understanding. Senators may do it. They may have the votes to do it, but I say to some of them when they have voted let them remember Illinois. Remember that the people still have a chance. Remember that the American people think more of their country of America than they do of the dictatorship of Mussolini.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, when Congress agreed to the settlement of the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States certain principles were laid down and definite limitations were placed on all future settlements. This was well recognized at the time, as is shown by the debates. That agreement made it practically impossible for the United States to demand full payment of the principal and interest owed us by any foreign country on account of the war loans. It meant that the United States was willing to collect a less amount and have the difference borne by its own taxpayers. Whether this policy was wise or not, the fact remains that it has been established, and it must be given full weight and consideration in all future settlements. The determination was then made that the United States intends to collect as much as it thinks the other nation able to and should pay. It realizes that all can not be treated alike, and the object of the Debt Funding Commission is to determine as fairly as possible what is the proper amount to be collected in each instance.

Our Government agreed that Great Britain should not be asked to pay the same high rate of interest that the United States was paying on the money it had borrowed from its own people to loan Great Britain. For the first 10 years of the settlement Great Britain is to pay 3 per cent, and after that 3½ per cent. The United States is paying on that indebtedness about 4¼ per cent, so that at the end of the 10-year period a very large sum of money is lost to the Government because of this difference in interest rates. After the first 10 years the interest is to run at 3½ per cent. It is improbable that the United States will be able to borrow money at as low a rate as this. Undoubtedly there will continue to be an increased loss because of the interest rate, with the result that we will still be making up a discrepancy between the two amounts. If by any chance in years to come America should ever be able to borrow money at a rate less than that specified in the agreement, Great Britain has the right to get the benefit of that lower rate.

I always thought it was a great pity that it was not realized, both in England and in America, how generous the settlement had been and that out of our indebtedness to Great Britain we will never receive anything like a total payment of the capital and interest. The failure to understand the figures correctly and the desire of the administration to make it appear that the agreement was favorable to America has enabled British publicists and statesmen to accuse us of being Shylocks, instead of granting so generous a settlement that it was accepted by the British as most satisfactory and very quickly. I mention this because in all these settlements it is most important for the future peace of the world that other nations realize that we have dealt fairly and justly with them and that we have not abandoned those high ideals which we cherish. Fair dealing and generous treatment and good understanding between nations are much needed in a time like this, when the world has not yet recovered from the wounds of a great war, and it is indeed a pity that some English statesmen should have unjustly attempted to create a feeling such as this against America.

When I commenced the consideration of the Italian debt settlement I had the impression that it was very unfair to the United States and very favorable to Italy; in fact, that we had been much more liberal than conditions warranted; but as I studied the work of the commission and the situation which confronted that country I came to the conclusion that the settlement was not as favorable to Italy as was the agreement made with England to that nation and that, considering the wealth and ability to pay of the two countries, we had undoubtedly placed a greater burden upon Italy.

It must ever be borne in mind that there is no way of determining with any mathematical accuracy the ability of a country to pay. It must, in the nature of things, be a matter of judgment and opinion. Bearing this in mind, let us consider that Italy borrowed from the United States $1,646,000,000, practically all of which, it is not amiss to remember, was spent in the United States for war supplies. This amount plus 4 1/4 per cent interest up to December 15, 1922, the date of the British settlement, and 3 per cent from then to June 15, 1925, makes the principal of the settlement in excess of $2,000,000,000. Now, if we take Italy's indebtedness to us and add to that her indebtedness to Great Britain, the total amount is four and one-half billions, which is about equal to the indebtedness of Great Britain to us, and Great Britain's indebtedness to us is her total foreign indebtedness.

It is well to observe in this connection that Italy's national wealth is given variously from twenty-two to thirty billion dollars, and her income in the neighborhood of four billions, while Great Britain's wealth is $117,000,000,000 and her income nineteen billions. It has been calculated that the annual average payment of Italy's settlement to America is 0.97 per cent of her total national income and Great Britain's 0.94 per cent of her income. We are consequently receiving from Italy a greater per cent of her national income than Great Britain is paying to us out of her national income. But this does not begin to tell the story.

You will get a better picture, Mr. President, if you will realize what is the rate of taxation in Italy. I shall submit but a few significant figures. On an income of $1,000 the taxpayer in Italy pays $189.21; in England nothing. On $2,000 the Italian citizen pays $392.21, as compared with $67.50 in England. On $3,000 the rates are, respectively, $599 and $202. Pursue the matter a little further and we find that a married man is allowed but a $40 a year exemption. How striking this is compared with $1,000 exemption in England and the $3,500 exemption in the United States. Our own tax is paid by about 2,000,000 people. It has been estimated that if the Italian income tax law was enforced in this country there would be 42,000,000 taxpayers, who would contribute an amount sufficient to pay off in three years the entire public debt, with enough left over to meet in the meantime all the other expenses of the Government.

Great Britain undoubtedly realized the condition of Italy, because in the agreement for the payment of Italy's debt to her she has not insisted upon a payment of capital and interest, but upon a debt due her 40 per cent greater than that due the United States she is making a settlement on a basis of present value of 15 per cent less than that of the United States. The suggestion has been made that England obtained a better settlement with Italy than did the United States; but this can be so only upon the theory that the debt will not be paid in accordance with the agreement and that England, by receiving considerably larger payments than the United States in the earlier years of the agreement, will not lose so much if there should be a default. When the Debt Funding Commission's agreements shall be adopted and Italy shall secure the necessary capital, I believe the country will develop her resources sufficiently to permit her to pay her obligations and to make the larger payments that are called for in the agreement that she has made with the United States.

Italy is a country which has few natural resources—little coal, less iron, no copper or cotton, and no colonies rich in natural resources. Her trade balance last year was against her to the extent of $274,000,000, and this has been the situation in a somewhat less degree for years. These facts, when we are considering the capacity to pay, are all important, and they all make small the ability of Italy in comparison with that of Great Britain, with her foreign shipping, with her colonies, many of them rich in natural resources, with her great banking connections, with the empire that she has built up around the world, and her aggregate wealth of $117,000,000,000. Italy, in order to meet her obligation, must develop quickly such resources as she has. She must enlarge her manufacturing productions. She must develop her streams to produce the necessary hydroelectric power. When the necessary agreements are made on this debt settlement, Italy can secure the necessary capital, but not before. With capital advanced, there is no reason why the country should not go ahead. The Italian people are a hardy race, very industrious, and extremely frugal. It is upon these factors that the advance of Italy depends. Her people are working long hours for exceedingly small wages. These are conditions, of course, which do not arise from desire, but from hard necessity. No thoughtful American desires anything else but that Italy should become a better and more prosperous nation, enjoying the material rewards for the hard labor of its people.

Some object to this settlement because of their opposition to the present Government of Italy. That question should not, in my judgment, enter into the matter of the debt settlement particularly, as I am satisfied that the people of Italy, for the most part, are getting the government they desire. Our country would resent vigorously any attempt on the part of another nation to interfere in any way with our form of government, and we should be willing to accord to other nations the same rights that we claim for ourselves. If we want a settlement with Italy or any other nation, we must transact our business with the representatives of the government that are in control.

Mr. President, this settlement represents a decision reached by a bipartisan commission. It was composed of Republicans and Democrats. The Democratic members were men of unquestioned integrity and splendid ability. Without considering the fact that Italy was our ally during the war, that she sacrificed 600,000 men and over half of her capital and prevented us from being at war much longer than we would have been without her assistance, without giving any weight to the fact that the debt was incurred in furnishing her necessary supplies to assist us in fighting a war, but just simply considering the matter as a business proposition with the settlement with Great Britain an accomplished fact and staring us in the face, we can not come to any other conclusion, in my judgment, than that it is a fair adjustment. It has my approval.

Mr. TRAMMELL obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment in order that I may submit a resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a motion and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate and be considered pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BORAH moves that the bill H. R. 6773 be recommitted to the Committee on Finance for further investigation and report as to the present industrial, economic, and financial conditions of Italy.

That said investigation include an inquiry into the private loans made, or to be made, to the Italian Government, and as to the showing made by the Italian Government to the parties making said loans as to its capacity to meet them.

That the said private bankers who have made a study of Italy's economic, industrial, and financial conditions be called before the committee to give the committee whatever information they have as to the present capacity of the Italian Government to meet its obligations.

That further inquiry and investigation be made as to the present military expenditures of the Italian Government and also the plans of said Government for an increase of its military expenditures.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I shall not attempt to speak at length; in fact, under the unanimous-consent agreement we are limited as to the time we may occupy in discussing the pending question. As I have thought of the proposed settlement with Italy and the circumstances and conditions surrounding the transactions leading up to the loan and the proposal now being made for compromising this indebtedness by the United States by practically wiping out the entire principal—for at the end of the settlement the United States will not have received more than the principal of the entire debt, although it is extended over a period of 62 years—I have been impressed that human nature asserts itself in nations as well as it asserts itself in the individual. How often have we observed that an individual, after once enjoying and receiving a favor, forgets the favor, loses every sense of gratitude and appreciation, and, in fact, frequently becomes the enemy of the benefactor. So here, as so often happens in the case of individuals, we see manifested in a nation a lack of gratitude and appreciation.

The Senator who preceded me spoke of the war being ended more quickly on account of Italy's loss of 600,000 soldiers and on account of her expenditures, but he overlooks the part played by our Government in bringing the war to a termination so quickly after the United States entered into the conflict.

When these nations came to the United States and pleaded for funds and asked loans of the United States they were at the point of desperation. They were fighting almost, it seemed, a losing cause and battle; and but for the assistance of the United States probably the history of the Great War would be written in altogether different terms and the victory would have been accorded to the German Empire instead of to the Allied Nations. Of course, I would have regretted such a result, and would have disliked to see it obtain; but the United States came to the rescue of the Allies in the hour of peril and need, when if it had not been for the assistance of the United States it is possible that the Allies would have been unsuccessful.

These nations borrowed the money from the United States. They obligated themselves to refund it with interest according to the interest which it was necessary for the United States to pay to obtain the funds. The United States could not have been any fairer or more generous than to go into the money markets of the country to raise these funds to finance other nations, and agree that they would only have to refund to the United States the principal and the interest which the United States had to pay. It is from that obligation that Italy seeks an escape by having a very large part of the principal lumped off; and necessarily, if it is deducted in behalf of Italy, the American people are going to have to pay that difference. They are going to have to pay in taxes the amount that is deducted from the obligation of Italy.

Of course I realize that in dealing with nations and in dealing with individuals we should have some little feeling of compassion, and we should deal in a kindly spirit; and of course, as a matter of business sagacity, we have to take into consideration the ability of the debtor to pay; but the circumstances and the facts that have been presented here from time to time, and the conditions prevailing in Italy, do not, in my opinion, justify the American Government at this time in making such enormous reductions and having closed forever the obligation Italy owes to the United States.

With individuals dealing as between each other, man to man, and business concerns in this country, I have known of cases where they would extend an obligation, they would try to make the obligation easier to meet in the way of terms where the parties indebted were not in financial condition to meet the obligation just at the time it was due; but this matter of foreclosing a settlement and forever terminating the obligation of a debtor, I think is unprecedented in the business history of this country. I am unable to understand why the American Government should at this time make an absolute settlement and agreement by which the Italian Government is to be released from the payment of such a very large percentage of the obligation due from it to the United States.

We might have given the Italian people a little more time, or given them little better terms than were first anticipated, and then we might have gone along for a while with them making an honest effort to pay part of their indebtedness to the United States. I am sure that the American people would approve of such a policy as that; but I do not believe the American people are going to approve of our forgiving half or more of this indebtedness and thereby imposing upon them increased taxation, imposing upon them a longer term of tax obligations, for the purpose of liquidating the debt due to this Government by the Italian Government.

This money is all money that was borrowed by the American Government. American bonds were given for it, bearing, I think, at the present time, $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent interest. The American Government has to pay those bonds. The Government, of course, is only the people collectively. The people of America collectively have to pay this money. In addition to making the loan favoring Italy, assisting her in time of peril, it is now proposed that we contribute to her an enormous gift in the way of a reduction of her indebtedness, and that high taxes be continued in this country much longer than would be necessary otherwise for the purpose of raising that deficit.

I do not believe that the American people approve of any such settlement. I, for one, am getting tired of making these contributions to other governments at the expense of the American taxpayers. I am getting tired of our trying to practice retrenchment and economy and at the same time contributing funds to other nations that are extravagant in many respects—extravagant particularly in their policy toward continuing militaristic power, maintaining large armies and navies, and expenditures of that character.

In this country we have made an honest effort to live up to a restricted program of naval construction. We have tried to force down and have reduced our standing Army; and there has been a sincere, honest effort on the part of the American Government looking to a very considerable program of disarmament. That policy, however, does not prevail among the other nations. It does not prevail in Italy. If we make this large reduction in the indebtedness due by Italy, it just gives them a little more opportunity to try to build up a greater militaristic power, and gives Mussolini a greater opportunity to try to carry out his policies and his ideas, apparently, of trying really to become a Napoleon. It looks as though his idea is that he wants to build up great power and to carry on conflict and conquest.

I do not believe that the American people are willing to make any such contribution to a Government directed by Mussolini, with the policies and the ideas which he entertains. I feel that there are no circumstances justifying the very large reduction that is proposed to be made in this debt, which should be treated by Italy as an honest debt and an honest obligation, and which the controlling and dominating powers of that nation should make a sincere, honest, and persistent effort to pay.

Briefly, for these reasons and others, I am opposed to the proposed settlement and plead for the defeat of the pending bill.

STRAYER COLLEGE (INC.)

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3559, to incorporate Strayer College. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, together with certain amendments recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 6, after the word "to," to strike out "buy"; in line 7, after the word "hold," to strike out "mortgage, sell"; in the same line, before the word "real," to insert "such"; in line 8, after the word "estate," to strike out "incident to" and insert "as may be proper or necessary for"; in line 10, before the word "and," to insert "and said corporation shall have a corporate seal"; in the same line, after the word "and," to strike out "shall"; at the end of line 15, after the word "formed," to insert a semicolon and "the term and existence of such corporation shall be perpetual"; and in section 3, page 3, line 16, after the name "District of Columbia," to insert a comma and "or at such other place as the same may be changed from time to time under the by-laws of said corporation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas W. Donoho, Edmond S. Donoho, and Murray T. Donoho of Thomas, and their associates and successors, and all such other persons as shall hereafter become stockholders in this corporation, shall be, and they are hereby, constituted a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of "Strayer College (Inc.," and by that name shall have perpetual succession for the purpose of conducting in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may hereafter be determined, schools for the teaching of accountancy, commercial and secretarial science; to instruct in the aforesaid and in related subjects; and to issue such certificates and diplomas and confer such degrees as may be appropriate, including the degrees of bachelor of business administration, bachelor of commercial science, and master of commercial science; and such corporation shall have power to acquire, hold, and otherwise deal in such real estate as may be proper or necessary for any of the aforesaid purposes for which the corporation is formed; and said corporation shall have a corporate seal; and be capable in law to sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction; and generally to do any and all things proper or necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act or to promote the objects and designs of the corporation hereby formed; the term and existence of such corporation shall be perpetual.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said corporation shall be $10,000 divided into 400 shares of the par value of $25 each, with the privilege of increasing the capital stock to an amount not exceeding $100,000, such increase to be authorized by the vote of not less than two-thirds of the outstanding capital stock at a meeting of the stockholders duly called for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That the affairs and business of the said corporation shall be managed by eight directors, who shall be duly elected by the stockholders in accordance with the by-laws of the corporation, except during the first year of the existence of the corporation, during which time the directors shall be Thomas W. Donoho, Edmond S. Donoho, Murray T. Donoho of Thomas, all of the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, and Pinkney J. Harman, W. Ashby Jump, Elgie G. Purves, Kemper Simpson, and Murray T. Donoho, all of the District of Columbia, all of the foregoing directors being subscribers to the capital stock of this corporation if, as, and when incorporated; the number of directors of the corporation may be increased at any time to a number not exceeding 15; the corporation shall have such officers as the corporation shall from time to time deem advisable; and the operations of the corporation in the District of Columbia are to be carried on at 721 Thirteenth Street, Washington, D. C., or at such other place as the same may be changed from time to time under the by-laws of said corporation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business No. 632, being Senate Resolution No. 171, be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the caption of the resolution.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 171) requesting information from the Attorney General relative to expenditures in investigations touching supposed offenses of Senator BURTON K. WHEELER.

Mr. CUMMINS. I may say that the report was made under a misapprehension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa that the resolution be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if no one now present desires to speak, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	La Follette	Sackett
Bayard	Fess	Lenroot	Sheppard
Bingham	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Blease	Frazier	McLean	Shortridge

Edwards	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Ernst	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Fernald	King	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, inasmuch as I am neither an astute financier nor a great lawyer, I think I can view the pending measure in rather a detached fashion. I trust that I am sufficiently sentimental never to wish to be ungenerous to any individual or to any people, and I hope that I am sufficiently just to be entirely fair to any nation on the face of the earth and entirely fair to the Nation of which I am so proud.

I trust, sir, that by reciting for a brief moment the background of that which is before us to-day it may be possible to arouse something of the old feeling that was ours in the days gone by, when we were dealing with the billions of the American people. I recite but a bit of that background, not the warlike story at all, for that has been eloquently portrayed this morning by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. But I recite just a brief sentence of the background that should be ours in considering this matter, because speaker after speaker sponsoring this debt settlement has recalled what was said by various individuals in the House and in the Senate when the Liberty loans were before us, really as an excuse, as I took it, for the attitude that is now assumed by the sponsors of the pending measure, and as a reason, indeed, sir, for canceling the very large debt due from the Italian nation to the United States of America.

We had our authority written into the law for these foreign loans, written into the law carefully, and the law then written so carefully contains an obligation upon those who then wrote the law and who passed the law, and contains, too, something which may enable us to guide our steps in the settlements with foreign nations.

I hold in my hand copies of the various acts constituting the Liberty and the Victory loan acts passed by the Congress of the United States. Every single one of these acts provides for loans to foreign countries or for credits to foreign countries. With the limitation of time that is mine I can not read those acts, but suffice it to say that in every instance the law provided—we wrote it into the statute itself—that every loan we made to a foreign country should bear a rate of interest equal to that which we charged the people of the United States and which we wrote into our own obligations.

We then told the people of the United States in so many words—there was no need for equivocation then—we said to our people then, "We are about to lend your money to foreign governments." We said, too, "We will charge them just exactly the interest that we charge you." There was not a man of us who went out on the hustings during that period but, talking to our people, said, as we pleaded with them and sometimes coerced them into bleeding themselves white financially, that every dollar we loaned to foreign nations would be repaid in full and every penny of interest that we paid upon Liberty bonds would be repaid and in like rates by those to whom we gave the proceeds of those bonds beyond the seas.

There is not a man to-day who was a part of that period, not a single one of us who went up and down the land pleading and begging with our people to buy our Liberty bonds, who would have dared say to the American people, "When it comes time to liquidate this indebtedness you will receive but a moiety of what you lend, and the interest that will be charged upon that for which you pay, 4 and 4¼ per cent, will be reduced, not to you, but to foreign governments to a negligible amount."

Not one of us would have dared say that in those days. But now, upon a rule that has been adopted, a rule, sir, which I consider a mere delusion and snare, we say to these people from whom we took their money in our country, "You shall be charged at a rate that is fixed in the obligation and in the law, but the rate that was fixed in the obligation and the law for foreign countries shall be forgiven them, and they will not be required to pay at all in the proportion you Americans must pay."

I recognize, of course, the havoc that has been wrought by the carnage across the sea. I recognize, of course, the fact that millions and billions of wealth have been destroyed in what has happened there. I recognize, too, that it may quite be so that certain nations can not pay on the dot, and that they should not be required to pay every penny within a brief period. But I recognize no rule, sir, by which under a "capacity to pay" any nation shall have its debt canceled in the remote future or at a period in which no man can foresee what may transpire or what may happen.

I recall, therefore, to you in the little that I shall say to-day the background of that which constituted the loans abroad. That should be our guide, just as it was our guide for our own people. That background is found in the law of this land, the law which constitutes the various Liberty loans and the one Victory loan.

Sir, with that background and the understanding and the promise that we then made our people in the law, in the light of the sentimental utterances of some of our friends, sentimental utterances with which I do not disagree, in the light indeed of the prayerful appeal that was made by the distinguished financier, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in behalf of Italy, in the light indeed of what the distinguished lawyer, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], said concerning Italy's condition, in the light of the picture they have painted in such drab and in such dark and in such gloomy and in such pathetic colors, let us see, sir, what to-day is the situation which confronts us, not as determining whether or not a debt shall be paid in one fashion or another, but in order that we may understand just how we are viewed by the rest of the world.

I have before me an article written by Frank Simonds not very long ago and published in various papers in this country. Mr. Simonds but echoes what the most of us know and perhaps some of us have felt. He writes the story of how Europe views us to-day, and he writes it, sir, with a pen that can not be misunderstood and that traces in bold outline the real situation.

His article reads as follows:

[From the Washington Star March 28, 1926]

HATRED OF AMERICA BY PEOPLES OF EUROPE PRESENTS PROBLEM OF INCREASING GRAVITY

By Frank H. Simonds

PARIS.—There is perhaps no detail of present-day Europe which it is harder for the home-staying American to understand than the attitude which is taken toward the United States pretty generally all over Europe, but particularly in France and Britain. Moreover, the most difficult circumstance to believe about this general attitude must be the fact that it is held most strongly, not by the politicians, not even by the upper classes, but by the mass of the common people for whom Uncle Sam is not alone the enemy, but the cruel and slave-driving master.

Perhaps the best proof of the European attitude among the masses is found in the recent exhortation of Trotsky to the proletariat of the continent to unite across frontiers in the common battle against the American enemy. This is significant because one must always remember that the underlying principle of bolshevist strategy is to exploit all possible passions, prejudices, and quarrels. Wherever there is bitterness it is the soviet idea to arrive and exploit it to advantage.

But it would be a mistake to think that it is only among the masses and chiefly among the uninformed that the resentment, dislike, and even hatred of the United States flourishes peculiarly. In a recent number of the British National Review, the journal which represents the most extreme conservative opinion in England, Uncle Sam appears repeatedly described as a combination of "Mr. Chadband and Shylock." And it is by no means exact to think of this opinion as English alone.

What is the conception on which this hostility rests? It is fairly well defined. The mass of Europeans, without regard to nationality, believe that America remained neutral during the war just as long as she was able to sell munitions and supplies to the Allies and obtain from them money or promises to pay. When, however, the war reached a point where it seemed likely that Germany might win, then, to save the sums we had loaned to the Allies, we entered. Our coming into the war was no more nor less than a business transaction, to save our investments.

Having come into the war and having shared in pushing it to a conclusion satisfactory to our associates, then, so Europe believes, Mr. Wilson came to Europe and sought to impose a peace which would deprive the victors of all the fruits of their sacrifices and sufferings. We denied to France protection against Germany through the occupation of the Rhine boundary. We deprived Italy temporarily of her chance to obtain Fiume. Our policy, as expressed by Mr. Wilson, created anarchy and confusion on the allied side, and at the same time brought no alternative solution.

Then, having imposed a League of Nations, which could not have been created otherwise, we went home, rejected the treaty of Versailles, declined to join the league and cut ourselves loose entirely from all European responsibilities.

In due course of time, moreover, we appeared once more on the horizon to demand the payment of the debts which had been contracted to us by our associates of the war. Our first appearance in this direction was through the Dawes plan, which, from the European point of view, represented an American plan to regulate reparations in such fashion that Germany would be able to pay just enough to cover what her enemies owed us and no more. In a word, we intervened to save Germany from her conquerors and to reduce her reparations payments to sums which would cover our loans to her conquerors.

The Dawes plan having been put through, then, in Washington the demands for the payments of the debts other than British were redoubled. As to the British debt, I do not believe it is humanly possible to exaggerate the depth and breadth of British resentment over this. It will take a generation, perhaps two, if the payments continue, to modify this feeling materially.

Moreover, while we insisted upon British and European payment, we at the same time closed our markets to European goods by high tariffs, we closed our gates to European immigration by our new laws. British commercial marine was terribly struck by the competition of our new merchant marine, now in reality run by Government subsidies. We restricted our production, both of cotton and of wheat, so Europe believes, for the deliberate and calculated purpose of obtaining higher prices. But when the British did the same with rubber, we raised a tremendous protest.

To-day the conception of the situation most frequently held in France and quite common in Britain, indeed one might say it is the common European view, is that the United States has from the outbreak of the war onward so played its cards as to arrive at the present situation in which it has put all Europe to ransom. "We are no more free," this is a familiar statement. "All Europe is paying tribute to America and this tribute will be continued to the third generation beyond the war."

In the present hour, when Britain is struggling with economic problems of hardly paralleled gravity, when her population is in considerable part idle, the very bases of her prosperity shaken, the United States is taking annually a tax of $4 per head, while American shipping is reducing British commercial profits to nothing, thanks to Government subsidy, and American competition is eating into the British pre-war markets, notably in South America. More than that the British home market is itself deluged with American products.

Hotels in Paris and London, to say nothing of the Riviera, were filled with Americans, who, in France, were spending money with that utter disregard which a depreciated currency inspires in the mind of the dollar possessors. Not only did the press teem with reports of amazing American prosperity, which were brought back by the few European visitors to the United States, but visibly, before their own eyes, the people of London and Paris saw the Americans scattering money without thought or care.

Yet over against this picture of wealth, accentuated by veracious reports from Washington of vast reductions in the taxation of our country, at the moment when all European treasuries are struggling to find fresh sources of revenue to balance budgets, despite the colossal burdens already borne, stood the official attitude of the United States demanding on every occasion the payment of what from the European point of view were unbelievable sums to meet the war debts.

Now in this state of facts one hears day by day the ever-increasing suggestion that Europe must take some common action to escape from American exploitation and control. Trotsky, appealing to the workingmen of the Continent, is but one voice. The same idea is heard in capitalistic quarters with equal vehemence. The belief that Europe has become purely and simply a field of American exploitation is well-nigh universal.

In the last analysis it is the workingmen who bear the heaviest burden in periods of economic depression such as exist in Britain and Germany. But those same workingmen are constantly told that the reason for their troubles is the American insistence upon debt payments, which at one moment explain German reparations and British debt payment, while in France the financial troubles are ascribed to the refusal of the United States, rich beyond the dreams of avarice, to assist France in her hour of extreme crisis.

The conception of a United States of Europe, not political, but economic and commercial, a combination of European powers to meet the American menace, is, in my judgment, beyond realization now. We still hold the whip hand, for Europe must borrow from us for many years to come, and whatever the private resentment, the public expression—officially at least—must be correct. It is not conceivable that for a decade at least Europe can venture on any collective struggle against the United States.

But one must see and feel what is actually happening. A whole new generation is coming on the field in Europe simply saturated with the conviction that its present miseries are largely due to the policies and purposes of a rich, powerful, and remorseless America, which exploited Europe in war and is now continuing to exploit it in the miseries of postwar time. We are accumulating a balance of dislike, distrust, and even positive hatred which it is a little appalling to consider.

There is a legend in America, much employed by the champions of the League of Nations, that Europe is still eager to welcome us back; that it is waiting for our cooperation to make the league a final success; and that it is also waiting for our aid to achieve final disarmament. Nothing could, in my judgment, be less accurate. Europe does not want anything from the United States at this moment but money, and it resents the fact that to obtain the money it has to seem to invite our participation in what it regards as its own affairs.

Your European friends, British or French, do not longer discuss the American attitude or policy. It is no longer regarded as the subject of possible debate. It is excluded from all but the most intimate conversations, because it is felt that to mention it can only be to release comment which must wound without serving any purpose.

I do not want to give my readers the impression that I share this European view of the United States. Naturally, I do not. But, on the other hand, it seems to me essential that Americans should perceive something of the sentiments which prevail generally over here toward their country. If, as seemed likely when I left home, there is a new sentiment in favor of American participation in European affairs, it is of a certain importance that Americans should understand the state of mind of the Europe into which they are to adventure again and the welcome which will attend them.

If we come back no one will again believe that our decision has in it anything but the desire to forward our business, advance our investments. If we advocate disarmament, Europe will see in this no more than the deliberate attempt to reduce military expenses here in order to insure larger rebate payments to ourselves. And some countries at least will believe that we are prepared to take away from them all means of self-defense solely that we may collect from them a larger annual debt payment. The legend of a disinterested and generous America, of an idealistic America, has gone and can not be re-saved. If we come back we shall come back rather as Shylock than as a savior. That is the cold fact.

We Americans may regard this European point of view as unjust, unreasonable, even as a proof of European obliquity of vision. Certainly no American is going to accept it as accurate. But the solid fact that American statesmanship and public opinion must deal with is that this European judgment exists and is likely to continue. Even more, it is likely to increase rather than diminish as years pass and the single concrete reminder of the war is the tribute—as Europeans regard it—paid each year by every country to the United States.

We have been pleased to regard the debts as an ordinary commercial transaction, covered by the customary morality of private debts, but there is, in fact if not in principle, a profound difference between debts which concern individuals and debts which exist between nations. France, the French people now, owe us nearly five times as much as Germany made them pay after the lost war of 1870. The payment will carry consciousness into the life of every Frenchman and it will arouse resentment. In England the resentment is fiercest among the working people, for whom life is incredibly hard and to whom it seems the exaction of a rich and selfish American public.

Certainly Europe is not going to combine to make war upon us. Nevertheless, I do venture the prediction that the time will come before long when all Europe, divided by every sort of ancient and cotemporary difference, will find at least one basis for agreement in the common hatred of the common creditor. Doubtless if the debts were something which might be paid and eliminated in one year or five, the feeling would also pass, but they are to remain for 60 years. Such being the outstanding fact in Europe, the circumstance which most amazes an American is the present Washington and American opinion, which continues to act in the apparent belief that we shall be welcomed in Europe, whether at arms conferences or elsewhere; that credence will be attached to the familiar statement that we are ready or willing to help Europe.

In sum, in Europe we are Shylock; that is the long and short of it; but European necessities make dealings with Shylock inescapable. From the European point of view we are taking our pound of flesh; our claims are legal, not moral. We may, perhaps with perfect justice, hold that the European view is unfair, unjust, and even fantastically inaccurate, but what we have to do is to recognize just what that European view is and what it is likely to remain for an indefinite future.

The other day in a dispatch from London, dated the 14th day of April, we find quoted an article in the Daily Mail, by L. D. Maxse, entitled "The Education of Uncle Shylock." In this article the writer said:

It is abundantly acknowledged by these observers that such oratory as distinguishes the dinners of the Pilgrim Society, the luncheons of the English-Speaking Union, or the functions under the auspices of the Sulgrave Institute no longer represent any appreciable proportion of public opinion on this side of the Atlantic, and the régime that "blood is thicker than water" has been replaced by something less sentimental.

After applauding Simonds for his "moral courage" and pointing out that "Americans can say things to one another that might seem invidious on the lips or from the pens of foreigners," Maxse concludes:

"We shall be interested to observe the success of this remarkable writer in the task of educating Uncle Shylock, which hitherto has been somewhat neglected."

I ask permission that the article may be printed entire in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article entire is as follows:

[From late editions of yesterday's Times]

MAXSE COMMENDS SIMONDS—BRITISH EDITOR DECLARES HE IS "EDUCATING UNCLE SHYLOCK"

(Copyright, 1926, by the New York Times Co. Special cable to the New York Times)

LONDON, April 14.—"The Education of Uncle Shylock" is the title of an article in the Daily Mail by L. J. Maxse, editor of the National Review, whose vitriolic diatribes against the United States have been a feature of his recent writings.

He finds further material in articles by Frank H. Simonds, wherein the latter seeks to convince his countrymen that the European attitude toward the United States has undergone a revolutionary change.

Maxse writes:

"Recent American visitors to Europe are believed to have taken home increasingly depressing accounts of the sentiments entertained in this hemisphere toward their own country. Some of them are puzzled, many are indignant, a small minority comprehend, but all are agreed that something like a revolution has occurred in the attitude of the Old World toward the New.

"It is abundantly acknowledged by these observers that such oratory as distinguishes the dinners of the Pilgrims' Society, the luncheons of the English-Speaking Union, or the functions under the auspices of the Sulgrave Institute no longer represent any appreciable proportion of public opinion on this side of the Atlantic, and the régime of 'blood is thicker than water' has been replaced by something less sentimental."

After applauding Simonds for his "moral courage" and pointing out that "Americans can say things to one another that might seem invidious on the lips or from the pens of foreigners," Maxse concludes:

"We shall be interested to observe the success of this remarkable writer in the task of educating Uncle Shylock, which hitherto has been somewhat neglected."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have read these articles that we might understand the estimation in which we are held abroad at present. Shylock, it is true. Do you imagine, sir, that by a settlement such as is being made with Italy to-day we will avoid a characterization or an appellation of that sort? Are we so credulous as to imagine that if we yield in this settlement to what is demanded of us all will be well, and there only will be applied to us those affectionate characterizations with which we were so familiar during the period of time when we were sending our money abroad and sending our boys over there to die? That time has passed. Europe's view of us to-day we might just as well admit. Because we insist upon the payment of a moiety of that which is due us Europe's view of us to-day is that we are a Shylock, and although it be undeserving, and although we resent it, say what we will that is the opinion of the world to-day—that Uncle Sam has changed his character, that he is no longer "Sam" but "Shylock."

The gentlemen who prate here about the friendly relations of the people across the sea if we forgive the debts that they owe us, little understand what is going on in the world to-day and little understand the feeling that actuates peoples abroad concerning us. This is the creditor Nation of the earth. The United States of America stands the creditor of all the world. No creditor ever yet was beloved by his debtors, and no matter what the creditor may do, if he insists upon the payment of his just debt and obligation, just the instant that he insists, just that instant he is regarded by his debtors in the fashion that Europe to-day regards the United States. All the sweet things we have heard said here concerning Italy and this settlement we heard said not very long ago when the settlement was being made with Great Britain, and yet to-day it is Britain that charges us with being Shylock to all the world, notwithstanding the settlement that was made which was presumed to bring about such tremendous and marvelous good will between the two nations, economically and financially.

Settle with Italy to-day upon a basis such as is proposed? We do not gain Italy's respect. We gain Italy's contempt. Worse than that, sir; worse than that, we gain the contempt and lose the respect of our own people in the United States of America. When you and I and all of us were upon the stump in 1917-18, when we were begging our people to buy Liberty bonds, suppose one of us had stood before an audience and said, "Here, you people, buy; buy to the uttermost limit; buy until it hurts"—that was one of our favorite phrases—suppose we had said, "We will loan your money to the foreign nations, and when the time comes, though you pay four and four and a fourth per cent and all the principal, we will take one and a small fraction per cent for 62 years from the foreign nations and forgive all the interest and all the principal of the loans that we make to the foreign countries."

Assume that we had said that to our people in 1917 and 1918. None of us would have dared say it, but if we had dared to say it with mob psychology, such as was abroad at that time, none of us would have said it for very long. And yet what is proposed to-day in this settlement is to forgive $2,000,000,000 of indebtedness upon the payment of one and a very small fraction per cent for 62 years. Arithmetically that is exactly what it figures and exactly what it means.

But these gentlemen use an argument singularly appealing to the Shylock. They utilize a phrase which has gone up and down this country in the public press and which has gone out from international bankers in New York City. They utilize a phrase, sir, that ought to bring the blush to every generous and just and brave man. They say, "Take this or nothing. If you do not accept what is offered, you get nothing."

Mr. President, I have perhaps too little regard for financial operations and great financiers, but had I a great debt against an individual and he came to me and said, "Take this or nothing," or if those who represented me went abroad and said, "You must accept what is offered or you will have nothing at all," I would reply, "I can get along with nothing but my self-respect." When Senators assert upon this floor, "You must take this sum or nothing," I resent it, for concealed in that statement there is, unintentionally on their part, of course, an arrogance that can not be brooked for a single moment by a man of self-respect or by a nation of self-respect. The United States of America can live without this two billions of dollars from the Kingdom of Italy; the United States of America will go forward in its regular way to prosperity and greatness and to its ultimate destiny without Italy's $2,000,000,000 due to the United States, but once you corrode the character of the Nation by having this Nation bow its head to the "must" of another power or bow its head to the self-complacent "must" of those in power within it you destroy the very self-respect of the country. I resent more than I resent any other thing in this settlement the fact that it is asserted to us by members of the administration, that it is dinned into our ears on the floor of the Senate, "You must take what is offered or you will get nothing." I had rather get nothing under those circumstances, Mr. President, and I had rather wait the day when something else may transpire.

Harsh with Italy, I would not be at all, but here we have a promissory note of the Kingdom of Italy for the full amount of her indebtedness. It is asked that we exchange it for a speculative future of 62 years.

If Italy is unable to pay more than $5,000,000 this year, why should we not accept it? Well and good. We shall never be harsh or ungenerous or selfish; I never would be under any circumstances with any country, but we are asked to cancel the promissory note which we hold and accept in lieu of it merely another promissory note, as it were, and a promissory note infinitely inferior.

The trouble with this settlement, Mr. President, is that it is the settlement of the international bankers of the city of New York. That is the reason the American people are being commanded to-day to take what they are offered or they are told they will get nothing at all. It is the settlement to-day not of the United States Government in reality; it is the settlement that is dictated from the city of New York. The other day I read an address of one of the members of the firm of Morgan & Co. stating that every man favored—I paraphrase what he said, although I have his remarks before me on my desk—every man, he said, favors the Italian debt settlement except a few "last red cent-ers"; and with all the contempt that he could muster he referred to the few "last red cent-ers." Morgan & Co., sir, says that everybody favors this settlement on a basis of 1 and a fraction per cent for 62 years and then forgive the entire debt—everybody favors it but a few "last red cent-ers." I should like to apply the same rule to the distinguished gentleman who represented Morgan & Co. who made that statement, and ask Morgan & Co. to accept 1 and a fraction per cent of its $100,000,000 loan or its $50,000,000 loan over a period of years and then forgive the principal; ask Morgan & Co. to reduce the interest upon its loan from 7 per cent down to 1 per cent or 2 per cent, as the case may be, or without any interest at all for a period in the beginning of the payment of that loan. I wonder, then, if the distinguished partner of Morgan & Co., who so contemptuously referred to the "last red cent-ers" would agree that Morgan & Co. should be paid upon such a theory as that upon which Morgan & Co. demands that the United States Government shall be paid? So much, sir, for the "last red cent-ers."

I can not in the time that is mine go into the detail of this transaction as I should like to do. Suffice it to say here is a promissory note that we hold for $2,000,000,000. We are asked to exchange it for something that is of no value at all and can not be of value for a long period of time to come. Hold the promissory note if you wish; do not deal harshly with Italy, if you prefer not to deal harshly with Italy; but hold your obligation, accept what may be legitimately paid; but do not yield it up at this particular time.

Who can tell but the dream of empire of Mussolini may yet come true? None of us here, removed by 4,000 miles from his place of activity, can, of course, follow that which he seeks and that which is in his mind, but if his dream of empire should come true in 10, 15, or 20 years, Italy's capacity to pay might be infinitely greater. Yet we have bound ourselves by a rule of "capacity to pay" that is wholly one-sided; we have accepted an obligation less than that which we now have; under the new obligation we can not recover a penny more, no matter what the "capacity to pay" of Italy may be, and yet at any time by proving an incapacity to pay Italy may relieve herself, just as she has relieved herself in the present instance.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate long, but I do desire to bring to the attention of each Senator some specific facts affecting each State of the Union.

Under the provisions of the pending settlement with Italy we are to receive 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years, and then the debt is to be canceled. The interest which the people of the United States are to-day paying on the present amount of the loans to the Italian Government, \$2,150,000,000, is about \$91,000,000 a year. The loan to Italy and the loans to the other foreign governments were made in part from the proceeds of the sale of some \$13,800,000,000 of war bonds, now outstanding, and which bear $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent interest. Inasmuch as we are to receive but 1.1 per cent interest, and finally the loan is to be canceled, let us consider what is the difference between $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent which we are now paying and 1.1 per cent which we are to receive under this settlement. That difference is \$67,000,000 a year. In short, the deficit in interest which the people of the United States must pay every year so long as our $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent bonds are outstanding amounts to about \$67,000,000 a year.

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is very optimistic about the future. He believes that the Government will ultimately be able to obtain money on the basis of 3 per cent per annum. Obviously we can not obtain at 3 per cent the amount of money represented by this Italian debt within eight years, because under the terms of a major portion of the \$13,800,000,000 four and a quarter per cent bonds outstanding they can not be retired by the Government within eight years unless the Government shall go into the open market and purchase them. Therefore we will certainly lose \$67,000,000 a year for the next eight years, and the total loss during that eight-year period, with compound interest at $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, will be \$623,778,900.

Now, let us assume, Mr. President, that we will secure money at the end of eight years and thereafter at 3 per cent, and let us determine the present value and annuity purchasable therewith of the payments promised on the Italian debt on the basis of 3 per cent. It will be found then that our loss annually because of the deficit in interest on this basis will be $36,565,000, and that will continue for 54 years. Then, at the end of the 54-year period, this debt is to be canceled. Now, add together the $67,000,000 loss for eight years, the $37,000,000 loss for 54 years, and the canceled debt, and we have a total loss to the people of the United States that no one can question of $4,661,000,000, and that is without any interest on the increments of interest deficits.

But, Mr. President, if we had that money to use, we could apply it on our $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent bonds, or we could buy the 3 per cent bonds that we may be issuing or have issued. In short, if the people had this money to invest, did not have to pay it out to meet deficits in Italian interest, on that basis what does the loss amount to? It amounts to \$10,000,000,000 for this one debt. Therefore, consider, without interest, the certain loss unquestionably that will result from this settlement is \$4,661,000,000, and, with interest, it is \$10,000,000,000.

Mr. President, it is almost impossible for the human mind to comprehend the meaning of a billion dollars; but we can comprehend in a measure what these sums mean when we apporportion them to the various States of the Union. I propose now to read the roll of the States and indicate to each Senator what this settlement ultimately will cost his State on the basis of population in accord with the census of 1920:

Alabama: Without interest this settlement will cost Alabama $103,546,000. With interest it will cost Alabama $222,144,000.

Arizona: It will cost Arizona $14,729,000 without interest; with interest, $31,599,000.

Arkansas: It will cost Arkansas, without interest, $77,263,000; with interest it will cost Arkansas $166,000,000.

California: It will cost California, without interest, $151,000,000; with interest, $324,000,000. That is what you will vote away this afternoon if you ratify this settlement.

Colorado: It will cost Colorado $41,000,000 without interest; with interest it will cost $88,000,000.

Connecticut: It will cost Connecticut $60,000,000 without interest; with interest $130,000,000. If the Senator from Connecticut votes for this settlement he votes to saddle such loss upon his State.

Delaware: Nine million eight hundred thousand dollars without interest; $21,000,000 with interest.

Florida: Forty-two million dollars without interest; $91,000,000 with interest.

Georgia: One hundred and twenty-seven million dollars without interest, $273,000,000 with interest, is the loss that the people of Georgia must sustain if the Senate puts through this debt settlement. It can not be avoided. It can not be questioned.

Idaho: Without interest $19,000,000; with interest $40,000,000.

Illinois: Without interest $286,000,000; with interest $614,000,000.

Indiana: The loss that this settlement will mean to the people of Indiana, without interest, is $129,000,000, and with interest it is $277,000,000.

Iowa: One hundred and six million dollars is the loss of Iowa, without interest, and $227,000,000 with interest—Iowa, a State that is in the depths of an agricultural depression.

Kansas: The loss to Kansas, without interest, is $78,000,000; with interest $167,000,000.

Kentucky: The loss to Kentucky is $106,000,000 without interest and $228,000,000 with interest.

Louisiana: Seventy-nine million dollars without interest; $170,000,000 with interest.

Maine: Thirty-three million dollars without interest; $71,000,000 with interest.

Maryland: Sixty-four million dollars without interest; $137,000,000 with interest.

Massachusetts: One hundred and seventy millions dollars without interest; $365,000,000 with interest. If the Senators from Massachusetts vote for this measure, they vote to saddle this loss upon the people of Massachusetts. It can not be questioned. It is an incontrovertible fact.

Michigan: Without interest the loss is $162,000,000; with interest, $347,000,000.

Minnesota: Without interest, $105,000,000; with interest, $225,000,000.

Mississippi: The loss without interest is $79,000,000; the loss with interest is about $170,000,000.

Missouri: The loss to Missouri is $150,000,000 without interest, and with interest the loss that Missouri will sustain is $322,000,000.

Montana: The loss to Montana, as a result of this settlement, if it is adopted, is $24,000,000 without interest, and with interest the loss is $51,940,000.

Nebraska, my State, a comparatively small agricultural State so far as population is concerned: This settlement will saddle on my State a loss of $57,000,000 without interest and with interest $123,000,000.

Nevada: Even in the case of Nevada, with its small population, this loss is over $3,000,000 without interest and over $7,000,000 with interest.

New Hampshire: The loss to the State of New Hampshire will be about $20,000,000 without interest and about $42,000,000 with interest.

New Jersey: The loss to the State of New Jersey will be $139,000,000 without interest, and with interest it will be $299,000,000.

New Mexico: The loss to New Mexico is $16,000,000 without interest and with interest $34,000,000.

New York: The loss to New York, without interest, is $458,000,000; with interest it is $983,000,000.

North Carolina: The loss to North Carolina, without interest, is $113,000,000; with interest it is $242,000,000.

North Dakota: The State of North Dakota will lose $28,000,000 or $29,000,000 without interest and $61,000,000 with interest.

Ohio: The loss to Ohio will be $254,000,000 without interest and with interest $545,000,000, or more than the present worth of the entire payments, on a 4½ per cent basis, to be made by Italy to this country. Ohio's share of the loss due to this settlement with interest at 3 per cent, as stated, will amount to more than the present worth of every dollar the debt commission has secured for the United States from Italy on account of this debt of $2,150,000,000.

Oklahoma: The loss to Oklahoma without interest is $92,000,000; with interest, $192,000,000.

Oregon: The loss is $35,000,000 without interest; with interest it is $74,000,000.

Pennsylvania: The loss of Pennsylvania is $385,000,000 without interest; with interest it is $825,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There are a good many people in Pennsylvania who think that the loss will be very much greater than that if we do not ratify this settlement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, let me ask how much greater it would be if we took that $528,000,000 and divided it around? That is the amount we are getting. How much would Pennsylvania lose on its share of that if it never got a cent?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there can be no question as to what the loss will be to the State of Pennsylvania, based upon population, and, of course, we very well know that it will be probably more than in proportion to its population. Without interest—and no one can question these figures—without interest the total loss to Pennsylvania is in the neighborhood of $40,000,000 more than the present worth of every payment promised by the Italian Government over the 62 years.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator is contrasting the present worth of what we are getting with the future value of what we are surrendering. Does he think that is a fair comparison?

Mr. HOWELL. It is not an absolutely parallel comparison I will admit, but it does give us a notion of the meaning of this settlement. But mark you, I am not comparing this present worth with the total loss to all the people of the United States but merely to 1 of the 48 States, pointing out that alone its loss during the next 62 years without interest will exceed the present worth of all that Italy has promised to pay all of the people of the United States. I do not pretend for one moment that that is a wholly pertinent comparison, but I do hold that it gives a sort of a notion as to what this settlement means; and the people do not know. They have not been informed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The people of this country know that it is better to take half a loaf than nothing.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it must be admitted that this is not even half a loaf. It is only 24.6 per cent; it is a quarter of a loaf; and then what? A quarter of a loaf that they promise to let us have over 62 years. That is what it is.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, how about taking a crumb when you are entitled to a loaf and can get it if you have sense enough to demand it?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, one of the things being urged against the people of the United States is that they are money grabbers. I am speaking of the view that is entertained in Europe. Anyone who visits Europe and becomes acquainted with the sentiment there knows that Americans are looked upon as money grabbers; and the statesmen of Italy to-day are priding themselves that they have adroitly thrown us a few crumbs, and Uncle Sam is about to grab them. We are giving away a birthright for a mess of pottage. We are not getting any guaranty; we are merely getting another promise to pay that limits the amount we are to get, that does not guarantee anything. Why, if we keep Italy's present promises to pay, there would be a possibility—it might be remote—that we would ultimately get all; but when we ratify this agreement we estop ourselves from ever getting a dollar more than Italy now proposes to pay, no matter what her capacity may be in years to come. Mussolini's dreams may come true; he may become the Emperor of Italy; Italy may again reestablish the Roman Empire; even so, the United States of America will not even have a valid claim for another dollar more than the amount stipulated in this agreement. This is a limitation. It is no advantage to us.

I can not believe this fact has been fully considered by the Members of the Senate. It is the same kind of a promise to pay that we now have except that it is for a less amount. It is a limitation upon what the people of this country may expect, that is all.

Mr. President, the little State of Rhode Island will lose $27,000,000 without interest through this settlement, and with interest $57,000,000.

South Carolina will lose $74,000,000 without interest, and about $159,000,000 with interest.

South Dakota will lose $28,000,000 without interest, and $60,000,000 with interest.

Tennessee will lose $103,000,000 without interest, and with interest $221,000,000.

Texas—the great State of Texas—will lose $206,000,000 without interest, and $441,000,000 with interest.

The little State of Utah will lose $20,000,000 without interest, and $42,000,000 with interest.

Vermont will lose $16,000,000 without interest, and $33,000,000 with interest.

Virginia will lose $102,000,000 without interest, and $219,000,000 with interest.

Washington will lose $60,000,000 without interest, and $128,000,000 with interest.

West Virginia will lose $65,000,000 without interest, and $139,000,000 with interest.

Wisconsin will lose $106,000,000 without interest, and $249,000,000 with interest.

Wyoming alone, with a population in 1920 of only 194,000, will be saddled with a loss of $9,000,000 without interest, and $18,000,000 with interest.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. What is the total for the 48 States, with and without interest?

Mr. HOWELL. The total without interest is $4,661,000,000, and with interest it is $10,000,000,000.

Mr. EDGE. With interest the total, according to the Senator's figuring, is in the neighborhood of $10,000,000,000. If we will lose, under that computation, around $10,000,000,000 through the pending settlement, can the Senator inform us how much we would lose if we did not settle at all, if we wrote off the debt, in other words?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey asks a question that suggests I have proposed writing off of this debt.

Mr. EDGE. Not at all; just for information.

Mr. HOWELL. We never ought to write off this debt. It is a debt of honor Italy should pay. We should not be hard on Italy. We should not be severe. But Italy should not come here and say to the Senate of the United States, "Sign on the dotted line, or you will get nothing." And that is what some of the proponents of this settlement intimate Italy will do.

The Members of the Senate do not realize the sentiment among the people of the country respecting this matter, but I am confident that at an earlier date than may be expected they will realize it. Some, undoubtedly, have been misled by the propaganda of the United States Chamber of Commerce. I received a letter from the president of the chamber asking me to vote for this bill, and answering my letter in reply he questioned the fact as to whether the rate of interest we would receive was 1.1 per cent, followed by cancellation. In fact, he did not know what it was.

I dare say there is not a member of our Debt Commission who had figured it out and knew it was 1.1 per cent. Nevertheless the chambers of commerce throughout the country had been circularized with appeals to write their Senators and Representatives urging ratification of this settlement. What has been the cause? Where has this appeal originated? As the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has recently said, this sentiment arises from the international banker group in New York.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if it will not divert the Senator, I would like to ask him how he thinks the farmers who have borrowed money from the United States through the farm-loan banks, and who have been unable to pay, would like to have the same rule of settlement applied to them, and if he has heard any member of the debt commission, or anybody else, propose such generous terms to the farmers.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, one of the Senators now in the Chamber, in speaking of this matter the other day, called my attention to the fact that in his State the farmers were paying in excess of 8 per cent for money furnished by the intermediate credit banks. No one would think of aiding our farmers in the manner proposed for Italy. It would be declared uneconomic, beyond the limit; and I admit it would be. But the absurdity of the situation—that a group of international bankers can inveigle us into their way of thinking respecting Italy! All know that what they urge and what it is being proposed we shall do respecting Italy this afternoon, we would never think of doing in behalf of our constituents. Yet they—especially our farmers—have a far greater claim for such aid than has Italy.

It may be that the Italian debt settlement bill will be approved this afternoon. In that event, I shall appeal for at least one amendment, and that amendment is this:

The Italian debt settlement provides for the issuance of written obligations in large amounts payable to the United States or order. However, it is agreed that these may be surrendered for bonds payable to bearer in smaller denominations suitable for marketing. Furthermore, the Italian Government also agrees to aid in the listing of such securities upon such exchanges as the Secretary of the Treasury may indicate. However, it must be evident that these bonds would be unsalable, as those who would be likely to buy would do so for the purposes of income. A consideration of the rates of interest agreed upon renders it evident that they would be practically useless as income securities. For example, a $1,000 bond, under the provisions of the settlement, would only produce a return of $1.25 per annum during the 10 years ending 1940. The next year the return would be $2.50; the third year, $5; and only during the last 7 years of the 62-year period would the return per $1,000 reach $20 per annum.

Moreover, under the provisions of the agreement these bonds would not be nontaxable if owned by a foreigner domiciled in Italy or an Italian subject. Respecting this last feature of the agreement, there is a marked difference between a similar provision in the British settlement, as that stipulates that the securities received by the British Government shall be nontaxable by Italy or any subdivision of Italy, no matter in whose hands they may be.

My amendment proposes, first, that the bonds shall be issued in such amounts and at such rates of interest and with such maturities as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine from time to time, provided that the total payments to be made by Italy in any year, as set forth in the agreement, shall be in no wise affected. Secondly, my amendment proposes to include in the agreement the same provision respecting taxation as that found in the British settlement with Italy.

The provision respecting these matters in the proposed agreement is manifestly of no benefit whatever to our Government and hence the reason for its inclusion is difficult to understand.

I urge this amendment as just, wise, and desirable from a business point of view; and as a matter of courtesy it should be accepted by the Italian Government, as it in no way affects the amount and distribution of payments agreed upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWELL subsequently said: I ask permission to insert in connection with my remarks a tabulation of the data I have used, and to make certain corrections in connection therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Cost to the United States of proposed Italian debt settlement apportioned among the various States in proportion to population [1920 Census]

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, under the terms of this settlement we are cancelling about 75 per cent of the debt that Italy owes the taxpayers of the United States. At least that much has been made clear in this debate. We have been told that we must do this for many reasons, and one of the main reasons is that it will help the people of Italy, who are working for 60 cents a day to produce the wealth out of which this debt is to be paid.

I defy anyone to show how this settlement will relieve the present burden of the Italian people. The people of Italy are paying now all they are able to pay. If this settlement shall be ratified here to-day and go into effect, the burden will be shifted, but not from the backs of the Italian people; they will still have to pay, out of the wealth they are forced to work for 60 cents a day to produce, the interest of 7 per cent which the Italian Government is paying on the new loans that have been floated in this country on the bonds that are being peddled to the American people through the machinery of New York bankers by the present Government of Italy.

On the floor of the House of Commons in England some one charged Uncle Sam with being a Shylock. It is very interesting to note that for every dollar England pays the United States on its war debt England pays its own nationals $9. Has there been any discussion or any question about England canceling her war debt to her own nationals?

It seems to be very well to come and saddle the debt upon the American taxpayer. This settlement, with interest, will cost my State $225,000,000. How much of Italy's debt to her own nationals has she canceled? How much of France's debt to her own nationals has France canceled? How much of England's debt to her own nationals has been canceled?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is it not obvious to the Senator that each of those countries has canceled about 80 per cent of its internal debt through the depreciation of their monetary unit?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. To the extent that the currency had been inflated there has been a deflation of the internal indebtedness. In this country after the war our bankers deflated the currency, and to the same extent increased the debt of the people. The Senator's observation will apply to the short-term loans and to the outstanding long-term loans if the currency shall be on a par with what it is now when those debts are to be paid. But these war loans are of long standing, and there are the usual shifts in the value of the dollar that always attend the deflation following any war, when the small holder is usually dispossessed of his property, when the nation, however, finally comes to a condition of being reconstructed the war bonds and the monetary unit, as a rule, always go to par. It is brought to par by sacrificing the small property holder. It is a tragedy that the paper of production is deflated and annihilated while the debt of war, being of long standing, in time is finally paid.

If there are any debts which should be repudiated, it should be first of all the debts of these governments to their own nationals, and then, if they can not produce the wealth to pay what they owe the United States, they could come to the United States with clean hands and say, "We have repudiated our debts to our own nationals, but we still can not pay you." That at least would be fair. I would be willing to cancel these debts provided these governments would cancel their entire issues of war bonds held by their own citizens. That would insure peace by repudiating the debts and profits of war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that in Germany a movement is on foot, and it has been partially successful, under the terms of which additional payments will be made to those who hold its internal obligations. The depreciation of the mark, and the evil consequences arising therefrom, will not be visited solely upon the unfortunate holders of the mark. There will be a readjustment, and undoubtedly further payments ultimately made by Germany to those who hold her securities. I refer, of course, to her own nationals. I have no doubt, because that question is suggested in various countries of Europe, that the same principle will be invoked and applied by other countries of Europe in the liquidation of the obligations of the respective countries to their own nationals.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator. It seems to me there is one phase of this question that has not been completely discussed; in fact, it has been discussed very little. Due to the lack of time this afternoon, I shall not go into it to any extent, but I want to call attention to it.

A great deal has been said about the capacity to pay. The means of payment have not been discussed in any great detail. It has been admitted that Italy or France or England can not pay its debt in gold. It has been denied that they will pay their debts in goods. The balance of trade being against Europe and in our favor, of course, under those circumstances Europe can not pay in goods. It is also very significant that nothing has been said about any tariff walls being broken down in order that Europe can ship goods over here and so buy dollars with her European goods and so pay this debt.

I wish that some one speaking for the settlement would this afternoon kindly tell the Senate and the American people how, under these circumstances, Europe is going to pay at all. In my opinion the whole settlement of the European indebtedness to the United States has not been discussed with a background in view of an ultimate solution.

The English debt is going to come back here to plague us, the Italian debt is going to come back here to plague us, because Europe can not produce enough wealth to pay the interest on her indebtedness and maintain her present system of armament. She must either get rid of her armament or else she must continue to come over here to make our taxpayers pay for their armament by paying for her indebtedness. She must continue to play statesmen of the United States for a "bunch of goofs" if Europe is to continue to maintain her armament.

Mr. Roger Babson a year ago in one of his letters said, referring to foreign loans:

There is one phase of the situation, however, which should be understood by every investor. A large number of European securities are now being offered in the United States, and clients will have to decide whether or not they will put money into these securities. Statistics show clearly that the European countries have surplus earnings enough to pay interest on Europe's present indebtedness or for maintaining Europe's present armies. There, however, is not enough money to do both. Europe is a good deal like the steamer on the Mississippi River that Abraham Lincoln used to tell about; it had boiler capacity enough either to run the boat or blow the whistle, but could not do both at the same time.

It is a strange paradox that the money that was loaned to Italy and the other European countries was raised by selling bonds to the American people, and when we were selling them the bonds we told them their money was to be used to make the world safe for democracy and to end militarism. Now we are asking them to pay this debt of Italy; we are asking it of the American taxpayers to pay the debt to bolster up an autocracy very much more autocratic and as militaristic as was the so-called autocracy of Kaiser Wilhelm, of Germany. If there has ever been a bunco game played on the American people, it is this twisting around of phrases and slogans in the creation and settlement of these interallied debts.

In a news item early in February, 1925, emanating from the White House to the press, we received the following information:

United States may hold up private loans to France.

White House frowns on most loans to foreign governments.

The United States Government may hold up the private loans of $140,000,000 which the French Government announces it will soon try to raise in this country.

This will be the first foreign-government loan sought here since the White House announced that such credits extended by American bankers would be frowned upon unless the borrowing government was practicing domestic economy.

Since that time the loans of American bankers to foreign governments have continued. There has been no protest. Their securities have been peddled to the American people. Bankers who underwrite those loans receive commissions and concessions. They sell the bonds to the American people. When they sell the bonds of Italy to the American people they are inducing the American people to bet their money that Mussolini will continue to rule in Italy. They are inducing the American people to gamble that the present status quo will continue, just as they induced the American people to gamble with their own funds when they sold them the bonds of the government of the Czar of Russia. When they induced American investors to buy those bonds they induced them to bet that the Czar's government would continue to rule in Russia. They now hold those pieces of paper as evidence that they bet on a losing horse. The time is likely to come when Americans who have been induced to gamble on the political poker table of international politics by buying these foreign investments will again hold scraps of paper showing that they bet on a losing horse.

As the greatest creditor Nation of the world we have control of the greatest power in the world to be used for the benefit of humanity. Ever since the war we could have said to the world and to the governments of Europe, "We are willing to help you. We are willing to loan you money. We are descended from the same flesh and blood that you are. We realize that after all humanity is one great family and we are willing to help you, but on the condition that you shall reduce your standing armies and your navies. You shall quit taxing your people, exploiting your people, and making your laboring people work for 60 cents a day in order to produce wealth to enable you to maintain a large standing army and a large navy for the purpose of carrying out the imperialistic programs of your governments." If the European governments would agree to that, I would be willing to say that the American taxpayer would cancel the entire indebtedness. We could purchase peace for the world. That is a proposition which should have been made to the European governments a long time ago. Then, with such a proposition we could go to the American taxpayer and the American people with an honest proposition.

Of course, it would cost us some money, but peace is worth something. We spent something like $40,000,000,000, we were told, to get peace, but there is no peace. If this economic power of credit of the United States, the property of the people of the United States, were to be used for peace, if peace can be had by making Europe come to proper terms—and by proper terms I do not mean high rates of interest—if the President would call an international conference for the purpose of agreement upon treaties to reduce the armaments of the world; if the European countries would sign upon the dotted line and agree for a period of 30 or 50 years to do away with conscription, to do away with these large standing armies and navies, then we could have a real settlement of these interallied debts that would guarantee peace to the world. I see no peace in the settlement before us. We agree to tax our people to pay this debt and the old game of intrigue and militaristic imperialism goes on to new wars. I see no friendship between nations in the settlement. Until we take a broader view of the settlement of these debts they are not going to be settled. No question is settled until it is settled right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in a few minutes the Senate will be called upon to vote first upon a motion by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on Finance for further investigation and report to the Senate. This settlement has not been justified in the arguments submitted in support of it, and if it were delayed for 60 days in all probability it never would be consummated. When the American people understand its terms and effect they will not approve the arrangement carried in the bill, because the facts and circumstances underlying it do not justify approval.

When the War Debt Commission was created by act of Congress there was then an agitation in progress for the cancellation of the war debts due the United States. The Congress inserted a provision in the act creating the commission expressly denying the commission the right or power to cancel or remit any portion of the debts due the United States. The commission has reported here a settlement which the Secretary of the Treasury and others construe in fact as a partial cancellation of the debt due the United States from Italy. As stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], under present conditions no Senator who has heard the debate or studied the provisions of the bill can conscientiously regard it as a final adjustment of the obligation due the United States from Italy. The actual effect of the legislation is the permanent cancellation of a large part of the debt due the United States, with absolutely no assurance sounding in evidence that the remainder of it, the amount carried in the bill, will actually be paid.

The justification for shifting a large part of the debt from the Italian people and Government, who owe it, to the American people and Government, who do not owe it, is the alleged inability of Italy to meet its obligations. It is said that this arrangement represents all that Italy can pay and that therefore the United States ought not to demand more. The evidence submitted in support of that declaration as to the ability of Italy to pay is unsatisfactory. One Senator who has made a special study of the subject said that the wealth of Italy is measured by $20,000,000,000 to $22,000,000,000. Another Senator who has made a special study of the subject said that the true wealth of Italy is nearer $35,000,000,000 than $20,000,000,000 or $22,000,000,000.

This involves facts which can be ascertained if the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] shall be agreed to in the Senate. We have the habit of looking somewhat carefully into measures which relate to our fiscal affairs. When a bill to authorize the payment of a claim of a thousand or two thousand or five thousand dollars is introduced into the Senate it is referred to a committee; it is carefully investigated, and then a report is made. If the bill is found meritorious, we pass it. Here, however, we have a measure involving a very large sum, relating to one of the largest financial transactions that has occurred in the history of the United States; legislation which has been reported by an important committee of the Senate without consideration, without investigation, on the theory, no doubt, that it is desirable to make a speedy arrangement regarding the settlement of this debt and to get the matter behind us.

If the measure of Italy's ability to pay is to be the test of whether or not we ought to pass this bill, then the Senate ought to know something more about the ability of Italy to pay than it does know. We know absolutely nothing about the basic conditions which are urged here as a justification for the passage of this bill. Statements of Senators who have studied the subject are so conflicting as to justify an investigation, an inquiry by a committee of the Senate of the United States.

The ability of Italy to pay may be affected by circumstances and by policies of the United States toward Italy and other debtor nations. As pointed out by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and by other Senators in the course of this debate, we have done everything in our power, apparently, to reduce the capacity at the present time of Italy to meet her obligations. We have built higher and stronger what we have come to know as the tariff wall, levying higher taxes upon the imports from Italy, and we have said to Italy, "Notwithstanding the fact that you owe us a billion and a half dollars and more, we are going to make it difficult for you to pay anything by imposing increased rates of tariff duties upon your products imported into the United States."

Mr. President, if the United States wants to do something substantial with respect to this subject, the sane thing to do would be to put Italy and other debtor nations in a position where they could pay their obligations through the regular course of trade with this country, because, as pointed out by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], it does not matter what arrangement we make in this bill, unless other circumstances enable the Italian Government to carry on trade with us, to sell goods in this country, she will probably not be able to meet the obligation as readjusted in this bill.

I am indebted to Mr. Edwin Dibrell, of New York, for information respecting the importations into the United States during the last two years from Italy, and I ask unanimous consent to print in connection with this debate a statement of the goods imported into this country in 1923 and 1924 from the Kingdom of Italy.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the truth of the matter is that respecting all the goods that we buy from Italy we increased the tariff duties in the act of 1922. The rates were already very high when that bill was passed, but we raised the wall higher and so correspondingly diminished the capacity of Italy to pay.

I ask Senators to listen to this statement: If we should to-day cut the rates of the tariff in half as they relate to goods commonly imported from Italy, we would by that act alone double the capacity of Italy to pay her debt to the United States. Of course, she can not pay if we insist upon perpetuating conditions of commerce that deny her the power to sell goods or to export them to the United States. It does not matter what arrangement we shall make in this bill, so long as we perpetuate a senseless policy toward the debtor nations who owe these obligations to the United States, they will not pay them; they can not pay them.

Germany's ability to meet reparations under the Dawes plan depends in large part upon Germany's ability to trade with foreign nations. If we maintain an attitude respecting the tariff of prohibiting Germany from shipping her goods into the United States, or from enjoying some degree of competition in the markets of the United States, Germany will fall down in the payment of reparations and Italy also will fall down in the payment of the obligations carried in this bill should the bill pass.

Other international considerations, possibly of great significance, invite a postponement of the final vote on this bill. During 25 years' experience in the Congress of the United States I have seldom, if ever before, urged delay in disposing of legislation; but I sincerely believe if the country is given time to study this bill and if the two peoples—the Italian and the American people—are furnished full information respecting its provisions and effect that a better method—better for both Governments and both peoples—than that provided in this bill will be worked out.

Not only is it true that additional information should be furnished the Senate, but it also appears that to make the settlement now might have a disturbing rather than a harmonizing effect in so far as international peace may be considered a proper subject matter for thought in this connection.

The Washington Post and other newspapers carried in a press report from London and from Constantinople, under date of April 18, an announcement of conditions that indicate a threatened clash between Italy and Turkey. Turkey was said in that Associated Press dispatch to be calling up for military duty the classes of the ages of 21 and 22, as well as all the reserve men of the ages 23 to 26. Current reports indorsed in London newspapers are said to attribute to the Italian dictator a design to enlist Greek support for his imperial ambitions. It is also announced that Greece has made contracts with Italy for supplies of rifles, tanks, and other munitions for use against Turkey in Thrace. It is idle to say that we have no right to take notice of the progress of events which plainly indicate a threatened outbreak of military hostilities.

It is said here that the United States is not concerned with the political policies or the military policies of the Italian dictator even though they may be calculated to involve world peace; that is our duty to make the settlement promptly without taking thought of how it may encourage imperialistic schemes or strengthen the credit of political régimes apparently devoted to the policy of military aggression. Quite the contrary is true. If the United States is to make a sacrifice—and I am willing that it should—for the encouragement of Italy and for the stabilization of Italian currency, let us make reasonably sure that in doing so we are not contributing to the forces of war and wrath instead of to the movement for peace.

I have not the slightest doubt that the news which reaches us is colored and in some respects misleading; but, nevertheless, the whole course of history in Italy, in Greece, and in Asia Minor during the last few months points to the conclusion that prudence, caution, and restraint are desirable. If the dictator is conceiving and seeks to carry out an imperialistic scheme through which Rome may again become the seat of an empire rivaling in glory and splendor the Rome of the Caesars, we may do well here to take a little time before lending the moral support implied by an approval of this settlement to Mussolini's ambitious schemes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the opponents of the pending bill have had the floor throughout practically all the day. There are a few statements which they have made which it seems to me should be contradicted now so that the contradiction may be in the minds of Senators when they come to vote.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this matter has been discussed by the adversaries of the settlement as if it were proposed to give away something to the Kingdom of Italy, as if we were considering this settlement from the standpoint of their worthiness to receive a gift.

It can not be too often reiterated, Mr. President, that there is only one standpoint from which this problem can be approached, and that is the standpoint of the American interests involved. We are not here to protect Italy. We are not here to work out high ideals in Europe. We are here to do what is for the present and future benefit of the people of the United States, and we have no business striving for the interests of other peoples or other nations if there is the slightest conflict between their interests and the interests of our people. So that it is in no spirit of charity toward some foreign country that we urge the ratification of this debt settlement, but from a stern realization of the fact that it is for the best interests of America that the debt settlement should be ratified on these terms.

It is our bounden duty to exercise such an enlightened selfishness from the American standpoint only as will scrutinize this settlement to find out whether it is for America's interest, not Italy's. Her interests are taken care of by her representatives; but we are Americans here, and we have no business thinking of any other phase of this matter.

We approach our task as any creditor approaches the problem of settling the affairs of some debtor who has overextended himself. Italy is like some merchant who, through misfortune, finds himself so heavily in debt that all his yearly earnings are insufficient to carry even the interest on his obligations, and we are in the position that his banker would be in under those circumstances. We have advanced him the money. We want to get it all back with the stipulated interest, but we realize the physical impossibility of that man and his business yielding enough to pay us even the interest on the debt that we hold against him.

What, then, do we do if we are sensible business men—not politicians speaking to a whole country, but sensible business men sitting down in our own offices to work out what is best for us and those dependent on us? What is the common-sense thing to do under those circumstances? We take stock of the man's property; we size up his business as best we can; we look to see how much he owes—not how much he owes to his wife and his daughter and his son, if you please, but his external debts. How much does he owe outside the family? Because that he must pay or must settle. So we find that his business will yield him a profit, let us say, of $2,000 a year, that he can keep his family for $1,200, and that $800 is the margin of his profit available to take care of his external obligations.

It is just that process that the Debt Commission went through and that the Senate in its more or less laborious way has been trying to go through in sizing up the situation with Italy. We know that she can not pay the stipulated 5 per cent interest on her debt of $2,042,000,000. That means $102,000,000 a year. We know that Italy can not pay that to us. Figure it any way you please; take any estimate of the national resources of Italy; take any estimate of the annual earnings of her people; and we know that she can not pay that; and not a single Senator who has denounced this debt settlement claims that she can pay that. Every man of us admits that some reduction must be made, just as every one of us, if we were bankers and had a parallel situation obtaining with one of our debtors, would be forced to admit that the stipulated terms of the bond could not be met. So we are all agreed that there must be some reduction to enable Italy to work out of that predicament.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I want to know what facts or figures this commission has laid before the Senate that will determine for us what Italy's ability to pay will be 10 years from now or 20 years from now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A good many facts and figures have been laid before the Senate that will enable Senators to determine that. For example, it has been shown to the Senate that all of the coal of Italy is less than 100,000,000 tons. That is not going to change 10 years from now or 20 years from now. It has been shown that the iron ore of Italy is insufficient for a tiny fraction of her annual requirements. That is not going to change in 10 or 20 years. That has been laid before the Senate. That can not change. Those are the physical facts of the case.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But, Mr. President, I showed by the figures this morning that Italy's wealth, according to the best available figures, has more than doubled since 1912.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I venture to say that it has far more than doubled, expressed in Italian currency, as it is expressed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; expressed in American dollars.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know any authority that can venture that statement. I do not believe it has been calculated to that nicety.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is the finest authority I can get.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The World Almanac, I believe.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is one of them, and I think it is a good authority.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator can settle this debt on the basis of the World Almanac or he can settle it on the basis of the researches of our Debt Commission. I prefer the latter.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to take the Senator's time; but we have not had the benefit of the researches of the Debt Commission. We get the statement of the conclusion arrived at by the members of the Debt Commission without the facts. Long ago I introduced a resolution asking for an investigation, and it was promptly put into cold storage by raising the point of order against it that it could not be called up on that day and could not be called up until we had an adjournment. I should like some facts myself.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have been trying to give the Senator the facts for several days, but apparently they make no impression on him. Let me give the Senator a few facts now. Here are a few that may be significant:

Take the item of coal of which I spoke. In the United States we have 2,587,000,000 tons in reserve. Italy has four-tenths of 1,000,000,000.

Of iron ore, Italy has one-tenth of 1,000,000,000. That is 100,000,000 tons, as I said. We have 75,000,000,000—seven hundred and fifty times as much.

Take their cattle; measure the wealth of the farmer. Italy has 165 animals for every 1,000 inhabitants, and in the United States we have 695.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator does not contend that Italy is in the livestock business, does he?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I contend that Italy is an agricultural nation, and that the strength of her agriculture is measured by the amount of cattle she has, and I defy anybody to contradict that statement with success.

Those figures are all in the RECORD. I need not weary the Senate by going over them again. They were all put in the RECORD in the speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], with which this discussion commenced.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think that is any real index to the wealth of a nation? What has he to say about the wealth of Italy doubling in the last 12 years?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. What is wealth? Land, minerals—

Mr. REED of Missouri. Values, whatever they are.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Buildings, cattle, material things—that is wealth.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Money.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Money is not wealth.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does not the Senator perfectly well know that while Italy has not much iron herself, much coal within her borders, that it is in close proximity? Does he not well know that the whole field of manufacturing is open to Italy; that Italy has been harnessing her water power; that she has the greatest water power in the world; and that manufactures are the chief source of wealth now? Does he not know that manufacturing has so increased its productive capacity that every nation that is entitled to be called a first-class nation can produce more than it consumes in manufactured goods without any trouble whatever? It might as well be said that Great Britain is impoverished, and a poor country, because Great Britain can not raise enough farm products to live on. Great Britain would starve in 30 days if she did not get food from the outside. She lives by virtue of her trade, her commerce, and her manufactures. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have taken too much of his time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will answer the questions as well as I can remember them. In the first place, I do not know that just over Italy's borders lie great reserves of iron and coal. I do not know in which direction from her borders she could look to find them. In order to get coal she would have to cross a mountain range that no military expedition ever yet successfully crossed against resistance.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator is mistaken. She gets the principal part of her coal from England, and gets it by water, and gets it cheaper than the people in Washington can get coal hauled from Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That was not the question. The Senator asked me if just beyond her borders did not lie an ample supply of coal, and I gathered that he thought she could organize a military expedition and go and capture it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I am not like your friend Mussolini. I am not going to capture anything.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But this morning, when the Senator was declaring war against Mussolini, I gathered that he thought there was great and imminent danger of attacks by him against his peaceable neighbors.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do. Nevertheless, I do not think that Italy's proximity to coal depends upon Mussolini's sword; and when I say "proximity" I do not necessarily mean in miles. I mean that it is readily accessible, and Italy does obtain vast quantities of coal from England over the water, at very low rates, very much lower than the rate at which we can get coal from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Washington.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the course of this joint and concurrent speech of ours I am glad the Senator got back to the point of Mussolini's military aggressiveness. I want to call to the attention of the Senator, and to some slight extent of all our colleagues, the decrease in the military expenditures of Italy and the number of men under arms in the years before the war and in recent years. I am not going to forget to mention the carabinieri that have been mentioned here as if they were some sort of a secret police force carried along and really intended for military aggression against some neighbors.

In the fiscal year 1912-13 Italy spent, in millions of gold lire, 412,000,000 on her army proper and 49,000,000 on her carabinieri. They are an internal police force. Italy has not the same sort of local police we are used to. The carabinieri are seen on the streets of her cities. They keep order locally, and they are paid to a very considerable extent through the Ministry of War. Therefore it might be argued that they should be included in her military expenses. Her total outlay, then, was 461,000,000 lire, about $92,000,000.

In the year 1924-25, the last completed fiscal year, her appropriations for her army proper had diminished to 286,000,000 lire, a decrease of 126,000,000. Her appropriations for the carabinieri had increased to 96,000,000. That is an increase of 47,000,000 lire. Her total expenses last year were 382,000,000—that is, about $85,000,000—a decrease against 1912-13 of 79,000,000 lire.

Remember that the cost of living has gone up. Remember that Italy has a slightly increased territory to police. Remember that all around her are increased armies, as compared with the pre-war period, and then see, if you please, that her appropriations have gone down 79,000,000 gold lire since 1912-13. Those are the figures as to her army.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator the number of the personnel of the army of Italy in 1912?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In 1912 the total number of officers and soldiers in the army, navy, and air service was 234,000.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is it now?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the last year it was 223,000, a decrease of 11,000.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That does not include the navy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It includes the Navy and aviation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Not according to my figures.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator advise us as to the increase of the military budget since the negotiations for the settlement of this debt began?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have not the figures since the 1st of July, and I do not suppose we shall ever be able to get the figures up to the minute of a vote, whether we postpone it, as the Senator proposes, or vote on it now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator that, according to the official gazette which was published in February, it has increased at the rate of $25,000,000 a year.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If so, it still will not be any larger than it was in 1912.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator has not much time left, but I venture to ask him a question.

Suppose Mussolini is belligerently minded, and suppose he goes to war with neighboring nations, and suppose we postpone this debt settlement until after he shall have gone to war and further exhausted the resources of Italy, are we apt to get a better settlement after that is done than we are now?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think the Senator puts it very well. Of course, if all those suppositions were likely to become realities—and they are not, in my judgment—at the end of that process, and after further postponement, we would end by settling on a worse basis than we have here before us to-day.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am going to ask—

Mr. REED of Missouri. Just one question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. One question, and then I am going to tighten up.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If Mussolini did these identical things after having made this settlement, and bankrupted Italy, would not her paper be worthless?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course it would. If Italy goes bankrupt, her paper is no good.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Who here would vote to extend him a credit by making this settlement so as to make it possible for him to go to war?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am going to decline to yield for the balance of my time.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator is irresistible. I yield to him.

Mr. BLEASE. Is there anybody else in Italy besides Mussolini?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There are about 40,000,000 other people there besides Mussolini.

Mr. BLEASE. I thought, from the discussion, that Mussolini was the only man in Italy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It has been charged also, as recently as this afternoon, that Italy has increased her navy. I want to give the Senate the facts on that.

Italy's appropriations in 1912 for the navy were 261,000,000 gold lire. They have been reduced, until in the last fiscal year they were only 142,000,000, a decrease of 119,000,000 lire.

Under the Washington disarmament agreement Italy is entitled to a fleet of the same strength as that of France; that is, capital ships aggregating 175,000 tons. As a matter of fact, Italy has not laid down a capital ship since that treaty was signed. She has fallen behind France in naval strength. She has to-day seven battleships, with a tonnage of 133,000, against France's nine ships, with a total tonnage of 194,000. That is the way Italy has allowed her naval strength to fall below the permitted ratio of the Washington Disarmament Conference.

I say that that is absolutely incompatible with the theory that Mussolini, as a great despot of the Mediterranean, is about to crush his neighbors, and establish a new Roman Empire with himself as its Caesar. That is a preposterous suggestion.

Think of Italy's situation when sizing up these reductions in her army. Remember that she is next door neighbor to the Balkans, which for centuries have been the hotbed of trouble in Europe; that her frontier abuts on the frontier of what used to be Austria, where the racial hatreds go back since before the time of Napoleon. Those are her neighbors, at her very elbow. Yet she, whom my adversaries accuse of being militaristic, has actually reduced her army and her navy, in spite of the proximity of these habitual trouble makers. The idea of calling these people militaristic!

In conclusion, this matter is being considered to-day in an atmosphere of dispute, high words, banter to and fro across the aisle, in an atmosphere not calculated for the wisest decisions of business. But if we look to see what has been done, we find that a bipartisan commission have considered this matter at their leisure, in cold blood, without excitement, and that they have come unanimously to the opinion that this bargain they present to us here represents the utmost of Italy's capacity to pay us on the principal and interest of her debt.

Shall we be guided by the oratory of the Senate, the smart things we say in the dialogue that passes here during the day, or shall we be guided by the sober, sane business judgment of that commission, which met and adjourned to study, and met and adjourned to study, and finally came unanimously to the opinion, Democrats and Republicans alike, that this was the best thing for the interests of the United States?

The Debt Commission did not say, "This is best for Italy." They did not say, "This is the best way to build up the world. This is the best way to help Mussolini in his projects." They said, "This is the best thing for America."

Are we going to be guided by their judgment, or by the contentions in this forum? It seems to me that it is obviously wise for us to be guided by their conclusions. They would not have been unanimous had the case not been clear to them. How can we say that those experts whom we have delegated to represent us could come unanimously to a false conclusion about the interests of the United States?

I submit that this debt settlement ought to be ratified now, and that postponement of it, as contemplated by the motion of the Senator from Idaho, would be almost as great a calamity as the denial of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the question is upon the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Mr. BORAH moves that the bill (H. R. 6773) be recommitted to the Committee on Finance for further investigation and report as to the present industrial, economic, and financial conditions of Italy.

That said investigation include an inquiry into the private loans made, or to be made, to the Italian Government, and as to the showing made by the Italian Government to the parties making said loans as to its capacity to meet them.

That the said private bankers who have made a study of Italy's economic, industrial, and financial conditions be called before the committee to give the committee whatever information they have as to the present capacity of the Italian Government to meet its obligations.

That further inquiry and investigation be made as to the present military expenditures of the Italian Government and also the plans of said government for an increase of its military expenditures.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I am unable to obtain a transfer. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NORRIS's name was called). I was requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when Mr. PITTMAN's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is ill and unable to be in attendance upon the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. SCHALL's name was called). The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 54, as follows:

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after "That" insert a comma and "subject to the modification set forth in section 2."

Page 3, after line 19, insert two new sections, to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. At any time, upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Kingdom of Italy shall issue to the United States, in exchange for any or all of the bonds issued under the settlement specified in section 1 outstanding and remaining unpaid, an amount of bonds equal to the present value, at the time of the request, of such bonds. Such bonds issued in exchange shall be in bearer form and shall be in such denominations, at such rates of interest, and with such dates of maturity, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, except that the total amounts due in any one year on account of the principal and interest of any such bonds shall not exceed the amounts which would be payable in such year in accordance with the schedules provided in the settlement specified in section 1, plus amounts due thereunder in any prior year and remaining unpaid.

"Sec. 3. The principal and interest of all bonds issued or to be issued hereunder shall be paid without deduction for, and shall be exempt from, any and all taxes and other public dues, present or future, imposed by or under authority of the Kingdom of Italy or any political or local taxing authority within the Kingdom of Italy."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my general pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. SCHALL's name was called). The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent, due to illness. If present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED of Missouri (after having voted in the affirmative). For the purpose of qualifying myself to enter a motion to reconsider, I change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

So Mr. HOWELL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I simply notify the Senate that within the two days allowed by the rule I shall enter a motion to reconsider the vote taken on this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments to be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass? Mr. REED of Missouri and Mr. HARRISON asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea"; and if I were privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when the name of Mr. NORRIS was called). The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. If the Senator from Nebraska were present, he would vote "nay" and the Senator from Alabama would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when Mr. STECK's name was called). The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK] is unavoidably absent. He has been unable to obtain a pair. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED of Missouri (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, for the purpose of qualifying myself to enter a motion to reconsider, I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire again to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

So the bill was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America made by the World War Foreign Debt Commission and approved by the President upon the terms and conditions as set forth in Senate Document No. 3, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, is hereby approved in general terms as follows:

The amount of the indebtedness to be funded, after allowing for certain cash payments made by Italy, is $2,042,000,000, which has been computed as follows:

Obligations taken for cash advanced by Treasury	$1,648,034,050.90
Accrued and unpaid interest at 4½ per cent per annum to Dec. 15, 1922	251,846,654.79	$1,899,880,705.69
Accrued interest at 8 per cent per annum from Dec. 15, 1922, to June 15, 1925	142,491,052.93	2,042,371,758.62
Deduct payments made on account of principal since Dec. 15, 1922	$164,852.94
Interest on principal payments at 8 per cent per annum to June 15, 1922	7,489.84	172,292.28

Total net indebtedness as of June 15, 1925—2,042,199,466.34
To be paid in cash upon execution of agreement—199,466.34

Total indebtedness to be funded into bonds—2,042,000,000.00

The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on June 15 of each year up to and including June 15, 1987, on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the Kingdom of Italy to postpone such payments falling due after June 15, 1930, for two years, such postponed payment to bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum. The amount of the annual principal installment during the first five years shall be $5,000,000. The amount of the principal installment due the sixth year shall be $12,100,000, the subsequent annual principal installments increasing until in the sixty-second year of the debt-funding period the final principal installment shall be $79,400,000, the aggregate principal installments being equal to the total principal of the indebtedness to be funded into bonds.

The Kingdom of Italy shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of principal of the bonds on June 15 and December 15 of any year upon ninety days' advance notice.

The bonds to be issued shall bear no interest until June 15, 1930, and thereafter shall bear interest at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1930, to June 15, 1940; at the rate of one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1940, to June 15, 1950; at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1950, to June 15, 1960; at the rate of three-fourths of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1960, to June 15, 1970; at the rate of 1 per cent per annum from June 15, 1970, to June 15, 1980; and at the rate of 2 per cent per annum after June 15, 1980, all payable semiannually on June 15 and December 15 of each year.

Any payment of interest or principal may be made at the option of the Kingdom of Italy in any United States Government obligations issued after April 6, 1917, such obligations to be taken at par and accrued interest.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that a full Senate is now here, having voted on the prevailing side, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Italian debt settlement bill was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, that is a trick which is not worthy any Senator. I gave notice that I proposed to file a motion to reconsider, and I told the chairman of the committee that I would enter that motion to-morrow and that I wanted to discuss it. Now we have another Senator making the motion for an entirely different reason and then promptly a motion made to lay on the table.

If Senators want to play that kind of politics, they may do it; but I say that it is not fair dealing or fair play; that it is unworthy any Senator to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make the point of order that, the Senator from Missouri having already given notice of his intention to move to reconsider, it is not in order for the Senator from Ohio to move to reconsider after that notice is given.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to supplement what has been said, I also make the point of order against the motion made by the Senator from Ohio, because manifestly it was not made in good faith.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I made the motion in good faith, in order to have the matter reconsidered while the Senate is here; and I insist upon the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. FESS. I rise to a point of order. A motion to table cuts off debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to hold that the motion of the Senator from Ohio is in order. Debate is permitted on the motion to reconsider, but not on the motion to table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. Does the Presiding Officer hold that a motion to reconsider is debatable with a motion to table pending?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] insists upon his motion to lay on the table, of course there can be no debate at this time; but I will serve notice now on Senators—

SEVERAL SENATORS. He was not recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Did the Chair entertain the motion of the Senator from Utah to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Ohio?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the situation existing now I certainly shall ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I was sure the Senator from Utah would do that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will object to that unless the Senator from Missouri will state the time when the motion for a reconsideration is to be considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate the Senator from Missouri has two days in which to submit his motion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. May I answer the Senator? I do not intend to indulge in any sharp practice, in any pettifoggery, or anything of that kind. I gave notice of this motion in good faith. I intend to take advantage of no person. I mean that the Senate shall have the fullest opportunity to consider the proposition. My particular reason for changing my vote so that I could make this motion was that I was perfectly certain, from the conversation of Senators who were about me, that they did not fully comprehend the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL]; and I believed that if we could get a reconsideration there was a fair chance of changing the vote of the Senate upon that question, if we could get it in such a position that it could be debated here in the Senate. So I have reserved this right; and I hope nobody will undertake to cut off the right to make a motion to reconsider when it is made in good faith.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. FESS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. May I make a suggestion? I hope the Senator from Utah will be permitted to withdraw his motion to lay on the table. It introduces a practice here which would make it absolutely impossible hereafter so long as I am in the Senate to get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at any particular time.

The way the matter transpired to-day, there were those who wanted to discuss this matter further, but under the unanimous-consent agreement the time was occupied, and properly occupied. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was entitled to close this debate for the advocates of the measure, and I have no fault to find with that; but if, going along with that condition of affairs, we are to be denied the right to discuss a motion to reconsider, necessarily we will not hereafter, in order to protect ourselves, agree to proposals for unanimous consent to vote at any time. We will simply have to debate, and vote when the debate is over; and that is a practice which the Senator from Ohio ought not to take the chance of trying to introduce in the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I made the motion to reconsider in good faith, because we have been considering this proposal for weeks and weeks, and the Senate is here in session, and a motion to reconsider can be made only once, and I thought this was the time to do it. If the Senator from Missouri, who wants to enter the motion to reconsider, will give the Senate a suggestion as to when we are going to consider it by a unanimous-consent agreement to-day, I will withdraw the motion to reconsider; otherwise, I will not. The Senate is here. Let us reconsider it now, while the Senate is here.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator yield to me? I think the Senate is suddenly becoming very scrupulous in matters that it was not scrupulous about not long ago. When the nomination of Mr. Warren was here before the Senate in open session, I moved to reconsider the vote. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] promptly moved to table my motion, and I heard no voices raised in my behalf because I was being steam-rolled before the Vice President could reach the Chamber; and it is a parallel case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not ask for delay. The whole subject matter of that motion to reconsider had been debated to the satisfaction of every Senator. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not request a delay on his motion to reconsider, and the vote was accordingly taken on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I suppose the Senator moved to lay it on the table because he did not want any argument. Every Senator in the Chamber knew why I moved to reconsider that vote, and every Senator in this Chamber knew why the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] moved to cut off debate on it; and yet not a soul thought that was discourteous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just a moment. Notwithstanding the single instance referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania—which the Senate is just now learning, after almost a year, was offensive to him—the practice never has prevailed in the Senate of resorting to this species of legislative legerdemain that prevents the Senate from exercising the right to reconsider deliberately.

We all know that if a motion is made to reconsider, and then a motion is made to lay that motion on the table, there is no such thing as deliberation in connection with motions to reconsider; and you will not get any more unanimous-consent agreements, because in order to avail themselves of the right of full consideration Senators will not agree to requests for unanimous consent.

Now what is the effect? The Senator from Ohio has the legal right to make this motion. His object in making it, however, is to cut off the motion of the Senator from Missouri, which contemplates some degree of deliberation in connection with the reconsideration of this matter.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Missouri will give us a suggestion as to when this will be done—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow. If this sort of tactics is to be resorted to at this stage of the proceedings, we will resort to some other tactics?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, have I not the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I had the floor, I thought. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor. He yielded to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania had the floor. I thought I had it. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of a motion to recess or adjourn?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. First, I want to make the statement that I was interrupted in making before.

Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement under which the Senate has been proceeding provides that at 4 o'clock—the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment * * * or any motion that may be offered, and upon the bill.

I submit that that includes the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no!

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no!

Mr. BORAH. No; that concludes with the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate, by entering into that agreement, did not waive its right to reconsider, take a vote on the bill, and reject it. The Senator can not maintain that as a parliamentary proposition. Now let us see. If we can have the fair sort of procedure, we can go on with the business of the Senate. If we can not, as soon as I can get the floor I am going to move to adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his motion. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that a unanimous-consent agreement does not foreclose a motion to reconsider. I think that has been held two or three times, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion? I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the question of reconsideration be taken up to-morrow not later than 2 o'clock, and that a vote be taken on it before adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No, Mr. President; we have now had, if I may be pardoned, some experience in this matter from which we may take a lesson. First, let me say, before I come to that, that I never proposed a reconsideration in better faith in my life. I believe that the Senate, upon fully comprehending the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, may change its opinion and its vote with reference to that amendment.

What is the reason why the Senate has not understood it? Because we entered into a unanimous-consent agreement which cut off debate at a certain hour, and the amendment came up then without even a word of explanation. The Senator from Nebraska was about to deal with his amendment when the gavel fell, and under the rule he was obliged to take his seat.

I consented to an hour to vote because I did not want to delay this question, and I consented to something that I have heretofore protested against vehemently—namely, the cutting off of debate at a certain hour, and amendments then coming up which had not been debated or considered—so I am not willing now, on a motion to reconsider, to agree that the debate shall be ended at a certain hour. I am willing, however, to say to the Senate—and I do not need to make any agreement about it, because I keep my word—that I will enter this motion to-morrow if I am alive and able to be on the floor of the Senate; I will be ready to have it, as far as I am concerned, go to immediate consideration; and when it has been reasonably debated, and we understand what the attitude of the Senate is, I shall not delay it.

There is no filibuster about this movement. I think that when Great Britain can get clauses written into her bonds that are not written in ours, that do not relate to the amount of interest or the time of payment, and that are advantageous to Great Britain, we can get the same clauses written into our bonds or obligations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment, not for the purpose of interfering with this discussion, but I desire simply to express the hope no arrangement will be made that will interfere with the presentation by the Board of Managers of the House of Representatives of the articles of impeachment against Judge English. I am informed that the Board of Managers will present themselves at the door of the Senate at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, and if the Senate receives them, which I think courtesy will require, they will present the articles of impeachment. I think it will require at least one hour to present the articles and in framing the necessary order for the future proceedings in that case.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I made the motion to reconsider in order to bring the matter immediately before the Senate while so many Senators were here. I made it in good faith. I made it because I thought after so much effort to get a time fixed for a vote, and after having so much time for consideration, we did not want again to reopen the matter and have it all to go over again, which the adoption of a motion to reconsider would mean.

Since the Senator from Missouri has stated—and, of course, I accept his statement—that he wants to discuss the amendment in good faith, and that he does not want to delay the consideration of the matter, I am going to accept that explanation, and I will withdraw the motion for reconsideration.

However, it seems to me that we ought to have it settled now while the membership is here, and I would like to have the time fixed, if that is possible, when we will have a vote, because so many Senators are arranging to go away. I made the motion absolutely in the interest of the expedition of legislation, but I withdraw the motion for a reconsideration upon the statement of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want my position misunderstood. I am not deeply concerned about who makes the motion for reconsideration, or when it is debated; but I do not propose to sit silent when motions to lay on the table are made in the Senate Chamber. The campaign of the able Vice President for cloture will be wholly unnecessary if that becomes the practice of this body. If it is going to be the practice, unanimous-consent agreements are at an end in this Chamber.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator did not feel that way last March when my motion to table was before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Pennsylvania may be assured, as the RECORD will show, that I have repeatedly protested when a motion to table has been made. It has been my rule to vote against the proposition to lay anything on the table. My record here will show that I have all but universally protested and voted against the practice.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD the vote taken in the Senate on March 10, 1925, on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to lay on the table the motion of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania to reconsider a vote. I ask that the yea-and-nay vote then taken appear in to-day's proceedings.

I may state, in passing, that it includes the names of Mr. BORAH, Mr. REED of Missouri, and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I did not get the significance of that last remark of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This is a vote to lay on the table my motion to reconsider a vote of the Senate. I think it is interesting that the Senators who regard our action to-day as unprecedented, all voted to lay my motion on the table last March.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no hesitancy in voting for a motion to lay on the table under conditions which I think justify that action. I make no apology for it, nor do I ask any other Senator to apologize for his procedure here. It is a fair procedure under the proper circumstances.

As I said a moment ago, Senators are at liberty to adopt that course, but I do not think it will promote the speedy transaction of business. I am sure it will prevent unanimous-consent agreements, if it becomes the established policy of the majority, the moment they win a vote, to undertake such parliamentary procedure as to make impossible reconsideration of a matter.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think the Senator's point is well taken, but I think this vote would be most interesting in connection with the remarks of those tender-hearted Senators who have never, according to their recollection, voted for a motion to table.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like very much to be included within that designation "tender-hearted Senators," but I can not claim the right to be, because I have no abhorrence of a motion to lay on the table when I want something laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me the Senator does not recognize the difference between his motion and the motion made by the Senator from Ohio.

The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania was made earnestly and honestly to get a reconsideration. The Senator from Ohio was attempting to introduce in the Senate a practice that prevails in the House. The Senator from Missouri had given notice that he would make a motion to reconsider. To cut him off, the Senator from Ohio, who did not want reconsideration, made his motion, so that it could be laid on the table. The practice in the House is to make a motion to reconsider, then have a motion to lay that on the table, but that has never been the practice in the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Virginia is exactly right. I did make my motion in good faith, and I was entitled to serious consideration of my motion. Therefore I was all the more shocked when the Senator from Virginia, who has just spoken, joined the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and these others in voting to table my motion.

Mr. SWANSON. The injustice of this was that the Senator from Ohio was trying to deprive the Senator from Missouri of a right the Senator has, the right within two days to make the motion himself; it was an attempt to cut him off.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Now I renew my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator's request will be granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The proceedings were as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., special session of the Senate, March 10, 1925, p. 101]

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania obtained the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move a reconsideration of the vote just taken, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded by the Senator from Montana on his motion to lay the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table, the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania being to reconsider the vote just taken. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. HOWELL's name was called). I repeat the announcement previously made, that my colleague [Mr. HOWELL] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. La Follette's name was called). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. STANFIELD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). In order that the matter may be settled, and as it seems that my side of the Chamber does not want to have this man for Attorney General, I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. If the Senator from Rhode Island were present, he would vote "yea"; and if the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 39, as follows:

Yeas—41: Ashurst, Bayard, Blease, Borah, Bratton, Brookhart, Broussard, Bruce, Caraway, Copeland, Couzens, Ferris, Fletcher, Frazier, George, Harris, Harrison, Heflin, Johnson, King, Ladd, McKellar, McMaster, Mayfield, Neely, Norbeck, Norris, Overman, Pittman, Ralston, Ransdell, Reed of Missouri, Robinson, Sheppard, Shipstead, Simmons, Swanson, Trammell, Tyson, Walsh, and Wheeler.

Nays—39: Bingham, Butler, Cameron, Capper, Cummins, Curtis, Dale, Deneen, du Pont, Ernst, Fernald, Fess, Gillett, Goff, Gooding, Hale, Harrell, Jones of Washington, Keyes, McKinley, McLean, McNary, Means, Metcalf, Moses, Oddie, Pepper, Pine, Reed of Pennsylvania, Sackett, Schall, Shortridge, Smoot, Spencer, Stanfield, Wadsworth, Watson, Weller, and Willis.

Not voting—14: Dill, Edge, Edwards, Gerry, Glass, Greene, Howell, Jones of New Mexico, Kendrick, La Follette, Lenroot, Phipps, Smith, Stephens, Underwood, and Warren.

So the motion of Mr. WALSH to lay on the table the motion of Mr. REED of Pennsylvania to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. I want it understood that the motion I made was made in good faith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. FESS. The motion I made—

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FESS. Not now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To a question?

Mr. FESS. Not now. I made the motion not only in good faith, but it was a motion that would have opened up the matter for debate, and anybody who wanted to debate it could have debated it, because the Senator from Utah was ready to withdraw his motion to table. I made my motion because that is a procedure that ought to be in vogue here, and is in vogue in every parliamentary assembly in the world outside of the Senate, and we ought to adopt it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will not admit that he wants a reconsideration. He does not want this proposition reconsidered.

Mr. FESS. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. SWANSON. That is a practice which prevails in the House to give finality to a matter. A Member has two days in which to make a motion to reconsider. Consequently, in the House of Representatives, the moment they pass a bill, in order to cut off the chance of reconsideration, somebody who does not want reconsideration moves for reconsideration, and a motion is made to lay on the table the motion for reconsideration. That disposes of it.

The Senator from Missouri had given notice in good faith that he was going to make a motion within three days to reconsider the vote. The Senator from Ohio could facilitate business by moving to reconsider, a motion could be made at once to lay that on the table, and that would end it, except for the motion the Senator from Missouri was going to make under the rules of the Senate. The course of the Senator from Ohio would mean the introduction of the custom in the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it is highly improper for Senators to question the good faith of other Senators, but in that connection Senators ought not to assert their good faith unless they recognize it as open to question. I want to ask my friend, the Senator from Ohio, a question, and I hope he will answer it in all seriousness.

Mr. FESS. In good faith.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator said that he made the motion to reconsider in good faith. I asked him if, when he made it, he intended to vote for his own motion?

Mr. FESS. I intended to give the Senate an opportunity to vote on whether they wanted to take it up or not. I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator made a motion which he says he intended to vote against. If one were permitted to question the good faith of another in this body, I think on the basis of the Senator's own admission we might question the good faith with which he made the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I wanted to make a motion to take a recess.

Mr. FESS. Not just at this moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. FESS. There is a way to prevent a fear I had a moment ago that the whole thing shall be opened again and may run on for a month. I give notice now that unless there is an effort made to consider and have the matter definitely disposed of very promptly I shall then exercise my privilege as a Member of the Senate to make a motion to reconsider and then have it tabled. I do this in order to insure that the matter is not going to run on for the next two or three weeks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, now that we have opened up an experience meeting, may I be permitted to call attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 19, 1920?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is barred by the statute of limitations. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I find that the Senate at that time had under consideration the treaty of Versailles and the League of Nations covenant, and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas is related to have said:

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the motion by which the Senate refused to agree to the resolution advising and consenting to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany.

I think the Senator meant the Versailles treaty.

Mr. WATSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the motion to lay on the table was defeated, but I notice that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from New York has announced the vote of the Senator from Idaho on that question. It would be interesting to know how the Senator from New York himself voted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I voted the same as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but I have not announced that I never voted for a motion to lay on the table.

INDEBTEDNESS OF THE KINGDOM OF BELGIUM TO THE UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 6774) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium to the Government of the United States of America was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill just laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6774, relative to the settlement of the debt of the Kingdom of Belgium to the Government of the United States. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it the object of the Senator from Utah to make the Belgian debt settlement the unfinished business, but not to go on with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. SMOOT. My object is to have it made the unfinished business, but I assure the Senator that there is no idea of insisting on proceeding with the bill this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITION

Mr. PEPPER presented the petition of the Navy Yard Retirement Association of Philadelphia, Pa. (signed by the employees of the Philadelphia Navy Yard), praying for the passage of Senate bill 786, the so-called civil service employees' retirement bill, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. POTOMAC RIVER MEMORIAL BRIDGE

Mr. BINGHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, chartered under the laws of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway or combined highway and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation from a point in the vicinity of Dahlgren, in the northeastern end of King George County, in the State of Virginia, to a point south of Popes Creek, in the county of Charles, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes, or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

"Sec. 3. The said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"Sec. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Virginia, the State of Maryland, any political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"Sec. 5. The said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of its records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"Sec. 6. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge; in fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operation, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"Sec. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and the privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"Sec. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And the Senate agree to the same.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY LAWS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1039) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. DENEEN, and Mr. GORF conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICAN-ORIENTAL MAIL LINE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on Monday the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] presented a resolution protesting against the sale of certain vessels by the Shipping Board, and without debate, and I fear without knowledge of the Senate, that matter was acted upon.

There are some of us who are very much interested in the subject, and I think it is only right that we should have an opportunity to present our views. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which that resolution was agreed to on Monday be reconsidered.

Mr. DILL. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] has entered a motion to reconsider.

Mr. COPELAND. Does that mean that the Senator from California at any time can call up the motion?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly I can call it up, and I had intended to do so to-morrow morning.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. Will it be proper for the Senator to call up the motion to-morrow or the next day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will have to be brought up on motion or by unanimous consent.

Mr. COPELAND. Will it be proper for that action to be taken to-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be proper on to-morrow.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 10164 granting the consent of Congress to Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.) to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between the city of Cape Girardeau, Mo., and a point opposite in Alexander County, Ill., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States; and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

SEC. 3. The said Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Missouri, the State of Illinois, any political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purposes the said Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of its records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.), its successors or assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage, foreclosure, or otherwise is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WESTERN LAND PROBLEMS

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted as part of the Record an open letter addressed to the President of the United States by Hon. George W. P.

Hunt, Governor of Arizona, setting forth a review of conditions confronting Western States, with special reference to the land problems and Government control thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The letter is as follows:

APRIL 9, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The year 1926 is the sesquicentennial of many stirring events in the history of our country. And, perhaps, it is due to the fact that ancestors on both the paternal and maternal sides of my family participated in some of these events that makes me feel so keenly the necessity of adhering to the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded and causes me to reflect that "A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is necessary."

In particular, I feel the importance of recognizing and sustaining the fact that this Government is made up of sovereign States and that the Federal Government derives its authority from powers conferred upon it by the States, rather than the Federal Government being all powerful and governing 48 subject States.

While the doctrine of States' rights has long been the primary doctrine of the particular political party with which I have been affiliated all my life, yet many ardent Republicans have also enunciated and sustained the doctrine of States' rights, among whom may be listed Abraham Lincoln; and I note that in several of your State documents, Mr. President, a reference to the necessity of maintaining the integrity of our State governments.

I am addressing you at this time for several reasons:

First. Because of the occurrence of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of many of the historical events which go to make up the early history of our Nation, a record in which all American citizens take a deep and lasting pride, and which constitutes the fount from which we imbibe the spirit of liberty and the ideals of our country.

Second. Because I see the continual encroachment and building up of the Federal Government at the expense of the States, and the consequent weakening of the power and influence of the States.

Third. Because the State of which I have the honor of being Chief Executive has been one of the chief sufferers from the policy of Federal aggrandizement; and Fourth. Because there appears to be a definite, well-defined movement under way, which is sustained by several of the members of your Cabinet to perpetrate a crime against the State of Arizona and to violate one of the most sacred and fundamental principles of our Constitution.

It needs no statement from me, Mr. President, to impress you with the fact that this Nation was not built by a race of men who were nurtured and coddled by any group of Federal bureaucrats.

The men who conquered the West and girdled it with bands of steel, who bridged our rivers, tamed mountain torrents, and wrested from the mountain and desert fastnesses the mineral treasures they contained, who have conquered the desert and made it bloom and produce for mankind; these men did not want, and their progeny do not want, to be nursed by any Federal bureau. In fact, Mr. President, the experience in my State—and I think the same is true of other Western States—is that Federal bureaus do not nurse and protect the builder. They act as a drag to sap his vitality and thus prevent the conquering of nature, and retard the putting of the resources of nature to the use and benefit of mankind.

In the State of Arizona 67 per cent of the area, Mr. President, is still in the control of the United States Government, in spite of the fact that we were granted statehood and sovereignty 15 years ago.

I direct your attention, Mr. President, to the treaty with Mexico, in which that nation ceded a considerable portion of the territory which now constitutes the State of Arizona. That treaty provides that the territory "shall be formed into free, sovereign, and independent States and incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as possible, and the citizens thereof shall be accorded the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities as citizens of the original States."

It is pertinent at this point to inquire how it can be contended by anyone that the State of Arizona and other Western States have been admitted to this Union on a parity with the other States in the Union where no reservations of lands were made, in view of the fact that the original price paid for the Territories that were acquired by the Federal Government, and out of which the Western States were formed, was nominal and the National Treasury has been repaid manifold.

This 67 per cent of the area of the State of Arizona which is controlled by the Federal Government in one way or another pays no taxes to assist in maintaining the State Government or in developing the State; and if the land were in private ownership, Mr. President, and the private owner did no more to develop the territory owned by him than the Federal Government is doing to develop the West, that citizen would receive and merit the condemnation of his neighbors.

But that is not the worst phase of the situation, Mr. President. There now appears to be a tendency in the bureaus—which now to such a large extent control our Federal Government—to sponsor legislation which will create a monstrous condition in the West in the shape of the United States Government as the permanent landlord of all this vast domain—a permanent landlord, leasing the public domain, exacting rents and royalties from those who undertake to make a living by grazing livestock, cutting timber, or developing minerals upon the public domain within the borders of sovereign States, and paying no taxes to those States.

This policy, I think, Mr. President, is repugnant to every vital and fundamental principle underlying the Constitution of the United States and the principles upon which this Nation is founded.

A careful perusal of the ideas and the spirit which actuated the early statesmen of this Nation in acquiring the territory which constitutes the public domain indicates beyond any question of doubt that it was their intent to divest the Federal Government of control over public lands as rapidly as the country could be settled and the lands sold.

When Thomas Jefferson executed the Louisiana Purchase he recognized the fact that this act of his administration was consummated without authority of law, and he proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to ratify the act.

Many of the ablest statesmen this Nation has produced and who were imbued with the spirit and principles of the founders of this Republic have denied the constitutional authority of the Federal Government to hold lands within the limits of the States except for such purposes as forts, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings, and for the purpose of maintaining a place for the Capitol of the United States.

I have asked attorneys to advise me under what authority the United States continues to hold dominion over the vast areas in the Western States, and I am advised that there are only four sections of the Federal Constitution upon which such authority rests:

1. Article 1, section 8, paragraph 17, reads as follows:

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district—not exceeding 10 miles square—as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased, by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings. And to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

2. Article 3, section 2, provides:

"The judicial power shall extend to controversies . . . between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grant of different States."

3. Article 4, section 3, paragraph 2, provides:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States and nothing in this constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State."

But I am told by attorneys that the full scope of this paragraph has never been construed or settled by the Supreme Court.

4. Article XI provides:

"The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

Attorneys have advised me that these are the only powers ever granted by the States or the people of the United States to the General Government regarding lands.

But the fact remains that the whole tendency and policy of the Federal Government in the early years of this Nation was to recognize the proposition of creating new independent sovereign States from the public lands, as early as possible, and to dispose of the public domain within the States by sale, homestead, or other means, as rapidly as the lands could be absorbed into private use.

The outstanding menace to the development of the West, in the matter of State sovereignty, is the new policies being discussed and formulated by bureaus in Washington and by Congress which seek to perpetuate Federal ownership of the public domain in Western States.

It is a ridiculous proposition, Mr. President, in addition to being disheartening and destructive to the building up of the West, to have some young man, whose chest and head have recently been expanded because he has received a beribboned diploma, announcing that he has been graduated from some school of forestry in the East, and that he is able to fill a swivel-chair position as a forestry expert with his diploma, burnished puttees and semimilitary uniform, decorated with gold buttons and insignia, undertaking to tell a gray-haired, sun-burned, and frost-bitten stockman, who has survived the experiences of marauding Indians, of drouths, fire, epizootic, and other epidemics of disease how to run his business.

It is even more discouraging to the development of the West to have some self-conscious, highly important graduate of a school of forestry advising and instructing men who have lived in the woods 40 and 50 years, and who know the timber industry from the tree to the market, how to run their business, and informing some of them that they have been in business too long and that they should retire and give some one else a chance.

It is exceedingly exasperating to the sour-dough prospector who has survived a diet upon which only the hardest could survive—yea, who has even undergone the pangs of hunger and thirst because of his optimism that the vein of metal was only another day's labor away, those days piling one upon another, running into years—when applying for a patent upon his claim to be required to prove to some swivel-chair bureaucrat that he is not a crook trying to rob the Government.

The men who have built the West and wrested it from savage nature for the use of man, the men from the West who enlisted under the banner of Roosevelt and fought at San Juan, whose breed and progeny still live in the West, were not men, as I have already said, who were nurtured by Federal bureaucrats.

The father of the senior United States Senator of this State, who lost his life in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, or the junior United States Senator, whose brother recovered the body of Senator Ashurst's father, and the Senator himself, who built the Bright Angel Trail; the distinguished father of Congressman HAYDEN, who pioneered and built the Hayden mills in the Salt River Valley, whose his distinguished son was raised in intercourse with the Indians and who learned to speak their language—these men and others of their type did not come west under tutelage, guidance, and bureaucratic direction of underpaid clerks in Washington. Their type and breed have made America, and the West has been developed under their guidance.

The present policies, if pursued and carried out to their ultimate conclusion, Mr. President, can only result in the change of the ideals of America, and instead of men taking pride in their hardships and labor in wresting a continent from nature and making it productive for a new race of men, we shall set up in their place a system that is very graphically illustrated by Emil Jannings in the "Last Laugh," in which it is illustrated that under some circumstances the worth of a man is judged by the uniform he wears.

You can render a great service to this Nation, Mr. President, during this year when our people have their minds attracted to the great historic principles upon which our Government is founded by directing their attention to the fact that we have departed from the principles of the fathers and by urging a return to those principles. You can render a great service to this Nation, Mr. President, by urging that the intent of the fathers be fulfilled and the territory within the borders of the Western States be ceded to them to be administered by the States in the interest of the people within the States where the territory lies and accomplish the completion of the establishment of 48 sovereign States.

If the Federal Government sets out on the path of becoming a perpetual, permanent landlord, deriving rents and royalties from the public domain, the time will come—it must come—in the West when the whole foundation upon which State sovereignty rests must break down.

One can not walk the streets, enter any public building, or go anywhere within the State of Arizona to-day—and I presume the same is true of other Western States—that he does not collide with Federal employees of every type, form, and character.

There is scarcely a public activity in the State of Arizona that does not impinge upon some Federal bureau or department. There is not an industry but is affected thereby. The horde of Federal employees continues to grow. New additions are made every year, and the trouble is, Mr. President, that the greater number of these employees are wholly nonproductive.

I am writing, Mr. President, not as one who believes in the exploitive theory concerning the resources of our country but as one who has been a staunch advocate of conservation.

As a young man, a member of the Legislature of Arizona, when it was still a Territory, I advocated and supported the turning into a forest reservation of some of our mountain country, of the county which I represented, which had been cut over to secure timber for the mines.

I have supported many of the other conservation ideas and policies, but when I observe the stock industry of our State driven to the verge of bankruptcy by governmental policies; when I was informed by the manager of the Saginaw-Manistee Lumber Co., which has been operating in the State for the past 40 years, that due to new policies in the department which are instituted overnight without any consultation with the men who are in the lumber business and which are based upon mere interpretation of leases and regulations of the department, that his company has been operating at a loss for the past several years, due to these policies, and that if such policies continue it means the company must cease operations; when I observe some of the most progressive men among our mining engineers and prospectors seeking locations and spending their money in the nation south of the Arizona line, rather than put up with and contend with the harassment and with the policies formulated by the Federal Government within our own State concerning mineral ground; when I see the money being paid by our stockmen as grazing fees and the money paid by the lumber industry for the purchase of timber being utilized to pay a lot of unformed nonproductive Federal employees, I can not see the benefit to either our State, our industries, or our Nation of the present governmental policies.

And finally, Mr. President, when I contemplate the activities in Washington of members of your Cabinet and others in connection with the proposals for development of the Colorado River, and the plans they have put forward to invade the State of Arizona and the State of Nevada without the consent of those States for the purpose of enriching and aggrandizing another State, I pause to inquire what has become of the principles which underlie the Government of this Republic?

I note from Associated Press reports of April 6 that an amendment to the proposed Boulder Canyon bill proposed by a representative of the sovereign State of Nevada was brusquely brushed aside by the chief of one of the bureaus—the Secretary of the Interior—who proposes that the Federal Government shall regulate the matter of controlling the Colorado River, a matter which vitally concerns the interests of two sovereign States.

I, as Governor of Arizona, have repeatedly protested against the pending legislation. The Legislature of the State of Arizona has twice refused to ratify the Colorado River compact without another compact first being made between the three States in the lower basin which would fully carry out the provisions of the law enacted by Congress, which authorized the making of a compact which would apportion the water of the Colorado River "among the States."

The State of California, which will profit most from the pending legislation in Congress, concerning the Colorado River, has repeatedly refused to negotiate, and has obstructed the carrying out of the provisions of the law, enacted by Congress and the seven States in the Colorado River Basin, to make such a compact. And when a committee was finally appointed by California to negotiate it undertook to make conditions precedent to negotiating which would give that State everything it wanted.

It is true that a member of your Cabinet, a gentleman from California, has undertaken to assure you and the country that the State of Arizona is adequately protected under the provisions of the Colorado River compact. I pause to inquire of you, Mr. President, who, under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, is best able to determine whether this State is protected by the compact—a citizen of another State who will profit by the despoiling of this State, or the Legislature and the Governor of the State of Arizona?

I think, Mr. President, that the time has come to call a halt upon proposals to increase the powers of the Federal Government and that it be definitely recognized that the safety of this Government lies in maintaining 48 sovereign, strong, and virile States; that the strength of this Nation is dependent upon its citizens enjoying to the utmost the benefits of local self-government so that they may be self-reliant and ready to fight, if necessary, for the maintenance of ideals and principles upon which the Government of this Nation is founded.

If we continue to travel the path we have been on for the past several years, we will eventually adopt the goose step.

I also pause to inquire, Mr. President, why any of the sovereign States of this Nation should place their destiny in the keeping of any member of the President's Cabinet, especially, Mr. President, of the Secretary of the Interior, irrespective of who he may be, or what political party he may belong to.

The record of the Secretaries of the Interior during the past generation is not one, Mr. President, to give confidence to the States. And I particularly direct your attention to the fact that if enlarged powers are to be given to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Government continues to maintain in the West the vast public domain it still possesses, and in addition becomes a Shylock landlord, collecting rents and royalties, that the West will be at the mercy of the Secretary of the Interior, and be without protection, as our Senators and Congressmen now spend a great amount of their time as messengers among the bureaus.

I have been so bold upon several occasions, Mr. President, as to suggest that the public domain in the Western States be ceded to the States. Last year I addressed a communication to the governors of the Western States suggesting that they join me in advocating that this policy be urged upon the Congress of the United States.

The Government has been in the land business nearly a century and a half, and I think the time has arrived when the remaining unreserved, unappropriated, and nonirrigable public domain should be disposed of in the quickest manner for the benefit of the people of the States in which the lands are located. A considerable portion of the land will never be worth very much—acres of it being required to graze a single cow. But instead of keeping it as the property of the Federal Government to produce revenue to maintain a horde of nonproductive clerks and uniformed traveling inspectors, the citizens of this country should be permitted to acquire the property, so that it may be placed upon the tax rolls of the several States for the benefit of those States.

If this policy is not adopted, I would advocate that you recommend to Congress that the surface rights in these lands be sold and disposed of at a nominal cost, and that the homestead law be amended so as to permit a homesteader to take up adequate land to permit of some farming and stock raising, so that the Western States may grow, increase in population, and that this territory in the West may be developed. If the latter policy is adopted, provision should be made to have the policy conform to State laws governing sheep driveways, etc., and the right to prospect for minerals retained.

The youth of this country should be permitted its opportunity to suffer hardships and heart breaks, to have its soul tested, to undergo discouragements, and to anticipate and taste the fruits of victory which come from having achieved success in making useful for mankind what have been condemned as desert wastes.

I have confidence in the West, Mr. President. I love its deserts and its mountains, and I believe the time will come when even some of the least-productive sections can be made to sustain and grow produce which will be useful to man, and I think and believe that the youth of our Nation will find a means of utilizing this domain, provided it is given the opportunity; and that opportunity, Mr. President, will not come with the Government as a land-leasing landlord.

I commend these thoughts to you in connection with many of the great problems which confront our country.

Very respectfully yours,

GEORGE W. P. HUNT, Governor.

Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

AMERICAN-ORIENTAL MAIL LINE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] I ask unanimous consent that at some early date we may give consideration to the matter relating to the resolution for the sale of certain vessels by the Shipping Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not fix the time? Mr. COPELAND. No; but it will be at an early date, within a few days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the resolution to which the Senator from New York refers.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution (S. Res. 204) relating to the proposed sale of vessels of the American-Oriental Mail Line and their operation.

Mr. COPELAND. I am asking unanimous consent for its reconsideration at an early date. That means within three or four days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? If not, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, April 22, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou art our changeless friend and Thy love is with us still. Even in the night of our earthly experience, the light of Thy presence shines with a more radiant luster. Thy promise is verified each succeeding day, namely, "I will never leave nor forsake thee." O let Thy spirit inspire us in lessons of priceless worth. Give us the will to live—to live for the very best that ever entered the thought of man. Thy precepts, O Lord, are precious and are to be treasured. May they claim our noblest thoughts and our wisest words direct. We praise Thee, for before us, even as behind us, God is, and all is well. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3028. An act to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district into five divisions.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2111) for the relief of Levin P. Kelly.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Sesquicentennial of American Independence and the Thomas Jefferson Centennial Commission of the United States in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Thomas Jefferson, the author of that immortal document.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9758. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Vicksburg Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Vicksburg, Miss.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9964. An act releasing and granting to the city of Chicago any and all reversionary rights of the United States in and to the streets, alleys, and public grounds in Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago; and

H. R. 10351. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Natchez-Vidalia Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Natchez, Miss.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3028. An act to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district into five divisions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF THE RECORD—EUGENE V. DEBS

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the Record. On April 19, 1926, in my remarks in respect to legislation introduced to affect the status of Eugene V. Debs, I said that "recently there was introduced a bill asking Congress to restore citizenship to Eugene V. Debs." I should have stated that there had been introduced and referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a House joint resolution readmitting Eugene V. Debs to the rights and privileges of citizenship. That is the exact title. I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to make a very brief statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman from Wisconsin making a statement, but I make the point of order that a correction of the Record is a matter of right, and it is not a matter that can be objected to, if the gentleman from Washington was incorrectly reported.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. I inadvertently misstated the exact purport of a resolution which had been introduced.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is quite different. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And I wanted to put into the Record the correct title of the joint resolution.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, Eugene V. Debs is not only a citizen of our country, he is one of the foremost citizens of our country.

It is important to remember that my bill provides for the restoration to Eugene V. Debs of "all the rights and privileges of American citizenship." My bill did not ask Congress to restore his citizenship.

I knew that Eugene V. Debs had not lost his citizenship, although many people erroneously still seem to think so.

Debs has lost no rights under the Federal law by reason of his conviction—

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is as the gentleman states. Of course the gentleman knows that he did not lose citizenship, but the socialist papers apparently do not know that fact. The resolution of the gentleman should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and not to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. BERGER. The gentleman will kindly let me finish my statement. Debs has lost no rights under the Federal law by reason of his conviction, although he did lose indirectly certain civil rights of citizenship under the law of Indiana, where he resides. The most important of these rights is the right to hold office, and also probably the right to vote.

This is not equivalent to the loss of citizenship, of course. There are thousands of people in the District of Columbia who are disqualified from voting, but they are citizens of the United States notwithstanding. Until recently women throughout the United States did not have the elective franchise, but they were citizens.

Nevertheless, it outrages common sense and is a disgrace to the United States to deprive a generally beloved man like Eugene V. Debs of any of the rights and privileges of citizenship simply because he was opposed to our country's entrance into the World War—a war into which we were pushed by the profiteers. I want to say again that robbing Debs of those rights and privileges of citizenship is a disgrace to the country—not to Debs.

Eugene V. Debs has served a sentence in prison because he was opposed to our entrance into the World War. In the British Parliament there were no less than 23 members who have served prison sentences, because they were opposed to England's participation in the world slaughter. There is not a person in any country being punished to-day for opposition to that slaughter except in the United States of America.

That our participation in the World War was a criminal error is generally admitted by all thinking people to-day. And all that Eugene V. Debs did was to say in 1917 what every thinking person concedes to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, did not purposely misstate the contents of my bill on Monday, April 19. It was simply an error made through carelessness, although I fail to understand the motives that prompted him to make the statement at all.

However, permit me to say that I consider it a matter of carelessness and bad judgment when he with apparent pride informs us that the committee of which he is chairman "promptly tabled the bill."

There are millions of people in our country who believe that the name of Eugene V. Debs will go thundering down the ages after the name of every member of this Committee on Immigration will have long been forgotten.

Mr. BLANTON. Who believes that?

Mr. BERGER. Unless they are sent to the Smithsonian Institute or to the National Museum for careful preservation in denatured alcohol as a curiosity, because they were the men who promptly tabled the bill to restore all the rights and privileges of citizenship to Eugene V. Debs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the first request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in order to make the matter clear, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asked unanimous consent to correct the Record. It developed later that what he really desired to do was to change the Record. I made the point of order that a matter of correcting the Record is a matter of privilege and is not subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is right in that respect.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the matter of changing the Record does require unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington to change the Record? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER] asks why I made the statement to the House to the effect that the committee of which I am the chairman preemptorily tabled the joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin to restore the rights and privileges of citizenship to Eugene V. Debs. I made that statement because the mail of many Members and the mail of our committee is being flooded with letters and petitions asking Congress to restore his citizenship, and those requests are based on reports in socialist newspapers growing out of a statement which was contained apparently in a letter from Debs written from Bermuda to the effect, I think, that he might have trouble in getting back to the United States; that there might be a question as to his citizenship; which statement, even if it were made without knowledge of the law or with intent to deceive, has resulted in nearly all of these socialist papers except the one conducted by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER], a very good newspaper, the Leader, which tries harder than most newspapers to be truthful and correct, are claiming that Debs had lost his citizenship; that he is now out of the country on account of the health of his poor wife; that he and even she may not be permitted to return to the United States. It is all wrong to state that. It looks like an attempt to get more sympathy. If this joint resolution is to be considered at all, it should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Debs has lost no citizenship that can be restored by any legislation to be considered by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. He was never naturalized. The real place for Debs to go, if he wants to vote in Indiana and have certain privileges of a citizen restored there, is to the Executive department of the Government, where once he received a parole with certain conditions attached to the parole, which he, Debs, thinks he can not accept without stultifying his standing as a socialist, a pacifist, and a trouble maker in the United States. [Applause.]

PROHIBITION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to have the Clerk read in my time a letter addressed to me from the League of the Unorganized, which, in my opinion, is one of the richest pieces of sarcasm that has come to my notice since I have been a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIPLOMATIC DIVISION, LEAGUE OF THE UNORGANIZED,
Cleveland, Ohio, April 14, 1926.

Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are the greatest living experts on booze. We have devoted years to it. We have experienced acute ethylism frequently and hold many hospital certificates to that effect. We have sung in saloons. We have battled in barrooms.

The peace of Pilsener, the glow of gin, the glory of absinthe; we know them all. They are old and romantic friends. The Rubaiyat has been our book of common prayer; John Barleycorn our priest. Half the poetry of the world is about wine. The other half is about love and rivers and the moon.

Having thus won our simple way into your hearts with this brief preamble, let us say that Nero and Mary Magdalen were better qualified to discuss human conduct than John the Baptist and St. Sonia, of Esthonia. By the same token we believe we are the hard-boiled folks to push the cake eaters off the rostrum and say a word about booze if it is only to discuss the cost.

Though granting freely that the saloon is cheerier than the church, and caring not at all whether the bourgeoisie and wealthy peasantry of the country clubs drink to the point of halitosis and a red nose, we are quite concerned over the economic aspects of the modification movement led by Senator EDGE. Why not a modification of the seventh commandment, because a lot of folks step out? Senator EDGE may have gin in his cellar, but he knows no more about the general booze proposition than the Countess of Cathcart knows about the life of a street walker.

The eighteenth amendment is saving America—in cash expenditures and increased efficiency—from six to eight billion dollars a year and diverting them into Fords, gasoline, rubber tires, radios, plate glass, leather, steel, and homes—the Government statistics Brother Buckner got from a hasheesh eater at Forty-second Street notwithstanding.

Through conservatism and lack of personal experience in the serious effects of booze on efficiency some economists may make a somewhat lower estimate. But as experts on booze reactions we know our figures are accurate.

You could no more divert these six to eight billions from legitimate industry into beer and wine without economic disaster than you could divert the Gulf Stream without affecting the climate of England. It's beer money that's buying Fords. It's beer money that is operating them.

You have heard some querulous testimony from old folks with sluggish bowels and some damning figures from prospective saloon keepers. You have listened to some earnest labor leaders representing the views of only a noisy minority. Most of the unions are as conservative as bankers. You have seen painted the pastoral peace of the French peasant and his wine, the German and his beer, the Briton and his ale. This whole Freudian suggestion would have moved Houdini. But all Europe is unwashed and on foot. There are only seven plumbers in France and one Ford to a township.

The eighteenth amendment has put the workers of America on a higher living plane than the world has ever known. Conversation to the contrary is mere mental manipulation. What the big mongrel cities think is one thing. What American America thinks is another.

There is no mercy when incomes are affected. If you don't believe this, give EDGE a hand with his comedy, but stand from under.

Respectfully yours,

HAYWARD KENDALL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman's topic?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I am going to deny statements made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] making the charge which he made on Monday against a resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if I have five minutes in which to answer the reply, and I ask in that connection for permission to address the House for five minutes following the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes following the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I supposed this matter had now been carried from the floor of the House. Under the impeachment charges filed by the gentleman from Texas the matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not desire to prejudice the case of the accused in any way, but it did seem to me some time, somehow, the House as a whole might be rid of that proposition until further action—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. It is a matter that ought not to be discussed unless it is discussed on both sides, and I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order. The regular order is, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to speak for five minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall object—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object unless I am given five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been heard.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. There is no objection to the gentleman from Texas speaking for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. May I prefer a unanimous-consent request? I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes and that I be permitted to proceed for five minutes after—

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make this statement. The Chair is very much opposed to the practice of making the consent for one gentleman to address the House contingent on another consent. The Chair does not believe that to be a good practice.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order this is Calendar Wednesday and that we should proceed with the regular Calendar Wednesday business. I demand the regular order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I was not referring to Fenning. I was referring to Edward F. Colladay.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, is there objection to the gentleman from New York proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object to coupling up the two requests—

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, unless I can answer I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

When the Committee on Foreign Affairs was called,

LAKE OF THE WOODS

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9872) to carry into effect the provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods concluded on the 24th day of February, 1925.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the bill H. R. 9872. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and under the rule the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9872, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9872, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9872) to carry into effect provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods concluded on the 24th day of February, 1925.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888, the flowage easements up to elevation 1,064 sea-level datum upon all lands in the United States bordering on the Lake of the Woods and such lands or interests therein as are necessary to provide for protective works and measures in the United States along the shores of the Lake of the Woods and the banks of the Rainy River as specified in article 8 of the convention signed at Washington on the 24th of February, 1925, between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain providing for the regulation of the level of the Lake of the Woods.

SEC. 2. The protective works and measures provided for in article 8 of the convention, or such thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary for the protection of the property rights and interests of the inhabitants of the territory affected, shall be constructed or carried out under the direction of the Secretary of War, and all moneys which may be paid by the Government of Canada to the Government of the United States under article 10 of the convention are hereby appropriated and made available for expenditure by the Secretary of War for the construction of such works, and the carrying out of such measures, and for the acquisition of easements, lands, and interests therein as provided in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated as soon as practicable all just claims for damages caused prior to the acquisition of flowage easements under this act to the inhabitants of the United States by fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods due to artificial obstructions in outlets of said lake, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing to ascertain, determine, and award the annual loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by the respective claimants and to report to Congress for its consideration the amount or amounts he may find to be equitably due such claimants: Provided, That all claims not presented to the Secretary of War under this provision prior to the expiration of six months from the date of the passage of this act shall not be considered by him and shall be forever barred.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 10, insert: "In proceeding by condemnation for acquiring such flowage easements on any tract of land any benefit to the remainder of the tract or the property thereon derived from such easement shall be considered and damages shall be awarded accordingly."

Page 3, line 6, strike out the word "just."

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "to" and insert the word "shall."

Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "and award the annual" and insert the word "the."

Page 3, line 15, after the word "claimant," insert "together with a statement in each case of the substantial facts upon which the conclusion is based."

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much time the gentleman from Texas desires?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. We have an hour to a side.

Mr. PORTER. I thought we might cut that down.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. We will cut it down if we do not need the time.

Mr. PORTER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand I have the disposition of an hour's time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that each side has one hour's time. Does the gentleman from Texas claim the time?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I claim the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill is brought in to iron out an old situation on the Canadian border which has been troublesome to the American people living on the American side for many years.

The Lake of the Woods is a highly irregular body of water on the boundary between Minnesota and Canada. It is about a hundred miles wide and a hundred miles long, but there are several long irregular arms. The larger part of this lake is located across the line in Canada. It drains north via the Winnipeg River. The land along the sides of that lake have been a dense forest and marshland, largely uninhabited for many years and not thickly inhabited now.

Some years ago, beginning in 1893, as the record shows, certain corporations, power interests, operating on the Canadian side, built what is known as the Norman Dam in the Winnipeg River. That dam was completed two years later, in 1895, and in 1898 it was raised to a higher level, so that it would impound more water by putting in stock logs.

These dates have some bearing on the present controversy. The land prior to 1898 was unallotted Indian land, so far as the actual title was concerned, but there were very few Indian occupants, and some white settlers had moved in, taking physical occupation of the land by squatter's right, very much as they did in the Middle West in the early days. It was very shortly discovered that their lands were subject to floods at irregular intervals, and these farmers thought that the damming of the Winnipeg River by the Norman Dam caused the floods by raising the level of the waters of the lake.

They made complaints to Washington, and for a considerable time our Government engineers scouted the theory that the construction of the Norman Dam or the putting in of these stop logs a mile from the outlet of the lake did have the effect of raising the lake level.

In 1898 the land was formally opened to settlement, and those who had been previously occupying the land by squatter's rights acquired regular title under the land laws of the United States.

In 1909 we made a general treaty with Canada, or a treaty with Great Britain, on all matters concerning the Dominion Government in regard to the boundary waters, and under that treaty a commission was appointed to make a survey of boundary waters. That commission made extensive investigations and found that the building of the Norman Dam and the putting in of these stop logs did have the effect of raising the level of the Lake of the Woods. Many farmers had complained that in the growing season their crops have been ruined and even their improvements submerged.

At one period of this earlier history we insisted that the lake be kept not below a certain level in the interest of navigation. At other times we seemed to be concerned with the interests of the farmer. The matter dragged along from bad to worse, you might say, until finally, in order to straighten the whole thing up, our State Department arranged a meeting with the commissioners from the Dominion of Canada, and a new treaty was made which is known as the treaty of 1925. This bill is for the purpose of carrying that treaty into effect.

Now, that treaty provides that the level of the Lake of the Woods shall be maintained at a certain point; that the United States shall condemn land and acquire easements and flowage rights for 2 feet above that point for the purpose of protecting that level, that level being as high as any that had previously been complained of, and that protective works shall be built on the American side to prevent further damage from the increase of this flowage.

Canada has agreed by this treaty to pay the sum of $275,000 for the erection of these protective works and for the acquisition of flowage rights on lands under condemnation.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, unless it is inconvenient to the gentleman, may I ask him a question at that point?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. How much, if any, of that $275,000 goes to pay for damages that have accrued in the past?

Mr. VAILE. I will answer that in a moment. I am coming to that. I will say that none of that goes to damages that have accrued in the past. That $275,000 goes to protective works and for the acquisition of easements and flowage rights on land under condemnation, and Canada also agrees to pay half of any additional cost of such protective works and such condemnation above the sum of $275,000.

Now, further answering the question of the gentleman from Minnesota, in view of the fact that Canada was agreeing to pay all of that, it was decided by the commissioners to be fair, according to the statement of the Solicitor of the State Department, that the United States should take care of damages previously incurred by settlers along the sides of the Lake of the Woods, so that that burden, whatever it may be, will be borne by the United States, and the consideration for it is the payment made by Canada for those other works that I have mentioned.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As I understand, these dams are all on the Canadian side and they were all placed there by power interests or other interests.

Mr. VAILE. Well, by Canadian interests and operated under authority of the Dominion Government.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. As a result of placing these dams on the Canadian side the lands of American homesteaders have been flooded?

Mr. VAILE. Yes. But the gentleman should bear in mind also that we ourselves insist that the lake be maintained at the level now desired by both sides in the interest of navigation, so that we ourselves are now confirming the act of the builders of the dam in keeping up that level.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The point I should like to bring home, not only for this occasion but for future occasions, is this: That where dams of that character are permitted, which affect the lake levels and flood private property, damages ought to be paid by the interests which are benefited by it and not by the Federal Government.

Mr. VAILE. That is true, but in this case it was an adjustment of two sets of claims, if the gentleman please. In view of our own insistence that the level be maintained as at present fixed by the stop logs in the lake—something that we ourselves require in the interest of navigation and something which we have required, probably, ever since 1913—the responsibility for keeping up that level is not now entirely the fault of the people on the Canadian side. It is at the insistence of our own Government.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Since the treaty of 1925?

Mr. VAILE. Well, we insisted on it considerably before 1925; we insisted, indeed, as far back as 1913.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman believes that as a general proposition to control activities in the future this is a perfectly sound proposition.

Mr. VAILE. Unquestionably it is a sound proposition, that the damages should be paid by those who get the benefit of the operations. If the question were between citizens and their own sovereignty there never would have been any doubt about it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The reason I ask is that there is another proceeding pending before the International Joint Commission, before which testimony is being taken with reference to lake levels farther east of the Lake of the Woods, east of Rainy Lake, and that is the reason I asked the gentleman that question.

Mr. VAILE. In my opinion it is a perfectly sound proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. WEFALD. But that question is not now tied up with the Lake of the Woods proposition?

Mr. VAILE. As to the Lake of the Woods proposition both Governments have agreed to this level, and our own Government has insisted on this level since 1913.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Is our Government insisting upon a higher level than existed at the time the people who are affected acquired title?

Mr. VAILE. Well, yes; except that there may be a few who acquired title since 1913. I do not know as to that, as to all of these earlier settlers, those who squatted on the land prior to 1898 and those who came in after 1913.

Mr. HOCH. There can not be any damage to any property owner who acquired title after the level of the lake was fixed at the place we are now insisting it be kept? As to such owners, what element of damage could there be?

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman means as to those who acquired their title after 1913?

Mr. HOCH. At any time after the lake level was raised to the level we are now insisting it be kept.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman must bear in mind that for a considerable part of this period we insisted that the obstruction of the outlet of the lake did not have the actual physical effect of raising those lake levels, so that as to everybody who settled there prior to 1913 there was a misapprehension, caused by the attitude of our own engineers.

Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back eight minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very sorry I have not been able to bring myself in complete accord with the majority members of this committee. I was on the subcommittee which made a complete investigation of this matter, and the conclusions I have reached I feel I should state to this House.

I favor the amendments that are provided for in the bill which you have before you, but I shall insist that a time limit be placed in the bill. The only suggestion I have to make, with the adoption of these other amendments, is that there should be a time limit placed—that is, that the Secretary of War should not go back of the year 1913—and I will give you my reasons for so stating.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] has given you, in a general way, a history of this controversy, and I most respectfully ask your attention for a few minutes while I undertake to discuss this matter. It is not only a matter of serious importance to the claimants involved but it is a matter of great importance to the Government of the United States.

Under this bill there is no limitation as to how far the War Department is authorized to go back and determine damages, if any, to this property. You will note, from a reading of this bill, that it apparently goes back 50 or 100 years, but the facts are it goes back to 1898.

It was in 1898 that the Interior Department threw open this property to the public by order of the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary Bliss at that time, on the 5th of October, 1898. Please bear that in mind, gentlemen, because it is very material in considering the questions involved.

In 1898 and 1899 the dam which is complained of, the Norman Dam, was built on the Canadian side; and it is from that dam that they claim the land has been overflowed over the property of these people living in the United States.

In 1898 stop logs were placed in that dam, and bear in mind further, gentlemen, that since that date not a thing has been done; no changes have been made that would in any wise affect the overflow in the United States.

These people who are now asking for damages are people who entered this property at $1.25 an acre after the obstruction was placed on the other side or after the Norman Dam of which they complain. Under the general proposition then, going in there with their eyes open, taking up this land after the obstruction was in place and after the lands had been flooded now and then, how would they stand here and have the right to complain? If it had been the taking of the property you would have to resort to a technical construction of the law to give them any rights, because this is a concurring nuisance, and I admit that it is, because the land is not overflowed all the time. It varies from year to year, and some of the overflow would occur regardless of whether the dam was ever built on the far side.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has the United States ever committed any overt act of its own to cause these overflows, or has the United States simply given this permission to Canada?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The United States did this. The dams were built in 1893 and 1895, and the stop logs which raised this water were placed there in 1898, and the record shows they were purchased from the United States and that they paid $4,000 for the stop logs.

In 1902, in the rivers and harbors bill, they provided for the improvement for navigation purposes of Warroad Harbor and Warroad River, which is a part of this lake. In 1905 this Congress passed an appropriation of $35,000 for the improvement of navigation on the Lake of the Woods.

So, gentlemen, our Government was interested in maintaining the Lake of the Woods at a greater level than the Canadian Government was able to maintain it. They sent a letter to the Canadian Government in 1905 asking them to keep the Lake of the Woods at a higher level than the Canadian Government was able to do, on account of the navigation feature.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Then in answer to the gentleman from Oklahoma, the gentleman replies, and in fact insists, that our own Government is responsible and has been through all this period for the maintenance of the present high level of the Lake of the Woods.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I certainly do. Our Government is responsible for such maintenance in order to keep up the level on Lake of the Woods on account of navigation up to May 19, 1913. Which information was furnished me from the record by Mr. Hackworth, Solicitor for State Department, at which time our Government changed its position.

Mr. VAILE. I agree with the gentleman, and I just wanted to be sure the gentleman from Oklahoma understood that.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do agree with the gentleman and he agrees with me on that proposition.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it actual navigation or simply paper navigation?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have not been there; I do not know. There is 7.2-foot navigation.

Mr. CARSS. I will answer the gentleman from Oklahoma and say there is a great deal of navigation on the Lake of the Woods. It is a large body of water, much larger than Lake Erie.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Then the gentleman answers the question by saying there is actual navigation?

Mr. VAILE. But, of course, the towns are small.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] and myself agree on the proposition that the United States Government is responsible for and adopted the acts of Canada as their own acts in maintaining the Lake of the Woods up to 1913, and that was his statement here on the floor a while ago.

Mr. VAILE. If the gentleman will pardon me another moment—

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Except prior to 1911, we did not admit that the obstructions and dam caused the raising of the level.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is correct.

We have agreed on one proposition, then, gentlemen, and that is that the dams built on the Canadian side were a part of this Government's act, and the maintenance of that lake which caused this overflow was in accordance with the wishes of the United States for navigation purposes, and that continued until 1913. We agree on that fact also.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Where do you differ—explain that.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. One moment. Under the law as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States this Government is not responsible for the raising of lakes or rivers for navigation purposes, and your chairman, if he is called out on that proposition, knows as an actual fact that a lawsuit occurred at Pittsburgh deciding that question by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I have the citations here.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. One moment. Let me proceed further with this proposition, and then I will be glad to yield.

Let us see what that case decides. Injuries caused subsequent to the purchase of land—and this was bought and entered after 1898, after the dam was built—we have now an agreed statement of the facts, and—

Injuries caused subsequent to the purchase of land through the maintenance of dams constructed prior to purchase in the interest of navigation is now the question involved.

In Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson—listen, gentlemen, this decides the legal question after we have agreed upon the facts—in Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, Secretary of War, decided in 224 United States 605, and various other citations made by the Supreme Court of the United States that question is discussed. Let me read you just a few of the facts of that case because after they get away from the legal proposition they are going to say to you that while that is the law this is a question of equity. If it is a question of equity, should a man have any more right when he comes to Congress; should he have any more equitable right here than he would in a court of equity.

In 1858 suit was entered in Pennsylvania for the establishment of commissioners to ascertain and mark the line of high and low water. It was done. Subsequent to the establishment of the State commissioners' line a considerable portion of the shore of Brunots Island had washed away. The Government of the United States built a dam there which overflowed this property, and the property was afterwards sold, and the owner undertook through the court of equity to reclaim some of the overflowed land of Brunots Island to which he had had title. Of course if the doors of Congress are thrown open to pay these claims that you have sympathy for, the rules of equity would not control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PORTER. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to suggest this inquiry. The gentleman speaks of equity; does not that presuppose that the equitable claim must have some foundation in law, either common law or some other law, before the equitable rights arise?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; according to the rules that control equity proceedings. Now, I have various citations from the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The doctrine is that the owner takes the risk of the increase or diminution of his land by the action of the water applies as well to rivers that are strong and swift, to those that overflow their banks, and whether or not dikes and other defenses are necessary to keep the water within its proper limits.

So from an equitable standpoint and from a legal standpoint, upon that mere statement of fact that it was the United States that insisted on keeping up the dam until 1913, that I insist that this bill be so amended that we shall not go back further than 1913 for the determination of damages.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman refers to the owners prior to that time who bought with full notice of the conditions.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I refer to those. We ought not to go back further than 1913 for the reason that these people went in after the dam was completed that caused the overflow, and our Government was insisting that the Canadian Government keep it up to that level which caused it. Therefore, under the laws of this country and the equity doctrine our people would not have any right to claim damages until our Government changed its action, which they did in May, 1913.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman knows that where you can not get any relief in the courts either in equity or law that Congress is the only place you can come to.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The only reason you come to Congress is that you can not bring suit against the Government of the United States; but when you come to Congress, do you think that they ought to be entitled to any more rights than if they had the right to bring suit in a court of equity?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I understand the facts are that after 1898 there was a flooding of the land by reason of the dams on the Canadian side.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No question about that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And that being the case, why does the gentleman figure that the Government ought not to permit them to receive damages between 1898 and 1913?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have taken nearly 10 minutes to explain my position on that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Undoubtedly it is my fault that I do not understand it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. For this reason, the dam was built, and the Government of the United States acquiesced in it and asked the Canadian Government to keep up the level of the lake, which they failed to do. The reason they asked for it to be kept up was for navigation purposes. Now we have this decision that I have read in the Pennsylvania case. In other words, the Government has a right to build dams; and where the Government builds a dam which overflows the part of the island afterwards and afterwards they brought suit in the United States, the court held that it was for navigation purposes; they had no right in equity or law.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is based on the fact that the Government took action in 1913 and there was no legal obligation.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; and not in a court of equity.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman does not deny that the settlers living adjacent to the Lake of the Woods sustained damages prior to 1913?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No. Had the gentleman been listening he probably would have understood my position.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, but I tried to listen. There has been considerable confusion on the floor at times.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I stated time and again that we agreed on this statement of facts. The Lake of the Woods varies, so the proof before us shows, from two to three feet more than it did up to 1905 on account of the dam on the far side.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course the gentleman is aware of the fact that practically all of the people who are affected by this legislation are homesteaders living on land adjacent to the Lake of the Woods—people of very small means.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I understand that.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to hear the gentleman explain further why he feels that these poor people who sustained damage prior to 1913 should not have their day in Congress or their day in court?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I can not undertake to further explain that. I have gone over it two or three different times, and I have stated my position. If I can not make the gentleman understand, then I am sorry.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I take it the position of the gentleman and the position of Mr. Berkman, who was a witness before the committee, are diametrically opposed on that particular point?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That was the only difference in the committee and I want a limitation there to 1913. This bill does not stop there, but goes back to 1898.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The witness Berkman, who appeared before the committee, I believe, is counsel for some of the homesteaders.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; he is a lawyer for those people, and he has been fighting for them for years.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And as a result of his investigations of the law, as I understand it, he differs with the gentleman's interpretation of the law.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. And that is the reason I cited these various decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and if the gentleman doubts that opinion, I respectfully refer him to the gentleman who has taken the other side of this report, in so far as the legal proposition is concerned, the worthy chairman of this committee.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. We have not had an opportunity to go into those decisions.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That gentleman is on the floor, and if I do not quote him correctly as to the legal proposition, I ask him to rise and say so.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There is not any question but that these homesteaders were damaged prior to 1913.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And if there is any legal basis for allowing them damages, those damages certainly should be given. I have not had a chance to examine the authorities.

Mr. HOCH. While they were damaged, it is the gentleman's contention that they acquired the land with full notice of obstructions, and, therefore, they have no right to claim damages?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. And then on account of the legal proposition. They acquired the land, but as to whether they knew of the natural dam over there, I do not know.

Mr. VAILE. They did know that the dam was there, and did not know that the dam caused the damage. They knew that their land was overflowed.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And if the dam was illegally placed there, certainly any person who comes to the ownership of those riparian rights does not get them subject to an illegal obstruction placed there.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If that had been a taking of the property before they acquired the property, they would have had no rights.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. A lawful taking?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; or if it had been an unlawful taking, because the authorities bear out the contention that in the transfer of property that has been taken, the taking does not transfer the right to sue for trespass, but that question does not arise for this reason: This is a continuing trespass, so it would be immaterial as to whether or not these gentlemen went in before or after that particular proposition on the question of continuing trespass. Some years they would have no flood and they were able to till their soil, and other years they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Is it the contention of the gentleman that a cause of action for damages held by an owner of land passes with the title of the land?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I say that the cause of action does not, prior thereto, and I have various authorities on that point, but have not the time to read them.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is a fundamental principle of law.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Then no person other than those holding title to the land at the time the damage was done would have a meritorious case?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They would on this proposition. They would not have any claim if it was a taking. In other words, if the property was overflowed and that took the property, not only at that time would they have no right but if after they acquired possession of it, and this was an unlawful dam on the other side, and that was the cause of its overflowing now and then, that would not be a taking, but would be a continuing trespass, and in that case they would have a legal right.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In connection with the period from 1898 to 1905, I get the opinion from reading the hearings that the Solicitor of the State Department, Mr. Hackworth, felt that the damages occurring between 1898 and 1905—and I refer to page 106 of the hearings—the Government would be estopped from denying responsibilities for damages.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am coming to that just now.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So that the gentleman is in disagreement with the Solicitor of the State Department?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; and I am going to show the gentleman. The gentleman has not read that at all. One of the insistencies on the part of the committee is that this is a bill that is backed by the Secretary of State. In a way that is correct; but it is correct in this way, that the vital part of the bill is for the purpose of carrying out this agreement with Canada in reference to establishing the level of the lake and the condemnation proceedings which will follow to pay for the overflow.

Now in this hearing you will find this, and I will undertake to demonstrate that my position is more in accord with the State Department than the other gentlemen. On page 2 of the hearing you will find a letter signed by Frank E. Kellogg, Secretary of State. Mr. Hackworth, Solicitor of the State Department, is a man who is familiar with all the facts in this case, and was the man who came before the committee and gave information. He is the man who sat around the table and arranged the treaty of 1925, and doubtless this letter written by Mr. Kellogg or signed by Mr. Kellogg more than likely was dictated by the gentleman who has this matter in charge, Mr. Hackworth. The letter says:

This department is in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, which is to carry into effect certain provisions of the convention between Great Britain and the United States to regulate the level of the Lake of the Woods concluded February 24, 1925. In the opinion of the department the bill would, if enacted into law in its present form affect that purpose, and I should be glad to see it become a law.

He refers specifically to a greater portion of this bill. It is true later he offered some amendments to the bill. Now, going to Mr. Hackworth's statement, the gentleman who is familiar with it and see what he says of the way in which he would determine the legality. On page 106:

Mr. VAILE. You have one period from 1905 to 1917 and another period from 1917. How about the period before 1905?

Mr. HACKWORTH. I would say that up until we changed our position would be one period, 1912 to 1917; at some time during that period we changed our position.

When he changed his position, 1913, which is undisputed. That is what your Solicitor of the State Department says. Further on in his testimony he makes this statement; in other words, he divides this into two classes from 1898 to 1917, and puts in one class and later expresses his intent to put in the first class the date that they changed their position to be 1913. That is the first class, and that is my first class, so I say in reading the testimony of this Solicitor of the State Department you will find that I am more in accord with his views in the way of determining the damages than a majority of the committee's report.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will.

Mr. WEFALD. But is it not a fact that the Solicitor of the State Department came before the committee and supported the amended bill as reintroduced?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is true. He did support it by his testimony, if we conclude this testimony supports it; but the gentleman does not deny the statement that he did divide it into two statements, one to 1917, and later from 1912 to 1917, and the other since that date, meaning from 1898 to one of those dates. The correct date intended was 1913.

Mr. WEFALD. I shall not deny that statement; but I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that before he was through with his testimony he was unequivocally for the passage of this bill to carry into effect the machinery by which past damages could be awarded.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. In answer to what the gentleman says, before he got through with his testimony, in the last part of the testimony, on page 107, he uses this expression:

Mr. VAILE. Your position is that during the first period, whatever it was, we would have no claim as against Canada, and consequently could not urge claim of our settlers against Canada; but would not our settlers have a claim against us?

Mr. HACKWORTH. That is an entirely different question.

And that is a question that I have undertaken to show you they have no claim against this Government either from a legal or an equitable standpoint.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This is the significance of the date of 1905, because he says here:

Until 1905, at least, we thought that it was a good thing to keep the water up, and that to remove the stop logs would allow the water to recede, to our disadvantage. We had in mind primarily navigation. Under the circumstances this Government would, in my opinion, be estopped to claim damages.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I think he must have gotten mixed in his dates. Nineteen hundred and five is the time this Government requested the Canadian Government to keep up the water.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So it seems to me, from the testimony of Mr. Hackworth, it would appear as though there were a liability between 1898 and 1905.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. He says up to 1905 there was no liability.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. He said under the circumstances this Government would, in his opinion, be estopped.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Gentlemen, I shall not take up your time further. I merely give you my opinion, or rather conclusion, I have reached after a careful investigation of the matter.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. As I understand the proposition the dam referred to in the bill and in the gentleman's speech has been maintained by an agreement between the Federal Government and Canada, and that the lands in controversy have been acquired with a full knowledge of the circumstances of the construction of the dam and the effect on the land. Is that right?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Well, I would not say in actual agreement, but in acquiescence, because with full knowledge all I can say with reference to that is that the dams were built, and that these people entered the property afterwards. They have insisted through their lawyer that this dam was 95 miles across the lake, and they did not know anything about the dam when they entered the property. Of course, you may say that they had legal or constructive knowledge or due notice.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Does the doctrine of caveat emptor apply?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Absolutely. The doctrine of caveat emptor does apply.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. And the conclusion would be that there is no liability on the part of the Government to the land owner?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. At least until 1913. We changed our position.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I wish to refer to the question of navigation.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. The question was asked by me, page 43 of the hearings, "Just what commerce is on the lake and on the Winnipeg River?"

Mr. Berkman answered there is no commerce on the river and on the lake proper, some towing of logs and some commercial fishing. So it may be said there is no navigation on either the river or the lake. His statement, in effect, was:

On the Winnipeg River there is no commerce to speak of at all. Lake Winnipeg is distant about 90 miles from the Lake of the Woods. There is a fall of over 300 feet between those lakes.

I asked again—

They can not navigate?

He answered—

No navigation.

Then I asked the further question—

Whatever navigation there is is on the lake proper?

His answer was—

On the lake proper, some towing of logs and some commercial fishing.

I want to say that I am in hearty accord with the very able argument made by the gentleman, and will support his position in this matter.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I thank the gentleman.

I just want to make this statement regarding the flowage on the land. You must not get the impression that the flowage on the land was caused entirely by the construction of this dam. On page 4, Mr. Hackworth says:

If the lake be left in a state of nature, the freshets, of course, occur the same as under other conditions. The snows in the mountains melt and come down with the rains, and the outlets of the lake even in a state of nature are not sufficiently large to enable the water freely to pass on into the Winnipeg River.

Now, the dam on the Winnipeg River that is complained of is a mile below the outlet from the lake. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS], who just preceded me, makes an able argument, if you admit his premises. If you say that the facts as he understands them and as he set them forth here are the facts of the case, there is no answer to his argument. But the facts as he stated them are not, in my judgment, at all the facts in this case—that is, the vital, governing facts—nor is the law which he cited, many of the principles of which no one will deny, applicable to the facts involved in the bill before us.

Now, let us get a clear conception of the situation as it was when the settlers entered lands on the Lake of the Woods. The lake is on the boundary line between the United States and Canada, the greater part being in Canada. It is 100 miles in length and 100 miles in breadth, with long arms running off at irregular intervals into the country, and it was surrounded by a dense forest, so that to go around it was, and still is, a great journey. And, moreover, the Norman Dam was in Canada, more than 100 miles from where these settlers entered the land in the United States.

The gentleman from Tennessee said that the dam—the Norman Dam—which was a Canadian dam, remote from these lands of American settlers, raised the water 2 or 3 feet.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I would correct that in this way—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is important that it be corrected.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. On looking at that map you will see that up to 1905 the schedule filed shows from 2 to 3 feet, and from 1905 to 1914 from 4 to 5 feet.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman quotes me as a witness as to how much the dam elevated the water of that lake. But I never was nearer to the Lake of the Woods than a point 300 miles from it, and I never testified concerning it. I was simply asking a question, and I find that if the gentleman quoted me correctly I was mistaken in assuming in my question something as a fact which was not a fact. That is all. The real facts about this dam and its effect on the level of the water in the Lake of the Woods were definitely ascertained by the International Joint Commission, of which three members were appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate to meet with the three members appointed by the Canadian Government to adjust the boundary disputes between this country and Canada. That commission did a great deal of work, at large expense, and filed in 1917 a voluminous report, a copy of which I hold in my hand. That International Joint Commission consisted not only of Americans but also of Canadians, and they unanimously reported concerning the Norman Dam as follows. I quote from pages 17 and 18 of their official report:

Although the Rollerway Dam, constructed in 1887-88, was removed in 1899, the effect of the construction and maintenance of the Norman Dam upon the level of the Lake of the Woods was similar to that of the Rollerway Dam, but more marked, in that it maintained the mean lake level about 3.5 feet above what it would have been under natural conditions. The increase over the levels which would have prevailed with the outlets in a state of nature has varied from 0.9 foot in 1889 to 6.3 feet in 1913.

It will thus be seen that at intervals the Norman Dam raised the level of the lake more than 6 feet. And, of course, this 6-foot raising of the water at intervals causes damage to these lands.

Now, how did settlers buy that land? This important question is answered on page 58 of their report of the international commission:

At the time of the surveys, 1894 to 1896, the lake was, and for about seven years had been, considerably above its natural stage. The lowlands along the south shore were under water, and the meander line was evidently taken as the dividing line between open water on the one hand and willow brush or marsh grass on the other. This meander line is a considerable distance lakeward from the 1,059 contour, which we believe, as previously stated, fairly represents natural ordinary high-water mark. However, lands were patented to settlers on the basis of the acreage shown above the meander line, which was supposed to be ordinary high-water mark, and many of these settlers have suffered real damage in the past. In view of these considerations, the commission has recommended that the area of submerged lands be computed from the meander line.

The gentleman from Tennessee forgot that very important fact. The United States Government sold this land to these settlers on the basis of the acreage shown above the meander line, which the International Joint Commission found was the ordinary high-water mark, and "many of these settlers," says their report, "have suffered real damage in the past." How could one of those settlers, with perhaps only $5 or $10 in his pocket, and with his wife and little children by his side, go up into that forest and know that across the lake there was in Canada a dam, 105 miles distant, that deprived him of land to which he was entitled by the Government survey? And when you answer that question do not forget that until 1911 our own Government engineers maintained that the Norman Dam did not raise the level of the lake. They so declared in a report, and they thus made a mistake vital to the interest of these helpless settlers. It is time now that we see whether men can put up a dam like that in another country, deliberately flood the lands of our settlers, innocent purchasers who bought, relying upon the meander line as the boundary of their properties under the Government survey, and that, as my distinguished friend from Tennessee asserts, the settlers have no rights, either in law or in equity.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a fact that the water levels at times have been maintained as high as 10 feet above the meander line?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One of the witnesses testified to that fact.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not also a fact that scores of families have been driven out of this area and been compelled to leave everything they had behind them and lost everything as a result of the high levels maintained?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That, I believe, is true.

This official report of the international commission contains reproductions of photographs of lands bordering the lake. Here is one on page 30, a flooded farm on the south shore. Standing out there on the margin of the open water is a machine which that farmer had bought, and here is all of the foreground flooded, and, for agricultural purposes destroyed.

Mr. KNUTSON. And that killed the timber?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does kill timber; yes. That is the uncontradicted testimony. But these men bought to the meander line. They did not know that the Norman Dam was depriving them of property which they had bought under Government surveys. They could not go around through those woods for 105 miles, and, besides not knowing about the dam, there was no reason why they should go. Moreover, as I have already said, our Government engineers had mistakenly reported that the Norman Dam did not raise the level of the water in the lake, and they so held until 1911; then they learned that they were in error, or other engineers did.

Now, another statement has been made here which amazes me. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It has been stated that the Government of the United States asked that the water be raised to a certain height, 7.2 feet, and insisted upon its being kept at that height for navigation purposes. You have been given to understand that this Government insisted and insisted until 1913. Now, gentlemen, I shall read, with your permission, excerpts from the documents upon which that assertion is supposed to be based, and I will leave it to you as impartial jurors to say whether that is a correct statement and interpretation of the facts.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman states—I presume referring to a statement made by me—that I drew that inference, but I want to say I did like the gentleman is doing. The gentleman says he has gone to the original records, and I want to say that I went to the original records through Mr. Hackworth, and he told me the records showed that in 1913.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Hackworth is not the original record.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No; but he testified about the records.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Hackworth is talking about something of which he has no personal knowledge outside of the documents. I have the documents here. Mr. Francis B. Loomis, Assistant Secretary of State, wrote to His Majesty's chargé d'affaires in Washington on May 6, 1905—bear that year in mind—and said this—

There is understood to be much Canadian navigation on the lake, as well as several water-power companies at or near the aforesaid dam, which would be benefited by the maintenance of the lake at the highest possible datum.

You see, he was solicitous about Canadian navigation and Canadian water-power companies.

In view of this it is suggested by the Secretary of War, in his letter on this subject of the 26th ultimo, that an agreement might be reached with the Canadian authorities by which the dam could be so operated as to prevent the level of the lake from falling below the datum of 7.2 feet.

That was the suggestion made by the Secretary of War, that in the interest of the water-power companies near the aforesaid dam and of Canadian navigation it would be well to maintain the water at 7.2 feet. They say we—that is our Government—"insisted" upon that, and this despite the fact that this suggestion was at once refused compliance by the Canadian Government.

They refused to accept it. Why? Here is their letter written by R. P. Fairbairn, the chief engineer of public works, dated Toronto, June 20, 1906, in which he says in reply to this objection that we maintain it at 7.2 feet:

Several large industries would be seriously affected if it were attempted to hold the water of the Lake of the Woods to this elevation throughout the season of navigation.

Then he says:

The sawmill of the Rat Portage Lumber Co., in the town of Kenora, would be in constant danger of flooding.

Then, a little later this Canadian official says that the industries—that is the Canadian industries—using the water powers at the outlet of the lake would suffer because of the injuries which inevitably would be inflicted if the dam held the water up to 7.2 feet as suggested by our Assistant Secretary of State. The conclusion by two different officials is that—

Under the circumstances compliance with the request of the acting United States Secretary of State is not recommended.

They speak of it as a suggestion of the acting Secretary of State, and they at once say they will not accept it, and they say so in two or three or four letters, copies of which appear in the report of the hearings on the bill.

Not only are these letters of the Canadian officials sufficient to show that the suggestion of our Assistant Secretary of State resulted in nothing, and means absolutely nothing as respects the pending bill, but in addition to these letters of refusal there is a letter from our then Secretary of War, Taft, which is decisive beyond controversy on this question of our Government having insisted on a 7.2 level until 1913, as is contended by the gentleman from Tennessee.

War Department, Washington, April 21, 1906—

Less than a year after Assistant Secretary Loomis made his suggestion to the Canadian Government and they repudiated it, see what our own Secretary of War wrote to the Canadian Government and then see whether the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee that we "insisted" on 7.2 feet is correct or not.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 21, 1906.

SIR: The department duly received your letter of February 24 last, inclosing copies of correspondence with Hon. H. Steenerson, Representative in Congress from Minnesota, on the subject of the level of the water in the Lake of the Woods, in connection with damages which he states have been sustained by certain settlers for whose relief he proposed making provision by legislation.

Replying thereto, I beg to inform you that the War Department does not consider the present time favorable for pressing the request for action by the Dominion authorities toward maintaining the level of the Lake of the Woods at 7.2 on the Warroad gauge, as asked in previous correspondence on the subject, and refers now that the matter be not urged further on its initiative until brought up again by further developments.

Very respectfully,

W. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. WEFALD. I want to remind the gentleman that that letter was written just 20 years ago to-day, and justice which these people have been waiting for for 20 years ought to be granted them at the hands of this Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Gentlemen, I ask you if the statement that the United States Government—not Assistant Secretary Loomis, but our Government—asked for a 7.2-foot level and insisted upon it until 1913, is a correct statement of the facts?

A suggestion by an Assistant Secretary of State, never alluded to by the Canadian Government as the request of our Government but only as the request of the Assistant Secretary of State, and repudiated by them at once in official letters, and our own Secretary of War, writing only a few months later that we would not insist upon it, what, in view of this written evidence, becomes of the contention that we did insist for 9 or 10 years upon the maintenance of a 7.2 level, or that we "insisted" at all? Gentlemen will observe that the Canadian official refers to "the request of the Acting United States Secretary of State" and not to any request of the Government of the United States. And, gentlemen, do not forget that all of this time, up to the year 1911, our own engineers were mistakenly saying that that dam had not raised the level of the lake. And, in this connection, pardon me for repeating that the International joint commission of Canadians and Americans—mark that, Canadians and Americans—appointed by their respective Governments, unanimously found that the dam had raised the water level all the way from 0.9 of a foot to 6.3 feet.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Where can these people go for the redress of their wrongs unless we pass this bill? Does not this bill provide a forum into which they can go and present their claims?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is true.

Mr. PORTER. Is not the Government amply protected by the provisions of section 3, which provide that after the Secretary of War has made his finding of fact he shall report to Congress, together with a statement in each case of the substantial facts upon which the conclusion is based?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Under this bill the Secretary of War will take up each case, and I assume the facts in each case will be quite different. He reports his conclusions to the Congress. There is no authorization for the payment of the money until Congress has examined the facts and passed upon them, and the reason we put that in, I will say to the committee, is this: It is very difficult to ascertain the real facts, but the Secretary of War can take the facts in each case, form his conclusion, and report the amount due each property owner, where he believes there is anything due, and then the report comes back to Congress, and we have the power to examine the facts and reject the report or approve it, and that is the only way by which these pioneers can get relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] a question. The gentleman from Tennessee is not opposing the bill as it stands. The amendments that will be offered, I think, came from my suggestions in my minority report. I am not seeking to cut them off from having their rights determined, my only insistence is there ought to be a limitation.

Mr. PORTER. My answer to that is if you are going to delegate this power to the Secretary of War, why not let him take all the facts and apply the law to them and make his report. I do not think we are justified in saying arbitrarily here, in view of the meager facts before the committee, that he should not go back of 1913.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I know that is the gentleman's view, but the insistence I make is we have no legal right to go back further than that, and while the gentleman is on his feet and I have the chance to ask the question—I referred to the gentleman in my statement a while ago as to the law in reference to navigable streams. I just want to know if the gentleman is in accord with me on that legal proposition?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, entirely so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Every lawyer knows that if a farmer buys land in this country upon a stream and a man down below afterwards erects a dam and floods the farmer's land, he can abate the dam as a nuisance or collect damages or both. But he can not complain if the dam was built and flooded his land before he bought it. For he is bound to know all about the facts. There is nothing to prevent him ascertaining the facts. But that statement of the law is not applicable to these settlers, 105 miles from a dam that was the other side of a 100-mile lake, beyond a dense forest and in a foreign country, and unknown and inaccessible to them; and especially is it not applicable when we remember that they relied upon surveys by this Government, which gave them title to the meander line.

The gentleman's argument is correct if you will grant his premises. Anybody can make a sound argument if allowed to make his premises regardless of the facts and testimony. That is not difficult. I will admit that his statement as to the law is sound, but I deny that it is applicable to the facts in this case.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. Can the gentleman give us an estimate of what these damages are supposed to be?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Assistant Secretary of State said that he understood these would be about $50,000, a little less or not much more. The flowage easements and protective works are, under the treaty of 1925, to be paid for out of the Canadian treasury. They appropriated $275,000 for that purpose, and if the costs should be greater than that—and it is not thought that they will—the Government of the United States will bear one-half of everything in excess of $275,000.

Mr. ROMJUE. There has been some money paid by the Canadian Government to cover supposed damages?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not past damages. These people went there relying upon the Government survey to the meander line. Suppose the gentleman had gone up there when the lake was at a low level and did not know anything about the dam, and his title went to the meander line, and six months afterwards he were flooded with 6 feet of water. You knew nothing about the possibility of a 6-foot flood, and when it came you wondered what was the matter. Your own engineer told you that the dam in Canada, 105 miles away, did not cause it. But after a thorough investigation it should be found that your engineer was thoroughly mistaken, and that you are entitled to the land to the meander line and to damages for its being flooded, you would, in justice, be entitled to some remedy.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am not familiar with the terms of the treaty, but I assume that it obligates Canada to protect the American citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PORTER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Article 9 of the treaty of 1925 provides that—

The United States and the Dominion of Canada shall each on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may have heretofore resulted to it or to its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the levels of the Lake of the Woods or for the outflow therefrom.

Each shall likewise assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may hereafter result to it or to its inhabitants from the regulation of the level of Lake of the Woods.

The bill proposes to raise the water higher than it ever has been, so that there will be no trouble in the future.

Mr. WEFALD. Was there ever a time when the people could get into court?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Never a time when the settlers could go into court. The dam in Canada was raised whenever its owners pleased by putting in stop logs, and the settlers on this side were helpless and remediless. But at last our Government made the treaty of 1925 with the Canadian Government. Under the Constitution of the United States that treaty is the law of the land, and in my judgment this House and the Senate are in honor bound to pass this bill, which seeks properly to carry out its provisions and do justice to these settlers. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that I will not be interrupted and that no objection will be offered while I proceed to speak out of order. I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of the Congress raising the salaries of the Members of Congress and of Cabinet officers and others connected with the Government, and on other subjects.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, is the proposed extension of the gentleman to include the prohibition question?

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall refer briefly to prohibition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order and to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are men who selfishly seek to undermine Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress, Members who had the courage to raise salaries of Cabinet officers, Senators, Representatives, and lesser Government employees, so that each might receive a living wage. Congress alone, under the Constitution, has jurisdiction over this matter; no other authority can raise or lower them. In a few districts, not many, candidates who tacitly admit the patent fact that they are too feeble for the salary are eagerly reaching out to get it. They weep enough salty tears to turn the big wheel at a water mill over the "outrage," and are begging to be made the beneficiary of the very "outrage" they condemn. This is shallow demagoguery, bald inconsistency, pitiable and transparent political fraud. They are fooling nobody and disgusting everybody. The man who double deals like this is too small for a seat in the State legislature at $6 a day. The low self-appraisal of such men, affixing their own value far beneath the compensation they are striving to obtain for their services, is enough of itself to discredit and to defeat them.

Legislation to raise salaries originated in the Senate, not in the House, in the form of an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill. There was no roll call when the bill thus amended by the Senate passed. Any Member could, if he was false and cowardly enough, dodge the responsibility of admitting that he voted for the item.

If one of our noisy opponents, who pretends to be so indignant at our action, had been here in this crisis he would have been careful to note that enough were voting to insure the raise, he would have quietly voted no, and on pay day he would have exceeded the record of the swiftest greyhound alive to reach the paymaster ahead of those who voted aye. [Applause.]

My State is a great Commonwealth, filled with big people. Her senior Senator, after a quarter of a century of service, leads our party in the Senate. Mr. Oldfield, after almost 20 years in the House, is the party's whip. My district is as good as the best—full of generous, broad-minded men and women, and they want their Member to keep step with the choicest spirits here. They want him to bring his wife to Washington, to dress as well as the other Members, to live in a good hotel, to give his family the best advantages procurable, to save a modest competency, and to leave an estate to his children. Man's earning power wanes as he nears the end. He must "dig in" against the ceaseless bombardment of the days. There is nothing so pathetic as moneyless old age, and most public men die poor.

How small this pay is yet compared with salaries earned by lawyers, railway executives, doctors, editors, and heads of business enterprises. Darrow, defender of criminals, makes a quarter of a million. Specialists make $100 to $300 a day. Brisbane, Hearst's editor, gets close to a hundred thousand annually. Judge Gary, once starving on a meager public salary, is now paid by the Steel Trust a princely sum annually. Workmen in trades get from $6 to $15 a day, and some more than this, a better wage than Senators and Members are getting now when you count their heavy expenses, the cost of their campaigns, the income taxes they voted on themselves, and other taxes they are compelled to pay.

Aside from this, Members' salaries come out of the Federal Treasury and not from the pockets of the home taxpayers. Our districts will pay little, if any, of these salaries, but will be decidedly the gainer because most of the Members' salaries are spent or invested at home.

One party opposing me is distressed almost to death at the very thought of this salary which he is trying to grab. One would think from his clamorous complaints about the raise that his holy conscience would estop him from desiring this tainted money. He vigorously assails me, as if he had no merit to depend on for votes. There is nothing new, however, in his attitude in this respect. A pleasant or a generous word from him about me would be "so different" that it would cause him to lose his identity. His acquaintances would fail to recognize him, the change would be so violent. I knew a man once who was constantly drunk. One night he came home sober and his own dog bit him. If the critic mentioned should cease his fault finding for even a day his own watch dog would not recognize him.

Mr. Floyd, my predecessor, was in Congress when the salary was raised from $5,000 to $7,500. He informs me that not a single Senator or Member was defeated because of the raise. It will be that way this time.

The man who assesses himself as a weakling and poses as "cheap" usually is cheap. I am possessed of sufficient self-esteem to believe that I am worthy to sit with my colleagues, who represent no better people than I represent. These colleagues honor me as an equal and treat me as a friend. With proper modesty, I hope, I entertain and assert a decent opinion for myself and for my record. I have a contempt for a man who does not.

I love the red-blooded challenge that Marmion flung to Douglas when the latter insulted him and refused to take his hand. It was a worthy and a natural retort from a man whose blood and family had been belied.

Let us turn the searchlight of truth on this salary matter. When I was elected to Congress in 1914 the dollar in purchasing power was rated at 100 cents. Now it is worth about half that. The United States Department of Labor says officially that the cost of living expenses now is 70 per cent greater than in 1914. What cost a dollar in 1914 now costs $1.70. We all know this is true. Those of us who are voting to help the farmer know that his dollar in purchasing power is hardly half the value it was in 1914. The value of a dollar is determined by its purchasing power. So when I came to Congress I got $7,500 in purchasing power; now the $10,000 I get is worth a little over $6,000, almost $1,500 less than I got then.

Colonel Peel and Mr. Dinsmore, who represented our district, received a salary of five thousand per annum, but that would buy three times as much then as it would now. That salary in purchasing power—and that is the sole test—was a better salary in real value than the one I am getting now, and Mr. Floyd's salary of $7,500 was $1,500 better in purchasing power than the one I am now receiving. Money is fluctuating and unstable. The German mark, once worth 23 cents in gold all over the world, got so cheap that it took a lard can full to buy a cigar.

Judge J. H. Rogers, late a Federal judge at Fort Smith, served in Congress when the $5,000 salary was worth more than a $10,000 salary is now. He told a friend at the close of a long term here that when he quit Congress his savings amounted to a $20 gold piece. I have saved more than that, but many Members of good habits and no extravagant tastes save but little. Their expenses are enormous. Senator Berry, respected and loved by all of us, 20 years or more a United States Senator, left only a very modest estate. Certain papers have published a statement about the salary raise attributed to Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia. Below will be found a refutation by Mr. TUCKER himself. This appears on page 1444 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 4, 1926:

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, during the Christmas recess my attention was called to a newspaper article in which I was quoted, with respect to the increase of the salaries of Members of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to my colleagues, very many of whom I hold in the highest esteem, and for many of whom I have a warm personal affection, that I neither made nor authorized the statement attributed to me in the article referred to. [Applause.]

OTHER LIVE ISSUES

There are other matters pending. I introduced the following bill, which I am pressing for passage and which I have reason to believe will pass: "A bill to establish a fish hatchery" in the third district. The near-by hatcheries at Neosho and Mammoth Spring can not begin to supply fish for our streams. Northwest Arkansas is the garden spot of the Republic, a land of forest and field, orchard and mine, fertile valleys, and sun-crowned hills, the Switzerland of America. Her bold springs and clear streams furnish ideal water to breed and grow game fish. This "land of a million smiles" is attracting tourists from every part of the Nation. Help us to prepare for their recreation and entertainment. I have had pending for some time bills to erect Government post-office buildings in county seats and important towns, and consider it both an economical proposition and a sane expenditure of public money.

OUR ALIEN DEBTORS

Almost daily on this floor Members with a large contingent of foreign-born constituents are speaking or voting for measures designed to help foreign nations. I have opposed by speech and vote every gift to foreign nations. I have voted against every measure to forgive or to reduce debts due us from Europe. These are debts of honor, and every penny, principal and interest, must be paid. We have been asked to vote for a gift to Germany of $10,000,000 of the money of the American taxpayers for the purpose of relieving alleged distress there. It is unconstitutional and outrageous to thus vote away money which had better be either not collected or distributed to relieve distress and suffering in our own country.

I am voting against the approval of the Italian debt settlement reported by our Debt Commission. What does this settlement mean in detail? We loaned the Italian Government $1,000,000,000 of the money of the taxpayers of this country. This amount with accrued interest makes the debt now $2,042,000,000. For the first five years, or until 1930, no interest whatever is charged against the Italian debt or the Italian taxpayer, but $5,000,000 a year is paid for five years on principal. The next year $20,000,000, the next $19,000,000, and yet they are paying us only $5,000,000 a year, without any interest whatsoever. The next year they receive from Germany $32,000,000 and the fifth year $47,000,000. During this period of five years they pay us $25,000,000, and they get from German reparations a total of $134,000,000. From 1930 to 1940 they pay us one-eighth of 1 per cent interest; from 1950 to 1960, one-half of 1 per cent; from 1940 to 1950, one-fourth of 1 per cent; from 1960 to 1970, three-fourths of 1 per cent; and from 1970 to 1980, 1 per cent interest; and for the last seven years, 2 per cent interest. On the average that makes forty-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent interest they are paying us. This Italian settlement that I voted and spoke against, also the settlement with England and other foreign debtors, look to me like outrages against the American taxpayer. In fact, they are indefensible, inexcusable, colossal grand larcenies. [Applause.]

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION

We are too eager to neglect America and aid foreigners. I vote for all bills limiting foreign immigration. Let us stop this criminal and indiscriminate admission to our country of the scum of Europe. Keep out the foreigner and let our children and their descendants alone inherit and enjoy our advantages, our wonderful resources, and our superior civilization. [Applause.]

PUBLIC PARKS

The Battle of Prairie Grove was fought on December 7, 1862, between the Confederates under General Hindman and the Federals under Gen. F. J. Herron and Gen. J. G. Blunt. Early on the day of battle Hindman with 11,000 moved against Herron. The Confederate cavalry first had the advantage, gallantly driving the Union troops. Herron's entire force then came up and Blunt hastened to Herron's aid. The Federals were superior in numbers and equipment. The battle lasted the greater part of the day. The Confederates fought bravely, as they always did, but finally retreated. The losses on both sides exceeded 2,400.

On March 6 to 8, 1862, the severe and bloody Battle of Pea Ridge, or Elk Horn Tavern, was fought. Gen. R. S. Curtis commanding the Union forces and Gen. Earl Van Dorn commanding the Confederates. The casualties on both sides were heavy.

I had relatives on the side of the South in both battles and personally knew many of the brave men and officers participating in these bloody encounters. They fought well and came home after the war and honored themselves and their country in peace as they had in war.

I believe this great Government should recognize the brave men who fought on either side in these great battles by building suitable monuments—say statues of peace or some appropriate memorials—and should permanently improve, beautify, enlarge if desirable, acquire more acreage, and establish and help by annual appropriations to keep in repair and to care for these parks as the Government is doing in other places.

This Pea Ridge bill I argued before a special subcommittee, asking for a favorable report on same. They unanimously reported the bill favorably to the full committee. I then appeared before the full Committee on Military Affairs, and they unanimously reported the bill favorably to the House. There is no doubt, I think, of the final passage of this bill.

I am also insisting on the passage of a bill appropriating Federal money for the improvement and maintenance of the Field Kindley Park, at Gravette. Field Kindley, 24 years of age, a relative of my college mate and friend Bob Kindley, was the second American ace in the airplane fighting during the late war. This brave stripling, after a glorious record in France, met his death in Texas in an airplane accident. America will honor herself by honoring him in the way I propose. I hope to get appropriations for the Prairie Grove, the Pea Ridge, and the Field Kindley Parks. At least, I am doing all I can to that end.

FEDERAL INHERITANCE TAXES

If we are to halt the growth of overgrown estates, if we are ever to distribute wealth among the people and prevent it from accumulating in the hands of the favored few, we must not repeal the Federal inheritance tax. I voted for this tax as an emergency measure, and I voted against its repeal this time. The tax is democratic, has been held legal by the highest court, and can not be evaded or passed down to others. It will reduce other taxes. It reaches huge estates not earned by those who beired them, and is not so burdensome. It seems just and fair. The great moneyed interests organized what they call the Bankers' League to defeat this tax. This outfit has been spending money to hire lobbyists to work for the repeal of this measure, and this crowd has been endeavoring to get out opposition to Members who are known to favor the retention of this just tax.

The speaker of the last Arkansas Legislature, Tom Hill, much indicted, and Senator Pete McCall, the Lieutenant governor, who illegally pardoned several big criminals while the governor was out of the State, came to Washington, occupied elegant hotel quarters here—paid for by some one else—and spent much time lobbying for the repeal of the inheritance tax. Hill and McCall invited several members of the late legislature to come to Little Rock—their expenses paid not by themselves—to pass a resolution for the repeal of this tax. Another member of the same extravagant legislature, opposing me, in a statement published on November 6 said:

I am in favor of repealing the inheritance tax law outright, because there is not anything fair about it.

This position is antagonistic to the wishes and to the interests of 99 per cent of our small taxpayers. If this tax is repealed, the wealthy men will move to Florida, where the State constitution expressly prohibits the payment of a State inheritance tax, and in this way big wealth will escape the payment of any inheritance tax whatever. Somebody must pay taxes. The Bankers' League and Hill, McCall, and company want to exempt the big taxpayers and make the little fellow do all the paying. Arkansas pays only one-eighth of 1 per cent of Federal inheritance taxes, and yet the people I have mentioned want to exempt 99½ per cent of the wealthy people of America, who beired but did not earn these big estates. Thirteen Southern States pay less than 6¼ per cent of this tax, and New York pays five times as much as all these 13 Southern States. Why are Hill, McCall, and company so much interested in relieving New York of this tax? It is difficult anyway to collect taxes off of great wealth, it is difficult to put your finger on their money; but the man who owns a farm in the third district of Arkansas can not conceal it, and must pay State tax, county tax, road tax, and many other species of taxes on his farm, and the people that I have mentioned above are not yearning to relieve him of these many different kinds of taxes; but, they say: "I am in favor of repealing the inheritance tax law outright. There is not anything fair about it." How careless they are about the many kinds of taxes the farmer pays, not asking for the repeal of same, but how solicitous they are about wanting Congress to repeal this Federal inheritance tax which the wealthy sons of wealthy men are asked to pay in moderation into the Federal Treasury. Why are they solicitous about this 99½ per cent of our people who do not live in Arkansas? There is no fairer or juster tax than this Federal inheritance tax. Henry Ford sells thousands of cars in Arkansas and in other States, but neither he nor his family live in Arkansas, and why should not his son, Edsel, who will inherit this great wealth, pay a small part of it into the Federal Treasury, thereby relieving us of other taxes, when the State of Arkansas, where much of this money was made, can not reach it by State inheritance tax, because the Fords will not live or die in Arkansas. A Congressman or a candidate for Congress who will advocate the repeal of this just tax, paid almost entirely by great wealth in the favored centers of population, should not carry a single township in the third district of Arkansas.

LETTERS AND TESTIMONIALS

It is legitimate to print and set forth a few letters and clippings bearing upon my attitude and activities on public questions:

TILLMAN HAS RARE EXPERIENCE

As a member of the House Judiciary Committee, Representative JOHN N. TILLMAN, of Arkansas, had the unusual and interesting experience Tuesday of hearing arguments . . . by both John W. Davis and Charles E. Hughes. Each has been president of the American Bar Association. Each has been nominated by his party for the Presidency of the United States, and each has been defeated. . . . This was a rare and most interesting experience.—Southwest American.

COMPLIMENTING THREE ARKANSAS CONGRESSMEN

J. S. Parks, who writes a column every day for the Fort Smith Southwest American, recently paid the following tribute to three Arkansas Congressmen:

The initials T.-W.-O. might stand for a lot of things. Omit the periods and the spacing and they spell "two." As a matter of fact those initials represent three of the biggest men in Congress. What is more, they are all from Arkansas. TILLMAN, of Fayetteville, an outstanding member of the Judiciary Committee; WINGO, of De Queen, ranking member of the Committee on Banks and Banking; OLDFIELD, of Batesville, an active member of the powerful Ways and Means Committee.

It isn't often you find three Members of Congress from one State and adjoining districts so unusually recognized with important committee assignments as those given to TILLMAN, WINGO, and OLDFIELD. I never expect to go to Congress, but should fate ever ordain that I was to become a Member of it, I could conceive of no higher honor being bestowed upon me than being selected as a member of one of those three committees.

Being placed upon such committeeship would be indicative that I had been carefully analyzed as to ability and integrity and had been chosen because of real worth to serve in such capacity. Arkansas has a reason to be proud of T.-W.-O.

The districts which those three Congressmen represented should feel they had been signally fortunate in having selected men of such high caliber to represent them in the national legislative halls.

HOW MONEY IS WASTED—DAILY EXCHANGE

TILLMAN, of Arkansas, assailed the verdict in the Mitchell case, and MADDEN, of Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, made this contribution, showing the way the public funds are squandered by the militarists.

"While we have appropriated over $100,000,000 a year for aviation since the war," said MADDEN, "we have not a thing to show for it."

TILLMAN submitted the testimony of his own son who served with distinction in France.

The boy reported to his father that, despite the immense sums appropriated for aviation during the war, American flyers were compelled "to rely upon second-hand and discredited planes that the French had sold to us, or the English had sold to us, and they were so unsafe that they were branded as 'flaming coffins.'"

Arkansas can produce plenty of candidates for governor. It would be a mistake to sacrifice an excellent Congressman and plunge him into State politics.—Southwest American.

THE JAMES B. OSWALD CO.,
GENERAL INSURANCE,
519 HIPPODROME BUILDING,
Cleveland, Ohio, March 23, 1926.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN TILLMAN: I can not imagine who was so thoughtful as to place me on your mailing list—Wayne Wheeler, I guess—for a copy of your speech on wet investigation, of the 26th February. But whoever did so was a friend of mine.

I do not know you from Adam; I do not know whether you are Republican or Democrat, although your section indicates the latter, yet I am for you. You may be a Protestant or Catholic, Jew or Gentile, but still I am for TILLMAN. * * *

I wish your speech might be placed in the hands of thousands and thousands over this land of ours. It hits the bull's-eye. * * *

* * * While I am a Republican in name, I am for TILLMAN. Success to you. * * * I like and admire some of you "fire-eating" Democrats with all of my soul.

* * * If I lived in your district, I would be for you, Democrat as you are. I would stand for any man who had the courage you have shown. If I lived in the South, I am sure I would frequently vote the Democratic ticket, for I have sense enough to know that the best and ablest men of the South are of the Democratic Party. It is a matter of self-protection. Yes; I surely would try and prevent my party from opposing a real, honest to God, genuine American, though he appear on the Democratic ticket, especially if he were one brave enough to entertain your sentiments and fearless enough to express them, as you have done. TILLMAN, I am for you, and that is all there is to it. * * * I glory in men of your type, be they Republicans or Democrats.

I am not hidebound on this political-affiliation stuff. I vote for men. * * * It is somewhat different with you men down South, for you have to contend with the damnable problem of keeping down that element who try to capitalize a certain race, and these profiteers down there are mostly carpet-bagger Republicans. I do not blame you fellows one bit. You are forced to be Democrats. * * * I wish we had many Republicans up North who had courage enough to come out as openly and bravely for the right as you have done. All right, my friend, you and I will go hand and hand for the Constitution. I wish you Democrats would stand for as loose a construction of the Federal Constitution as I do. * * *

Good luck to you. * * * I will watch the Arkansas election with interest, for it is my hope and prayer that JOHN N. TILLMAN be returned. I know you will be. Keep me posted.

Sincerely,

W. G. OSWALD.

RED OAK, OKLA., March 25, 1926.

Hon. JOHN N. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: This letter will no doubt be a surprise to you, especially as I have never met you.

I have just concluded reading in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD your eulogy of the South and its peerless leaders in the sixties. Of course, busy as you must be, you find very little time for such sentiment as this letter expresses; nevertheless, I want to add my congratulations to those that I know are coming to you for this splendid speech. You defended every one of us whose grandfathers wore the gray. I thank you.

Both my grandfathers served the South; one with Lee in Virginia; the other, Augustus H. Garland, in the Confederate Congress.

Sincerely yours,

R. C. GARLAND.

The national legislative bureau of the organizations committed to the interests of the working people of America recently wrote me the following letter:

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE AND INFORMATION BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1926.

Hon. JOHN N. TILLMAN,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: As the time for the nomination and election of Members of Congress is approaching, and the voters in the third congressional district of Arkansas will cast their votes in the selection of a Congressman to represent them in the Seventieth Congress, the undersigned desire to state that throughout your six terms of service in the United States House of Representatives we have always found you to be a consistent friend of those who toil in whatever field, ready and willing at all time to work, speak, and vote in support of legislation beneficial to the people in general, and just as ready to oppose legislation framed for the benefit of special interests and against the masses. The record of your votes on measures of importance to the workers, compiled from the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and kept in the office of this bureau, shows your votes on these measures to be 100 per cent in favor of the interests of the people and we have no hesitancy in saying that the voters in your district will make no mistake in returning you to the position you have so ably and impartially filled for six successive terms. You may make such use of this statement as in your judgment you may see fit.

THE BIG ISSUE

Those who propose to stand by the Constitution of our country and the proper enforcement of our laws are now engaged in a struggle to the death with those who propose to nullify the Constitution as far as the eighteenth amendment is concerned and discourage or defy dry law enforcement. Under which flag will you fight, neighbor? As for me and my house, you know where we will fight. There I have fought for 30 years, and I shall not change. [Applause.]

Men and women, do you know how strong, how sinister, and how desperate the wet forces are? They have big bags of money and expert political fixers to be used in desperate efforts to defeat 200 of us who have had the courage to make a consistent fight against that beverage that demoralizes everybody it touches from the time it issues from the source where it is brewed until it empties into the hell of death, dishonor, and crime. Let me caution you, voters. This force of evil is stronger than you think. Gentry is one of the clean, beautiful towns of our district, and yet I have a letter from a man who lives near there in which he says:

I favor wide-open saloons. My father fought against the South under the American flag that America might be free. The Constitution of the United States declared it should be a free country. The Volstead law has deprived the masses of their freedom.

Now, what do you think of that? There never was but one man entirely free to do as he pleased, and Adam's freedom did not last long. I think liberty is respect for the law. Certainly liberty is directly opposed to license. I have a little granddaughter 4 years old. She is not at all in favor of strict enforcement. She is strong for personal liberty. And yet I know it is best for her to be governed by strict rules curtailing her personal liberty. A man might enjoy personal liberty in the jungle by himself, but there a lion or a snake might get him. Is it not better for children to be compelled to go to school, to be neat, and to acquire good habits? The Lord never did a greater kindness than when he promulgated the ten commandments, which drastically curtailed our personal liberties. And is it not wholesome to protect men from evil contact with that drink which burns up men, consumes women, curses God, and denies heaven? The United States has never yet surrendered to an enemy, and liquor is our enemy. The wets have raised the red flag of Treason.

I am depending on the men and women of the third district to help fight this giant evil. And when it comes to a fight of this kind the women always wield a shining lance. Kipling says they are deadlier than the men in a scrap of any kind. This reminds me of a story:

A traveler, passing by a neat farm home by the side of the road, saw an immense wild cat jump through an open window into the house. He saw the man of the house working a short distance away and rode rapidly to him, and said to him: "Mister, I just passed your house up there and I saw an ugly, vicious wild cat jump through an open window into your home. Now, for heaven's sake, run up there and prevent that dangerous animal from killing your wife." The farmer, with some deliberation, said: "Did anybody seem to force that wild cat to jump through the window, or did he seem to do so of his own accord?" "Nobody seemed to force him to go in," said the stranger. "Well," said the farmer, "if that fool wild cat went in there to fight my wife of his own accord, he can just take what's coming to him. I'll be durned if I'm going up there to save him." [Laughter and applause.]

Liquor and women do not mix. All hail and respectful greetings to the women. [Applause.]

TAX REDUCTION

This Congress has reduced taxes close to four hundred million annually. While much of this came from off of men of wealth, it is a well-known fact that taxes are always passed down to the ultimate consumer, so in a way everybody's taxes have been lightened. Some members of State legislatures are worrying about congressional extravagances. The last Legislature of the State of Arkansas was the most extravagant in the history of the State. It authorized a hold-over committee to stay in the capital after adjournment to complete the recording of the few bills they passed, and this committee, well paid for doing very little, was composed of 93 persons—16 senators and 32 senate employees, 17 representatives and 28 house employees—at enormous cost to the taxpayers. And yet some of these members of this late-lamented legislature still worrying about congressional extravagance, lobby in favor of wealthy heirs, seeking to relieve them from the payment of proper and just inheritance taxes.

A GOOD WORD FOR CONGRESS

Members of Congress are worthy and respectable. They are here at their post of duty at great expense, and all trying to do good work. It is to be regretted that while they are so engaged there are those striving to displace them by bootlegging small, personal charges that should not be tolerated by fair-minded people. Personally, I believe it is best to let the people themselves properly rebuke unfair methods and personal political back-stabbing. This is what they will do in the third district of our good State.

THIRD ARKANSAS DISTRICT

I sing the Ozarks. There my home is. I want to paint a picture of this favored land. While we have cotton and zinc, ours is a great fruit section. Welch, the grape-juice man, has established his southwestern factory at Springdale in my home county. The apple-blossom celebration at Rogers, and the grape festival at Springdale are witnessed annually by 30,000 people. We grow strawberries that would cause a Grecian goddess to promptly accept in lieu of an offering of ambrosia and nectar. We produce Grimes Golden apples as yellow as much fine gold. Pomona, goddess of fruit, would be charmed with our grapes, purple as the royal robes of King Solomon, and with our winesaps, red as the blood of a lordly viking. Mr. Chief Justice Taft, while in Fayetteville some years ago, was given a home-grown Delicious apple, and after smiling and indulging in one of those guttural Taft chuckles, testified that it had a more delicate flavor than the Delicious apple grown in Oregon. Ours is a land of peaches and cream, of violet skies and golden Indian summers; a land rich in blossoms and fruit, with a climate ideal. Florida's boom is waning, and the next development on a similar scale will be in the Ozarks. [Applause.]

Recently I had the honor to interview President Coolidge at the White House, and representing the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce I invited him to spend his summer vacation in one of the stately colonial homes located in Fayetteville. The President received the invitation graciously, considered the matter seriously for a few days, decided that he could not get so far away from the Capital, but expressed himself as wanting to visit this section some time in the future. Fayetteville is one of the many important towns in my district.

The State university is located here, as well as the Southwestern Methodist Assembly, the summer home of 750,000 Southern Methodists. I invite all my colleagues to visit the third district. It is a land of enchantment and variety; here a stately country home, there a big plantation with its broad, fat acres, laughing under a harvest of fruit, of vegetables, of meadow, of grain. The mocking bird sings until midnight among the pink peach blooms and the white pear blossoms. Here is a fragrant pine; there a virile white oak; there a branching elm; there a stately mountain range; there a rippling stream of liquid silver; there by the roadside a bubbling spring, ever holding up its pouting lips to be kissed by the thirsty traveler. [Applause.]

This is the country in which I live; this is the country I love. I have always attempted during my rather long official career to improve conditions there and to make it a better place for my children and the children of my friends. I believe it to be the duty of man to work for posterity, as well as for himself. When I embark on "the unknown sea for the unknown shore" I want my life work to show something of the unselfish sentiment and constructive efforts of the man whose story is contained in the verses copied below:

An old man, travelling a lone highway,
Came at the evening, cold and gray,
To a chasm deep and wide;
The old man crossed in the twilight dim;
The sullen stream had no fears for him.
But he turned when safe on the other side
And built a bridge to span the tide.
"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You are wasting your strength in building here;
Your journey will end with the ending day;
You never again will pass this way;
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide,
Why build you the bridge at eventide?"
The builder lifted his old gray head,
"Good friend, in the path I've come," he said,
"There followeth after me to-day
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm that was naught to me
To that fair youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim;
Good friend, I am building the bridge for him."

[Applause.]

During the years that have flown by with the swiftness of a swallow's wing, I have tried to march forward and to look upward and to build safe bridges for the young who follow. I have made mistakes and committed blunders as others have. But, in passing on toward the sunset, I have always sounded a note of optimism. I have always encouraged our people not to sing hymns of hate, but songs of friendship and good cheer; to strike only the chords of harmony and play victory airs only on the golden harp of progress. I hope never to see this harp hung on the willows, to be heard no more. Never do I want to hear the sad lines of one of the world's great poets, uttered as actually applying to the hills and valleys of our beloved State.

The harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul were fled.

[Applause.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not propose to consume very much of your time; in fact, I have grave doubt whether I ought to consume any of it. As a member of the committee I have given very careful consideration to this bill. I was in sympathy with the legal questions that have been raised and that have been discussed. They were interesting questions, interesting to lawyers, and worthy of the full consideration that has been given to them. I want to say in passing that I think the committee and the House are greatly indebted to the efforts of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS], and that somewhere along the line, though perhaps not now, his painstaking work and the learning he has brought to it will be of much advantage to the House. I think the bill ought to pass. Section 1 and section 2 involve and effectuate the provisions of an international treaty. As for the third section about which so much talking has revolved, if it were stricken out entirely still the bill ought to pass.

The third section relates simply to the claims of those "inhabitants of the United States," settlers, on those lands along the banks of the Lake of the Woods in the State of Minnesota. Those settlers should have their day in court. They have not had it. There is no other forum to which they can repair, except this forum. They ought to be given the opportunity to come into the tribunal by this bill provided and prove their claims, making full showing of the nature of them, when they arose, and, so far as time is important, to show the time when they accrued.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. If this were a private matter, a dam built in the United States, these settlers would be permitted to go into court and claim their rights.

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly; at least such right ought to be accorded.

Mr. EVANS. There ought to be some forum to which they can resort, and I do not see why there is any objection to the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. There is some doubt, a good deal of doubt, I think, upon the validity of the claims of some of those settlers. Some settled at a time and under circumstances which would give them no legal standing. Now, have we provided for that in this bill. They shall come in, prove up their claims, and then that the Secretary of War shall bring to Congress a full statement of what has been proved and the legal or equitable foundations of the claims that may be proved.

Mr. VAILE. In each particular case.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes; in each particular case. When that is done, we are not going to be prejudiced, and if the law of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] is applicable, we will apply it. If the facts of a given case fall outside of the facts upon which these cases which he has cited were based, we will consider them and adjudge them on their merits. I have a great deal of sympathy for these settlers. I think this bill ought to pass.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I once asked a justice of the Supreme Court what he considered is most important at the outset of an argument before that tribunal. He said he thought the first thing the lawyer should do is to present sharply the question at issue, and I shall try to do that. Here is a bill that does nothing more than provide that a certain group of claims shall be referred to the Secretary of War for investigation, and that the Secretary shall investigate the facts and the law that is applicable and report back in each case, giving the substantial facts and the conclusions that he deduces from those facts. There is no provision in the bill that undertakes to prejudge the claims with reference to the time when they arose or with reference to any other feature or detail.

That in substance is the bill. On the other hand, my esteemed friend from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] raises the point that the Secretary of War should be instructed not to deal with claims antedating 1913, and place him under a restriction to that extent.

The gentleman from Tennessee has made a very exhaustive examination of the law and a very illuminating report as a member of the subcommittee. I am strongly inclined to believe that he is correct in the view that he has arrived at, namely, that claims that arose prior to 1913 ought not to be allowed, but nevertheless, whether that view is correct or incorrect, the Secretary of War can investigate all of the claims, give us all that can be found relative to each one of them, and tell us what in each case his conclusion is, and then we can determine what to do with the several claims.

A Member of this House performing such a task as the gentleman from Tennessee has performed, gets very little credit for it, but I am convinced that his report will prove of very great value to the Secretary of War, and will prove of very great value to the House when the Secretary submits his findings.

In order that there may be no prejudgment, I am going to express the hope to my distinguished colleague, Mr. McREYNOLDS, that he refrain from offering any amendment and allow this bill to be passed in the shape in which it is offered, with the field of inquiry and adjudication left entirely free to the Secretary of War and thereafter to the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, and I think it would be very helpful not only to the Members of the House but to others if the report, which has not been made public and available, were printed in the Record so it will be available.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think the gentleman would be performing a service should he make a motion to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman from Virginia please inform the House why he thinks that no claim should be heard which originated prior to 1913?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think, summarizing the views of the gentleman from Tennessee, that there was no governmental action prior to that time on which any claim can equitably be based. But as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I wish to keep my mind open upon that question and upon all other questions we will have to deal with hereafter, and I think it is unprofitable to consider the particular question about which the gentleman interrogates me.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the gentleman said that he was of the opinion that no claim should be permitted which originated prior to 1913, and I merely ask for the facts upon which he based that statement.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In brief I do not think the Government of the United States had taken any attitude up to that time which justified any landowner in asserting a claim against the Government because of any alleged delinquency of the Government.

The mere circumstance that a landowner lived remote from any Government agency prior to that time and was damaged, and did not receive information from the Government as to what was going on or not going on, does not furnish a sufficient basis for a claim.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question? Suppose a man bought land when the water was low. Government titles went to the meander line, that is the report of the International Joint Commission, and he bought, as he supposed, to that line, the ordinary high-water mark. Six months later the water rose 6.3 inches, and suppose that this happened in 1904 and 1905. Ought he to have his claim allowed?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think that the Government in any deed that it makes, and I do not know the character of the conveyances referred to, warrants a title or places itself under any such obligation as the gentleman from Wisconsin assumes. But aside from all of that, I think the best thing is to pass this bill in its present form, and I trust that the suggestion I have offered may be accepted by my friend from Tennessee. [Applause.]

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make any more fight out of this or to endanger the passage of the bill, and if the bill is passed as amended that will give us an opportunity to further test these questions. While I think I am clearly right in my legal contention, if there are any differences they can be adjusted at a later date when it comes back.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD].

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there is no man in this House who appreciates how much work the gentleman from Tennessee has done in connection with this Lake of the Woods matter as I do, and I know that he has done a lot of work on this proposition. I am one of the men in this House who was very, very anxious about whether this bill was going to pass in the form it was written and introduced, and I have had occasion to call upon the gentleman from Tennessee time and again to see what light he had on the subject, and what he was going to do when it came upon the floor of the House, and there was no time I came to see him except he was working, and I know now when this matter comes back again to Congress for final adjustment that the old pioneer settlers in the Lake of the Woods country are going to have no better friend in this Congress, and there is going to be no man here who will more carefully look after their interests than he will, because, as has been said here to-day, he understands the situation now better than any other man here. I do not want to delay this discussion any further. I just briefly want to touch upon one question that has caused most of the dispute in this matter, the fact that the United States Government several times had appealed to the Canadian Government and asked them to keep up the water level in the lake on account of the benefit to navigation.

The bill that is now before you, H. R. 9872, took 20 years to reach Congress, but to-day it is before you, as I understand, with the nearly unanimous approval of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the distinguished members of which have held extensive hearings on it and analyzed every phase of the question that the bill deals with. The bill was drawn by our State Department and it has the full indorsement of that department. This bill is to set up the machinery by which a treaty concluded between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain on the 24th day of February, 1925, and published by the President on the 17th day of July of the same year, is to be carried into effect. The treaty deals with the water levels on the Lake of the Woods and the regulation of the same. This bill sets up the machinery by which flowage easements are to be acquired and by which may be ascertained the damages suffered by the riparian owners, practically all farmers, due to flooding in past years owing to the artificial regulation of the water level in the lake.

Lake of the Woods is the northernmost body of water on the mainland of the United States. It lies partly within the United States and partly within the Dominion of Canada. Its area is about 1,500 square miles, or about 400 square miles larger in area than the whole State of Rhode Island. The outlet of this lake is on the Canadian side. It empties into the Winnipeg River, which river again flows into Lake Winnipeg. Dams have been erected at the outlet of the lake and great water-power developments have been developed, which now furnish power to several important industries located near the outlet of the lake in the Canadian town of Kenora, such as flour mills, paper mills, and so forth. Power is being transmitted to the city of Winnipeg and other Canadian points.

A dam had been erected at the lake outlet while there were yet a few settlers on the lake, but a bigger and stronger dam was erected and put to use to its full capacity about the time that the lands bordering on the lake on the American side were opened to settlement. The Lake of the Woods country had, as far as the United States are concerned, been a sort of a land mystery until comparatively recent times. The French had made their way to the lake in search for the Western Sea as early as the year 1732. From that time on down until the 1870's the whole Lake of the Woods region was inhabited by Chippewa Indians and by white men and was visited only by fur traders.

In 1896 the lands on the American side of the lake were opened for homestead entries, and the bulk of the settlers began to come in in the year 1898. The settlers here endured many hardships. The nearest railroad point in the United States being about 100 miles away, and the nearest town on the Canadian side being about an equal distance to the north across the lake. Travel around by land to the Canadian town was impossible. In 1901 the Canadian Northern Railway was built in from Winnipeg in a southeasterly direction, and the town of Warroad on the American side of the lake was established. Railway communication south into Minnesota was only established in 1908, when the Great Northern sent a branch line to Warroad. Not very long after the settlers had come in the water in the lake began to rise, to the detriment of their farming operations. The cause of the rise of the water was, after some investigation and speculation by the pioneer settlers, attributed to the Canadian dams, but as their clearings were not very large their complaints were unheeded. In the meantime, with the coming of the railroad, a town-site speculation in the village of Warroad was put on. Bills were introduced in Congress for the commutation of two homestead entries made by two young men who were to be the proprietors of the town site, and an appropriation of $45,000 was included in the rivers and harbors pork barrel bill for the year 1902 for the purpose of improving the Warroad Harbor by deepening the channel in the Warroad River to a depth of 7 feet. Twenty-five thousand dollars of this money was expended for the building of a dredge and $10,000 was allowed for running expenses for each of the two years following. Engineers' reports from that time state that the channel of the river, while it was narrow, was 10 feet deep, except at the mouth of the river, where there was a sand bar and where the depth of the water was only 5 feet. The real-estate men of Warroad were dreaming great dreams and picturing Warroad as a coming metropolis of the North, and these young, clever real-estate men must have made quite an impression on the Government engineers who were sent there to investigate and upon whose recommendation the $45,000 in the rivers and harbors pork barrel bill were inserted. The engineers' report states that while the town then consisted of "a few temporary buildings occupied by two saloons, a barber shop, a restaurant, a general store, and a hotel," it was expected that the town would soon grow into a city of many thousand people. The deepening of the harbor was undertaken with a view to the taking away of the trade on the lake from the Canadian town on the other side. There were several small steamers on the lake at that time, one of which drew as much as 7 feet of water, and for that reason the harbor had to be deepened to the depth of 7 feet.

The distance from Warroad to Winnipeg was 12 miles shorter than by the way of the Canadian town. For that reason it was expected that the trade on the lake, much of which was coming down the Rainy River, would go to Warroad. But the steamers, all being owned in Canada, and the trade being all Canadian trade, the expected prosperity of Warroad did not arrive and the United States Government extended no further aid after the $45,000 was used up.

The sand beginning to fill in the mouth of the river again and the Government not being willing to continue the dredging operations, something had to be done to entice to Warroad the Canadian trade, the only excuse being offered for its nonarrival being that the channel in the river kept filling in and the boats could not make the proper landing. So when the Government would do no more dredging it was appealed to to raise the water in the lake 2 feet, and the United States Department on a couple of occasions appealed to the Canadian authorities to keep the water up to such a level as would get 7 feet of water at the entrance to Warroad Harbor in the interest of navigation. This, however, the Canadian authorities refused to do, claiming that the water was already as high as it properly could be kept without great inconvenience and possible injury to the Canadian industrial enterprises at the lake outlet. In the meantime the farmers began to set up a loud cry against the encroachment on their little fields of the rising waters of the lake, and through their Congressman, my predecessor, the Hon. Halvor Steenerson, protests were made to the War Department in 1905.

Mr. Steenerson lodged his protest with our State Department, and a letter from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of State of April 21, 1906, just 20 years ago to-day, states that the War Department does not consider the time favorable for further pressing the demands on Canada toward maintaining the level of the Lake of the Woods to the height that it had previously requested. Army engineers who were sent to look into the cause of the high water and the status of the Canadian dams reported differently, while they all agreed that the dams were not the cause of the flood by reason of holding back the water but that it was all due to natural causes, one engineer holding that the level of the water on one side of the lake was a foot higher than on the other side, another stating that the dam was 20 feet below the level of the lake.

Due to the efforts of Congressman Steenerson, the Lake of the Woods question was referred to the International Joint Commission, which made a thorough investigation that lasted over several years, and whose findings finally clearly set out all the facts in the controversy and established the Canadian dams as the cause of the excessive high water. The treaty of 1925 is the conclusion of the findings by the International Joint Commission. It is agreed in the treaty that the Canadian Government shall pay to the Government of the United States $275,000, a certain part of which money shall be expended for the carrying out of certain protective works at the Warroad Harbor, the balance to be applied toward the procuring of flowage easements. Whatever money will have to be expended in excess of this sum paid by Canada shall be borne in a 50-50 proportion by the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. The United States Government has by the treaty obligated itself to assume responsibility for past damages, which Mr. Hackworth, Solicitor of the State Department, estimates will not exceed $50,000 or $60,000. It was considered to be only fair that our Government assume this responsibility in view of the much larger sum that the Canadian Government agreed to pay for flowage easements. This little item of past damages was the only real bone of contention before the committee that handled this bill. It was so thoroughly discussed and thrashed over and the demand for it considered so just that it now should be entirely beyond controversy.

Had it not been for the unfortunate stand taken by the War Department, due to the misleading and erroneous reports of the engineers on the proposition, I imagine that these settlers would have received justice long ago. Had the dams that caused the damage by reason of the rise in the water level been located in the United States these people could have gone into court and had redress. This not being the case, they had to travel the long and tortuous road they had to travel to get here before you. Irreparable damage was done these people by a town-site boom that did not materialize. The town of Warroad is there to-day—a solid, substantial little town of around 2,000 people—that exists in its own right and draws its support from the surrounding territory in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am very much interested in the gentleman's discussion of this subject, and I appreciate very much his compliment to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS]; but I want to say that if it had not been for the zeal and enthusiasm and constancy of the gentleman from Minnesota himself, this bill would probably be reposing in the files of the Foreign Affairs Committee at this moment. The gentleman from Minnesota is deserving of the credit of getting this legislation before the House, because, however keen the minds of the other Members are and however strict their attention to the public business, they have their noses to the grindstone to such an extent in connection with other matters that they could not have gotten this through if the gentleman from Minnesota had not been instrumental in securing action. [Applause.]

Mr. WEFALD. I thank the gentleman. "The gentleman from Minnesota" recognizes that while he is a member of a party so small that it has practically no recognition here in some respects, he has still received extreme courtesy from the Members on both sides of the House, and especially from the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

The patient, sturdy pioneer farmers in the Lake of the Woods settlement, Minnesota's last frontier, will hail with a great deal of satisfaction the news that I shall send them when this bill is passed. It will strengthen their faith in the justice of their Government to know that while justice has traveled slowly, and that it has been 20 years in catching up with them, yet they will know that Uncle Sam treats every cause and every man justly and squarely when the case is finally put properly before him.

These pioneers will always be under a deep debt of gratitude to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. PORTER, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, who has shown a great deal of sympathy with these people's cause; they will always with lasting gratitude remember the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. VAILE, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, the majority members of the subcommittee, who bore the brunt of their battle and who were their friends, indeed.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire additional time?

Mr. WEFALD. No; I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888, the flowage easements up to elevation 1,064 sea-level datum upon all lands in the United States bordering on the Lake of the Woods and such lands or interests therein as are necessary to provide for protective works and measures in the United States along the shores of the Lake of the Woods and the banks of the Rainy River as specified in article 8 of the convention signed at Washington on the 24th of February, 1925, between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, providing for the regulation of the level of the Lake of the Woods.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, after line 10, insert: "In proceeding by condemnation for acquiring such flowage easements on any tract of land any benefit to the remainder of the tract or the property thereon derived from such easement shall be considered and damages shall be awarded accordingly."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated, as soon as practicable, all just claims for damages caused, prior to the acquisition of flowage easements under this act, to the inhabitants of the United States by fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods due to artificial obstructions in outlets of said lake, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to ascertain, determine, and award the annual loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by the respective claimants and to report to Congress for its consideration the amount or amounts he may find to be equitably due such claimants: Provided, That all claims not presented to the Secretary of War under this provision prior to the expiration of six months from the date of the passage of this act shall not be considered by him and shall be forever barred.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 3, line 6, after the word "all," strike out the word "just."

Page 3, line 11, after the word "hearing," strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall," and after the word "determine" strike out the words "and award the annual" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the," and in line 15, after the word "claimants," insert "together with a statement in each case of the substantial facts upon which the conclusion is based."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments blocked.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to prefer a unanimous-consent request in connection with the colloquy that occurred between the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and myself a few moments ago; that is, that there be printed in the Record in connection with this discussion the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon the bill H. R. 9872, so that the report of the subcommittee and the minority views of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] can be available to the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that question ought to be taken up in the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Following is the report referred to:

REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS, ON
H. R. 9872

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned members of your subcommittee respectfully submit the following report and recommend that the bill be passed with the following amendment:

Page 2, line 9, after the period, insert the following:

"In proceeding by condemnation for acquiring such flowage easements on any tract of land any benefit to the remainder of the tract or the property thereon derived from such easement shall be considered and damages shall be awarded accordingly."

The above amendment was suggested by Mr. Hackworth, the Solicitor of the State Department, who has been familiar with this whole matter for many years, he having been engaged in the preparation of the treaty on the subject to which reference hereafter will be made.

This bill not only has the approval of the State Department, but in its present form it is in effect the bill of that department, as will be seen from the letter of Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, to the chairman submitting his redraft (the present bill) under date of January 27, 1926.

Its purpose, as will appear from the bill, and to quote the language of Mr. Hackworth, is "to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire land around the Lake of the Woods for a flowage easement pursuant to a convention concluded between the United States and Great Britain and to assess the damages which have been suffered by the owners of property abutting on the lake over a period of years as the result of the fluctuations of the level of the lake."

The latter point is the only one which has given your subcommittee any concern, a question having been raised in the committee as to whether some expressed limitation should be imposed either upon the time prior to which damages would not be calculated, or the lake level below which they would not be calculated, or both.

The language of the bill proposed by the State Department in this respect is as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated, as soon as practicable, all just claims for damages caused, prior to the acquisition of flowage rights under this act, to the inhabitants of the United States by fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods, due to artificial obstructions in outlets of said lake, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to ascertain, determine, and award the annual loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by respective claimants and to report to Congress for its consideration the amount or amounts he may find to be equitably due such claimants."

A majority of your subcommittee are of opinion that this language abundantly protects the financial interest of the United States. We can not assume that the War Department will make awards of more than the amounts which may fairly be due. If there should be errors it would seem more likely that they would be in favor of than against the Government. If the experience of private claimants before other departments can be regarded as a criterion.

It will be observed that under the language of the bill a claimant is not accorded any right of appeal to the courts, and it will be also observed that the payment of all claims has to be considered and approved by Congress and, of course, can not be made until an appropriation is made therefor.

Furthermore, the act provides an extremely short limitation period in "that all claims not presented to the Secretary of War under this provision prior to the expiration of six months from the date of the passage of this act shall not be considered by him and shall be forever barred."

But although the majority of your subcommittee think that such a limitation as has been suggested is not necessary, yet since the question has been raised we discuss here briefly the origin of "claims for damages caused prior to the acquisition of flowage easements * * * by fluctuation of the water levels * * * due to artificial obstructions in outlets of the lake."

The Lake of the Woods is highly irregular in shore line, approximately 100 miles from east to west and a like distance from north to south, but with several long arms or bays. The lake has an area of nearly 1,500 square miles, being some 400 square miles larger than the State of Rhode Island. The larger part of it is in Canada and drains via the Winnipeg River into Lake Winnipeg. In 1917 there were some 20 sections of privately owned land on the American side affected by the raising of the lake levels and this quantity is not believed to be much greater at present.

The first obstruction in the lake outlets was made probably as early as 1879, but the works which have caused most of the difficulty are those known as the Norman Dam in the Winnipeg River. This construction was authorized or permitted by the Canadian Government in 1893, and was commenced in that year. It was probably not completed until 1905, though there is some difference in the testimony as to the exact date.

This dam was constructed to develop water power for a corporation operating on the Canadian side. In 1898 the obstruction was intensified by building up the dam with stop logs. Since November 19, 1898, the height of the dam has been controlled by the provincial government under a contract with the power corporation.

Land on the American side along the shore of the lake, formerly owned by the Chippewa Indians, were duly opened to occupancy on May 15, 1898, though some of them had been occupied prior to that time by squatters who afterwards converted their tenancy by sufferance or at will into permanent title.

These farmers complained that they were being flooded out by reason of the obstruction referred to—Mr. Hackworth says "12 or 15 years ago," but some of the testimony would indicate that complaints were made considerably before that—and our War Department engineers made exhaustive investigations and reported, as late as 1911, that the obstructions at the Norman Dam did not raise the level of the lake. And it was not until after that year and, indeed, not until after the investigation made by the International Joint Commission, hereinafter referred to, that it was definitely ascertained that the level of the lake was raised by the obstruction at Norman Dam.

The actual levels at various times, together with the computed natural levels, i. e., the levels as they would have been if the obstructions had not existed, are set forth in tables prepared by members of the subcommittee and by witnesses who appeared before it, from plates embodied in the report of the International Joint Commission.

These figures show that from 1900 to 1906, inclusive, the water was maintained at from 2 to 4 feet above its computed natural level, and witnesses in behalf of the farmers submitted figures to show that during the period from the latter date to 1924 it was usually maintained at least 4 feet above its natural level, the extreme difference being about 6 feet, and that these differences were greatest in the growing season.

That this was an actual damage and that it has been a continuing damage to the farmers on the lake shore there can be no doubt, though Mr. Hackworth estimates that the total of all claims will not exceed $50,000. Whether that damage is one for which these people should receive compensation is the question here involved, and your subcommittee is of opinion that the bill, by providing for the payment of "just claims" permits the solicitors of the War Department to establish standards for the proof of claims which will exclude from consideration any other kind.

Nor does your subcommittee think it necessary to hedge the department about with restrictions which may later be found to be impracticable or even inequitable. That some such valid claims do exist has been recognized by the Government of Canada and by our own Government. These and other boundary matters (involving both land and water) were first covered in a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, proclaimed May 13, 1910, by which the International Joint Commission was established. This is generally referred to as the treaty of 1909, having been ratified by the United States Senate on March 3 of that year.

That treaty provides, in Article II, "that any interference with or diversion from their natural channel of such waters on either side of the boundary, resulting in any injury on the other side of the boundary, shall give rise to the same rights and entitle the injured parties to the same legal remedies as if such injury took place in the country where such diversion or interference occurred, but this provision shall not apply to cases already existing. . . ."

The date of this treaty furnishes a point which may be important for the determination of the rights of an American settler to damages for past flowage. The language above quoted would seem to expressly provide for compensation for damages occurring after the proclamation of that treaty and to expressly exclude damages which occurred prior to that date. But such obligation and the limit of such obligation was applicable only to each Government with respect to citizens of the other. Furthermore, as bearing upon the rights of people owning lands on the American side of the Lake of the Woods, the undersigned desire to point out that at the time of the proclamation of this treaty these people had the assurances of their own Government engineers that the Norman Dam was not responsible for their damages, which assurances, as we have already said, were later proven to be erroneous.

On account of the complaints of American farmers and their demand for recognition by the International Joint Commission of the damages which had accrued to them in the past, and on account of a change in the policy of this Government with regard to the maintenance of the lake levels, a new treaty was finally negotiated, known as the "Treaty of 1925, to regulate the levels of the Lake of the Woods." In that treaty Article IX provides that—

"The United States and the Dominion of Canada shall each on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may have heretofore resulted to it or to its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the levels of the Lake of the Woods, or of the outflow therefrom."

It will be observed that this section by the use of the word "heretofore" does not limit the time during which this damage must have occurred; and this point is emphasized by the following language appearing in the same section:

"Each shall likewise assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may hereafter result to it or to its inhabitants from the regulation of the level of Lake of the Woods."

Concerning the history of this treaty, Mr. Hackworth, who was its principal draftsman on behalf of the United States, says that "as to past damages it was thought that in view of the fact that Canada was going to provide for the flowage easements and protective work it would be only fair for this Government as its part of the arrangement to take care of such damages, if any."

The 1925 treaty provides that the level of Lake of the Woods shall ordinarily be maintained between elevations 1,056 and 1,061.25 sea-level datum and that it shall at no time exceed elevation 1,062.5 sea-level datum. In order to accomplish this the bill provides for the acquisition of flowage easements up to elevation 1,064 sea-level datum. It will be observed that this treaty level, which is now desired by the United States in aid of navigation, is about as high as the maximum to which this water has heretofore been raised by the Norman Dam, and the level of the flowage rights is considerably higher. This will practically involve a complete taking of the lands in question.

We conclude by repeating that inasmuch as the bill (H. R. 9872) only provides for the payment of damages which may justly be found due and for such payment only as appropriations may hereafter be made therefore by Congress, your subcommittee are of opinion that the wishes of the State Department should be complied with by the passage of this bill and that the interests of the United States will be adequately protected thereby.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM N. VAILE,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Subcommittee.

MINORITY REPORT

APRIL 8, 1925.

Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER,

Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I regret that I am unable to agree with the majority of the members of your subcommittee in their report and recommendations on H. R. 9872. Permit me to say, however, that no effort has been made to reconcile our views on this bill, as your chairman, the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. VAILE, after the hearings, wrote out his opinion and submitted it to us for signature. I am in accord with that portion of the majority of the subcommittee's report in which they recommend the following amendment:

"In proceeding by condemnation for acquiring such flowage easements on any tract of land any benefit to the remainder of the tract or the property thereon derived from such easement shall be considered and damages shall be awarded accordingly."

But I am opposed to that portion of the bill which reads as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be investigated, as soon as practicable, all just claims for damages caused, prior to the acquisition of flowage rights under this act, to the inhabitants of the United States by fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods, due to artificial obstructions in outlets of said lake, and after due notice and opportunity for hearing, to ascertain, determine, and award the annual loss or injury, if any, that may have been sustained by respective claimants and to report to Congress for its consideration the amount or amounts he may find to be equitably due such claimants."

This should not be passed without restrictions and limitations, if passed at all. Personally I am opposed to referring a matter of this kind to a department with full power to act and to use their own discretion without rules and regulations and with no authority of Congress to review their actions. The main reason given for recommending the passage of this bill in these words by the committee's report is from the fact that it is proposed by the State Department. To my mind this is no reason at all, bearing on this question, because their duties are executive and administrative, etc., and our duties are legislative, or creative. In disputed legal complications which will arise on the question of considering damages to the parties involved, your committee should certainly not leave these questions to some person in the War Department for determination. I shall not undertake to go into a detailed history of the location and conditions which have existed of the Lake of the Woods, because this has been covered by the majority report, but I will merely undertake to call your attention to these statements of facts which are raised for the discussion of the legal problems involved.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

In 1893 to 1895 what is known as the Norman Dam was built on the Canadian side by the authority of the Canadian Government. In 1898 stop logs were placed in this construction. Since that time this dam has remained the same without further obstruction. The construction of this dam and the placing of these stop logs, when in full use, raised the level of the Lake of the Woods, as a rule, about 2 feet above what would be its level in the course of nature. The result of the construction and maintenance of this dam is what the citizens of the United States complain caused the damage to their property.

This land was not open for entry by the United States until October 5, 1898, as shown by statement of the Department of the Interior hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A," but not for copy, and any who were living there prior to that date were squatters without right. From this it clearly appears that no person had acquired any legal right to this property from the United States prior to the construction of the Norman Dam and the placing of the stop logs therein. On the 13th of June, 1902, Congress adopted a project for improving Warroad Harbor and Warroad River, Minn., which is part of the Lake of the Woods, for the purpose of navigation, and you will find a letter in this record of the hearings, page No. 45, in which our Government requested the Canadian Government to prevent the level of the lake falling below the datum of 7.2 feet. The proof furthermore shows that the Canadian Government was not able to keep the level of the lake up to what the Government of the United States desired. This insistence on the part of the United States was not changed until May 19, 1913, although numerous complaints had been made by our citizens. Mr. Hackworth says that our Government's position was changed somewhere about that time (p. 107, hearings).

LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES

I was under the impression, when the proof was being taken in this case, that the people now asking for damages to their property were not entitled to any damages from the fact that they made entry and acquired the legal title to this property after the Norman Dam was built, about which they complain as the cause of their overflow, but after hearing all the evidence in this case and considering the legal questions involved, I am of the opinion that this would not apply unless the damages to the property amounted to a taking of the property—

"1. Under general principles of international law, Canada would appear to have had no right to raise the natural level of the lake without the consent of the United States.

"The usage which a riparian makes of that part of the lake over which he is sovereign must not be harmful to the other riparian. Thus, when there is a question of damming the waters of a lake in the territory of one of the two States, of lowering their level or diverting them, such works can not be undertaken in one of the States without the consent of the other, if by thus interfering with the waters situated in the other State serious impediments will be caused to the use of a river for navigation purposes or important changes caused to the waters of a large region." (Fauchille's Traite De Droit International Public, vol. 1, p. 412.)

"2. Under general principles of municipal law a riparian owner is entitled to have the water or watercourse on which his property is situated maintained in its state of nature and to have relief or damages against one changing such state.

"Property owners on a navigable lake have the right to have the natural level maintained, and to relief in equity, if necessary, to accomplish that end." (Runyard v. Oetting Bros. Ice Co., 125 N. W. 931, 142 Wis. 471.)

"If an obstruction erected upon land of a riparian owner before other riparian owners acquired their land was causing with each freshet a new overflow, the other riparian owners could have it removed." (Judd v. Blakeman, 195 S. W. 119, 175 Ky. 848.)

"A riparian owner was entitled to have the waters of the lake adjacent to his land stand as they were wont, and not to have his land overflowed more than usual; but, unless such rights were invaded, lower riparian owners on a river flowing out of the lake were entitled to the beneficial use of the stream flowing therefrom." (Krieg v. Kaufman, 173 N. W. 338.)

"One who raises the water of a stream by a dam is liable for damages by the flooding thereby of lands above it, not only at ordinary low water, but at ordinary high water." (Allen v. T. Electric Co., 108 N. W. 79—Mich. 1906.)

"Where one landowner causes water to be discharged upon the land of an adjoining owner at a point where such water would never have flowed in a state of nature . . . such injured landowner is entitled to nominal damages, even if the result was beneficial to his land, and he is likewise entitled to whatever actual damages he may have sustained." (Kennedy v. Murphy, 112 Ill. App. 607.)

From these authorities you will readily see that the Canadian Government was without authority to permit the building of the Norman Dam, in so far as it affected the property situated in the United States. If the building of the Norman Dam caused the raising of the level of the lake and it overflowed in the United States to such an extent that it resulted in the taking of the property, then only those who owned such property prior to the construction of the dam would be entitled to damages. In this case the United States owned the property at the time, and the overflow, as a result of building said dam, could not be considered a taking, because the proof shows that it merely overflowed at different times during different years. Where there is a sale of land and the flood is prior to the sale, only the vendor has right of action. If, however, the structure is built while the vendor is the owner and the flood occurs subsequently to the sale, only the vendee has right of action.

THE RIGHTS OF THE VENDEE ARE NOT SUBROGATED TO THE RIGHTS OF THE VENDOR IN A TRANSFER OF REAL ESTATE FOR AN INJURY IN THE NATURE OF A TRESPASS

"Damages in compensation for an injury in the nature of trespass will not pass by a conveyance of the land." (Schuykill & S. Navigation Co. v. Decker, 2 Watts, 343.)

"A purchaser of land can not sue for injuries done to the premises before he acquired title." (Litchfield v. Norwood Mfg. Co., 48 N. Y. S. 496.)

"One whose land is damaged by the permanent flooding thereof may recover such damages even after conveying the land to another by warranty deed." (Id.)

"A purchaser of land has a right of action for injuries to the land caused by the overflow of water diverted from a stream by ditches on a railroad right of way, though the ditches were constructed before the purchase." (St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. Clayton, 118 S. W. 248.)

"A purchaser is presumed to buy the accessory rights to the property transferred, but damages suffered by the vendor before the sale are a personal right not transferred and can not be recovered without an express subrogation." (Matthews v. Alsworth, 12 Southern, 518.)"

CONTINUING TRESPASS

I am of the opinion, however, that in this case the property owners in the United States, damaged by this overflow at different times, resulting from the building of Norman Dam, as nothing further appears, would be entitled to recover the amount of their damages on the theory that it is a continuing trespass to their property; and this would be true, regardless of the fact that they bought and entered this property after the Norman Dam had been erected, if nothing further appears as a bar.

"In treating of 'continuing trespass to realty,' it is said in 38 Cyc., at page 1127, that 'damages for all the injury to the land which results from a single act of trespass to realty are recoverable in a single action; but where the act is not a single act of trespass, but a continuing trespass or series of trespasses which amount to an appropriation or an attempt to appropriate the land itself or its use to the use of the trespasser, the damages are to be assessed for the trespass only, and not as if for the permanent appropriation of the land . . .'

"This principle is illustrated by the case of Winchester v. Stevens Point (17 N. W. 3, and 17 N. W. 547). There the plaintiff complained that the defendant city had constituted a dyke or embankment in front of her premises which rendered them inaccessible, and that this embankment dammed up the water and set it back upon her lands, diminishing them in value and causing damages in the sum of $700. The court said:

"It seems that the acts complained of by the plaintiff are in the nature of a continuing trespass or nuisance, and that the rule as to the damages which the plaintiff may recover in such actions is not the damages he may sustain in the future, but such as he has sustained at the time the action was commenced."

"The above rule quoted from Cyc. is qualified by the statement that 'although where defendant has the right to appropriate land or an easement therein by eminent domain, plaintiff is, according to some decisions, allowed a recovery in trespass of the entire loss as for a taking.'

"For this qualification the case of Weaver v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. (28 Minn. 534, 11 N. W. 114) is cited. There the defendant by the construction and maintenance of its boom across the Mississippi River invaded the land of the plaintiff—a riparian owner—by superinduced additions of water, earth, logs, etc., so as effectually to destroy or impair its usefulness. It was held that this was not a mere consequential injury, but amounted to a taking of the property within the State constitutional provision. The evidence tended to show that the trespass of defendant deprived plaintiff of the use of his property for a certain period of time, hence the value of such use became material in determining the amount of damage which plaintiff had sustained.

"The measure of damages for an appropriation of the use of the land by a continuing trespass is the worth of the use of the property, except where the doctrine is held that the recovery is based on a permanent appropriation of the land by defendant." (38 Cyc. 1129.)

"The term 'continuing trespass' seems to be used in the sense of a series of trespasses. For instance, in Judd v. Blakeman (175 Ky. 848, 195 S. W. 119) the appellant had erected on his land an embankment which caused the water to overflow lands on the opposite side of the stream. The appellees, who acquired their lands after the erection of the embankment, showed that the embankment caused the waters, with every freshet and high tide, to overflow and damage their lands, in greater volume and more frequently than they were used to flow before the embankment was erected. It was held that the appellees were entitled to a mandatory injunction directing the removal of the obstruction. The court said:

"Each recurrent flood will bring with it a new trespass, to prevent which it was the duty and within the power of the chancellor to prevent by mandatory injunction; otherwise appellees would be without an adequate remedy. A multiplicity of suits would result and it would be absolutely impossible in any one suit to determine the full value of the damage that would result from such an obstruction. It is simply a question of whether appellees should be permitted to enjoy their land in its natural state or whether they should be deprived of this right in order that appellant might enjoy his lands in an artificial condition detrimental to appellee."

LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES BASED ON THE ASSUMPTION OF THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S LIABILITY, UNDER ARTICLE 9, TREATY OF JULY 17, 1925, BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN

Article 9 provides that the United States and the Dominion of Canada shall each on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury which may have heretofore resulted to it or to its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the level of the Lake of the Woods or of the outflow therefrom.

"Canada would appear, from the principles established, to be liable (1) to the United States or its nationals (owning lands at the time) for damages caused to the lands in the United States through the raising of the level of the Lake of the Woods by means of dams constructed on its territory, and (2) to individual landowners in the United States whose lands were overflowed only after their purchase from the United States, even though they were purchased after the erection of the dams, unless the United States can be said to have adopted the acts of Canada complained of as acts of its own, performed in the exercise of its power to regulate navigation (interstate and foreign commerce).

"1. Did the United States adopt, in effect, the acts of Canada as its own?

"In the final report of the International Joint Commission it is stated:

"In 1895, seven years after the completion of the Rollerway Dam, Colonel Naff, of the General Land Office, United States Department of the Interior, was sent to the Lake of the Woods to investigate complaints made by settlers on the south shore of the lake in Minnesota that their lands had been submerged by high levels caused by the construction of the Rollerway Dam. Colonel Naff reported that it was claimed by the settlers that the Rollerway Dam had raised the level of the lake about 3 feet higher than its natural stage, and that the month of May will be the best season of the year to make a critical examination of the condition and extent of the overflowage and the amount of damage done upon which to base a plea of complaint and for relief.

"Apparently no action was taken in the matter by the United States Government, nor was the matter ever brought officially to the attention of the Canadian Government (p. 19).

"In 1902, on the basis of surveys of Warroad River, authorized by the Congress of the United States, and made by engineers of the United States War Department in 1899 to 1900, a project was adopted by Congress for the improvement of Warroad Harbor so as to provide a 7.2-foot channel. In the plans for this improvement all depths were reduced to what the War Department later referred to as the "normal" level of the lake; that is, a stage of 7.2 feet on the Warroad gauge, corresponding to 1,060.8 sea level datum (p. 18).

"As a consequence, in May, 1925, the Government of the United States suggested to the Government of the Dominion of Canada that the Norman Dam be so operated as to prevent the level of the Lake of the Woods from falling below the datum of 7.2 on the Warroad gauge; i. e., 1,060.8, sea level datum (p. 18).

"As the result of flooding of lands along the south shore of the lake in 1905 and 1907, protests were made by the settlers to the United States Government. The 1907 protest consisted of a series of affidavits which reached the United States department about the end of that year (p. 19).

"It may be noted that none of the protests referred to above were brought to the attention of the Canadian Government by the Government of the United States" (p. 20).

From the above citations it can be readily seen that the Government of the United States did adopt and approve the maintenance of the Norman Dam.

LIABILITIES OF THE UNITED STATES FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED IN THE EXERCISE OF ITS POWERS TO REGULATE NAVIGATION

Injuries caused subsequent to purchase of land through the maintenance of dams constructed prior to purchase in the interest of navigation is now the question involved.

"If it may be said that the United States adopted the act of Canada in building the dams as its own act in the exercise of its power to regulate navigation, it would not be liable to individuals who purchased their lands after the building of the dams.

"In Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, Secretary of War (224 U. S. 605), the complainant, a corporation of Pennsylvania, was the owner in fee of Brunots Island in the Ohio River, Pa. In 1858 a statute was enacted in Pennsylvania providing for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain and mark the lines of ordinary high and low waters. These lines were definitely fixed along the shore of Brunots Island. Subsequent to the establishment of the State commissioners' line, a considerable portion of the shore of the island was washed away from time to time so that a large part of the upland became submerged. The United States Government, in order to increase the depth of water in the harbor of Pittsburgh, caused a dam to be constructed across the Ohio River a short distance below Brunots Island. The effect of this dam was to submerge Brunots Island to a far greater extent and to make the water over the complainant's land navigable at certain times where it was not navigable before. In 1895 the Secretary of War established a harbor line which ran across the complainant's land within the line of the State commissioners. In 1907 the Secretary of War changed the harbor line so as to make it coincide with the actual high-water mark, since along a part of the shore of the island the harbor line of 1895 ran several hundred feet outside the high-water mark as it then existed.

"The complainant desired to reclaim a part of the land of the island which had been submerged by establishing a coal wharf which was to extend across both of the harbor lines to the State commissioners' line. The Secretary of War refused to permit the complainant to build such a wharf outside the harbor line of 1907 and threatened criminal prosecution if he undertook to do so. The company brought proceedings in equity to set aside the harbor lines as established so far as they encroached upon the land above the line established by the State commissioners and to restrain the Secretary of War from causing criminal proceedings to be instituted against the complainant because of the reclamation and occupation of its land outside the limits prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"The Supreme Court, in affirming a decree sustaining a demurrer to the bill in the lower court, said:

"It will be observed that it is said that the United States caused the erection of the dam in the interest of navigation. The complainant purchased the island subsequently, in the year 1896, and we are not concerned here with the question whether there was any appropriation of land of the owner by the United States and cause of action arose to recover its value. (Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269; United States v. Lynch, 188 U. S. 455; Bedford v. United States, 192 U. S. 217; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 475; C. B. & Q. Ry. v. Drainage Commissioners, 200 U. S. 561, 583, 584.) So far as the bill shows the dam was lawfully built, and the allegations with respect to it wholly fail to state any case entitling the complainant to relief by reason of its construction." (223 U. S. p. 627.)

"The court also said (p. 624):

"The doctrine that the owner takes the risk of the increase or diminution of his land by the action of the water applies as well to rivers that are strong and swift, to those that overflow their banks, and whether or not dikes and other defenses are necessary to keep the water within its proper limits."

"The first paragraph above quoted seems to stand for the proposition that where the United States lawfully builds a dam in the interest of navigation (and the same principle would seem to be applicable in the case where a dam is constructed on the foreign side of a boundary water and the United States acquiesces in the maintenance of the dam), the United States will not be liable for any appropriation of land caused by the maintenance of a dam which was erected before the owner purchased the land. The question apparently would be considered only where the appropriation was made while in the hands of the person who owned it when the dam was erected."

The proof in this record correctly shows that the United States did adopt the act of Canada in building and maintaining the Norman Dam, and as this was done for the purpose of navigation and the damages resulting were merely incidental and not a taking of their property, there can be no recovery during the period of time in which the United States took this position. I have heretofore called your attention to the United States Government's request to the Canadian Government to keep the level of the Lake of the Woods at a higher level than it was maintaining on account of navigation at Warroad gauge. These claimants, under the facts and principles of law cited, would not be entitled to any damages up to May 19, 1913, when the Government of the United States changed its position as to the injuries resulting from the level of the lake. The United States having adopted the act of Canada as its own act in the exercising of its power regulating navigation, would not be liable to any individual even owning land at the time of the building of the dam, as the damage caused did not amount to a taking of the land within the meaning of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES AS VENDOR

The grantee simply took all right and title of the United States, paying valuable consideration thereof. There is no contention made in this case that the United States made any representations in reference to this property, but even if it were so contended that representations were made by the United States, a purchaser of property has no right to rely on representations of the vendor as to its quality, where he has reasonable opportunity to examine it and judge for himself of its qualities. (Shepherd v. Goben, 39 N. E. 506.) The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to contracts for the sale of real property or of some interest therein, as well as to contracts for the sale of personal property. (39 Cyc. 1278.)

It was contended by Mr. Berkman, attorney and witness for the claimants in this case, that the purchaser of land bought under the Government survey takes not merely what he buys and with the waters up or down, but he also takes any rights to which his grantor may have been entitled, and that he will be subrogated to the rights of grantor.

I have heretofore made citations which I do not consider it necessary to repeat showing that this is not a correct legal conclusion.

CONCLUSIONS

1. The Norman Dam was built in 1893-1895, and the stop logs placed in same in 1898, and this was prior to the legal entry of any property made in the United States of the land bordering on the Lake of the Woods.

2. That the building and maintenance of this dam has caused the raising of the level of the Lake of the Woods on an average from 2 to 3 feet (p. 74, hearings), which has resulted in damages to the property owners in the United States at different times.

3. That the Government of the United States is responsible to any of these claimants for damages incurred whenever there is legal liability under the treaty of the United States Government with the Canadian Government, dated July 17, 1925, and that there is no legal liability to any claimant prior to May 19, 1913.

4. That the Government of the United States is only liable to those who own this land in fee simple for any damages caused by the overflow of this lake on their property in excess of what is computed as the level of the lake in its natural stage.

On pages 106 and 107 of the hearings you will find that Mr. Hackworth, representative of the State Department, was asked his legal conclusions as to the liability for damages and at what time. He said upon that proposition that he would divide this into two periods, one from 1898 to 1917 and from 1917 to the present time, and that it was his legal opinion that we had no claim against Canada for the first period, if we had acquiesced in what they had done, but further stated as to whether or not our citizens there have claim against the United States is a different proposition. I adopt the suggestion of Mr. Hackworth in reference to dividing this into two periods and insist that these claimants are not entitled to compensation up to May 19, 1913, for the reasons heretofore stated, and that any damages claimed since that date are entitled to be considered. Whatever we allow the claimants under this bill will be as a matter of grace, but we should understand that by grace they should not be entitled to any greater compensation than what they would be entitled to recover under the strict legal right, providing they had the right to sue.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I suggest that this bill be so amended as to provide that no damage to this property caused by the overflow of the Lake of the Woods shall be considered prior to May 19, 1913, and that no person should be awarded any damages unless he owned the property in fee at the time, and, furthermore, that no damages shall be awarded except those damages caused by the overflow in the excess of what is computed as the level of the lake in the natural state. I further suggest that this be referred to the War Department under these rules and restrictions for them to make investigation and report on the claims filed, the amount of the damages, if any, and with synopsis of evidence upon which they act. If such report could be brought back to this committee for action during next session of Congress, I feel that justice would be done both as to the claimants and the Government.

Respectfully submitted.

S. D. McREYNOLDS,
Member of Subcommittee.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, I think on page 3, line 11, there ought to be the word "and" inserted between the words "ascertain" and "determine." Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania offer that amendment?

Mr. PORTER. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment that on page 3, line 11, there be inserted, after the word "ascertain," the word "and," and strike out the comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, after the word "ascertain," strike out the comma and insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9872) to carry into effect the provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of the Lake of the Woods, concluded on the 24th day of February, 1925, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDEMNITY TO GREAT BRITAIN ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF DANIEL SHAW WILLIAMSON

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up H. R. 11308, a bill authorizing the payment of an indemnity to Great Britain on account of the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject, who was killed at East St. Louis, Ill., on July 1, 1921.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11308, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be paid to Great Britain, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of legal liability of the United States, the sum of $2,000, as full indemnity for the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject, who was killed by a policeman at East St. Louis, Ill., July 1, 1921, as set forth in the message of the President on December 13, 1924, printed as Senate Document No. 172, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the message of the President and the letter from the Secretary of State be read by the Clerk in part of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the claim presented by the British Government for indemnity on account of the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject, at East St. Louis, Ill., on July 1, 1921. I recommend that Congress authorize an appropriation and that an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 13, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT:

I deem it necessary to bring to your attention a claim presented by the British Embassy at Washington for indemnity on account of the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject, 22 years old, who was killed at East St. Louis, Ill., on July 1, 1921. A coroner's jury found that Mr. Williamson came to his death as a result of gunshot wounds inflicted by a police officer.

It appears from testimony taken at the coroner's inquest that while making his way peacefully toward his home Mr. Williamson was accosted by two policemen in plain clothes and ordered to halt.

For some unknown reason, possibly because of impaired hearing, because of noise made by the motor cycle in which the policemen were traveling, or because he did not know that the men who approached him were policemen, Mr. Williamson disregarded the order to halt and continued to move toward his home, which was only a short distance away. One witness at the inquest testified that a shot was fired by the policemen, after which Mr. Williamson started to run, when a second shot was fired; but the policeman who did the shooting testified that Mr. Williamson ran before he fired the first shot. When Mr. Williamson reached his home he fell mortally wounded and died a few minutes later.

It seems to be established by the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest that Mr. Williamson had been engaged in conversation with his associates; that the policemen were in plain clothes and that when they first accosted Williamson they were within a few feet of him and could easily have arrested him without resort to the use of firearms; and that the shooting was done with a riot gun. There apparently was no reason to suspect that Mr. Williamson had committed or intended to commit, any offense, and it is believed that in the circumstances the use of a riot gun was unwarranted. On learning of the lamentable incident Mr. John Williamson, the father of Daniel Shaw Williamson, who resides at 33 Fishcross by Alloa, Scotland, came to the United States from Scotland to ascertain the actual circumstances attending the death of his son. He incurred considerable expense and forfeited his salary for the period of his absence from home. The British Government considers that the father of the deceased is entitled to an indemnity, and has presented a claim in the sum of $2,000. Correspondence with the Governor of Illinois has not resulted in steps being taken to indemnify Mr. John Williamson and has not revealed the existence of any remedy which could be pursued with a view to recovering an indemnity.

As the shooting of Daniel Shaw Williamson appears from information available to the department to have been unwarranted and as it seems certain that no redress will be afforded by the State of Illinois or the municipality of East St. Louis, I recommend that the Congress be requested to authorize an appropriation for the payment to Mr. John Williamson of the sum of $2,000 requested by the British Government as indemnity for the death of his son, Daniel Shaw Williamson, and to appropriate the amount mentioned as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the legal liability of the United States.

As a summary of the essential facts regarding the claim is embodied in this communication, it is deemed unnecessary to accompany it with copies of the correspondence in this case. All or any part of the correspondence will, of course, be furnished should the Congress so desire.

It will be noted from the inclosed communication from the Director of the Budget, to whom the matter was referred, that the proposed action is not in conflict with the financial program of this Government.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Washington, December 10, 1924.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not see that I can add anything to the very concise statement of facts contained in the letter from the Secretary of State. The amount asked, $2,000, is extremely modest. It has met with the approval of the President and the Secretary of State and has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is one of those claims that ought to be paid and paid promptly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McKEOWN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. PORTER. How long does the gentleman propose to take?

Mr. McKEOWN. I want about 15 minutes to discuss this matter.

Mr. PORTER. We have only two Calendar Wednesdays during the session. We have five bills and have disposed of only one.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman is always allotted one hour to a side.

Mr. PORTER. I shall not object if the gentleman's time is limited to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to talk to you for a few minutes about H. R. 11253. I do not want what I say construed as intended in any way to impede any farm legislation that may be in contemplation at this session of Congress, but I want to bring this bill to your attention for this reason: That under this bill I provide a method whereby you make no charge on the Treasury of the United States except for administrative expenses, to meet the objection of a large number and give to the farmer the same kind of protection you give to the manufacturer. The manufacturer is protected by a customs duty, and I have simply drawn this bill so as to give to the farmer a part of that duty, so it will work in his case just the same as it works for the manufacturer.

I am frank to say in the outset that I do not know whether this policy or principle shall become the permanent policy of this Government; but as long as you have a tariff for protection or a tariff for customs duties, then under my plan you can have a similar protection which will balance and lift the farmer up and give him the same privileges enjoyed by the manufacturer.

I will show you how it is done. In the first place, I have provided for a board consisting of the State and National presidents of farm organizations. They are made into a board for the purpose of standardizing production in this country. In other words, the duty of that board would be to come to Washington, take all the information available, and determine from the amount of the surplus on hand the amount produced last year of any of the basic commodities, and determine what should be the amount, in order to meet the domestic demands and the foreign trade, for the coming year. There is nothing compulsory about it, because you can not under our form of government compel men to reduce production. But to illustrate: If that organization had been in session in January of this year, they would have found that we made 16,000,000 bales of cotton in the United States off of 46,000,000 acres planted last year. That is about 175 pounds per acre. If they, in looking over the situation, should determine that this country should not produce over 12,000,000 bales of cotton the next year in order to supply the domestic consumption and the foreign trade, they would say they find that 12,000,000 bales of cotton is the standard production and that, based upon last year's acreage, 150 pounds of lint cotton per acre would be the standard throughout the United States. Then you would diffuse this information through the county agents throughout the United States. That agency and organization is already set up. The county agent would give notice that he would be in his office, we will say, from the 1st day of February to the 1st day of March, and farmers in all of the counties would be interested to know what is meant by the standard of production. A farmer would come into the agent's office and he would say, "I want to find out what you mean by this standard of production." The agent would say that a board, composed of farm representatives, had determined that 150 pounds of lint cotton per acre, based on last year's production, would be the standard for this year.

The agent would ask, "How many acres of cotton did you have last year?" Suppose he should say 100 acres. Then the agent would say, "I am ready to issue you a certificate for a standard of 15,000 pounds of lint cotton." Then this man will ask, "Will there be anything to make me produce that amount or not produce it?" and the agent will answer "No." He can plant more acres than he planted last year or less acres or just as many as he wishes. There is nothing in the law to prohibit it, and the agent is simply stating the amount that ought to be produced by him compared with his production the year before. The agent would then say he was willing to issue him this standard.

This is for educational purposes. There is nothing compulsory about it. It is simply to enlighten and bring to his attention what amount he should produce of this article that would make a reasonable amount to meet the demands of the foreign market and the domestic trade.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How does any Government agent or anyone else know what the elements are going to produce in any crop so that before the crop is harvested he can give advance information that they are going to need so many bales or so many bushels?

Mr. McKEOWN. It is easy enough to determine the probable amount of wheat needed and the probable amount of cotton needed and the probable amount of tobacco needed in any given year.

Mr. BEGG. In getting that information would he not have to know how much was going to be imported from the foreign markets—from Canada, South America, Russia, and other foreign countries?

Mr. McKEOWN. He would simply base it upon an estimate, which would be the best he could do with all the light before him. Of course, it could not be absolutely accurate, but you have sufficient information from the Commerce Department, from the Census Bureau, from the Department of Agriculture, and from the other departments to at least make a good guess, and it is simply for the purpose of education and also to be used in connection with my second proposition.

Mr. BEGG. Is not that guess founded solely on whether or not weather conditions are favorable, and if weather conditions turn out to be unfavorable the guess does not amount to anything, does it?

Mr. McKEOWN. What I meant to say to the gentleman is that there might be a total failure, of course, but I am calling the gentleman's attention to what would be a standard production in the United States under average circumstances. Of course, a man could plant more cotton or less cotton. We do not attempt to regulate that and say he must do this or do that. We come to that in connection with another matter here which will be to induce him to standardize his production as much as possible. Of course, crop conditions, insect pests, drought, weather conditions will change the production, and it may be less or it may be more. We can not control it to start with by mere acreage.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, although I have no inclination to interfere with his time or with his speech.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand that.

Mr. BEGG. I can understand how a factory can set a definite figure on production, but I can not conceive how any agricultural producer can do that because of the countless things that would enter in to either increase or decrease the estimate.

Mr. McKEOWN. It can not possibly be an accurate amount, but this is the proposition: In England, in dealing with her rubber situation, England fixed a standard production. She fixed that standard for two purposes, and I am trying to fix this standard for two purposes—one for educational purposes, to come as near to the standard as a man can under all the circumstances—

Mr. BEGG. Right in connection with the gentleman's illustration regarding rubber, rubber has a limited area of production, and there are a limited number of people engaged in its production.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is true of cotton. Cotton has a limited area.

Mr. BEGG. It is limited to sections, but not in the number of people producing it.

Mr. McKEOWN. The same is true of rubber.

I want now to go to the next proposition. After you have fixed the standard production, the question then arises, What about your second board? There will be a second board whose duty it would be to determine what percentage of the standard will likely be consumed in domestic commerce. This board would not be constituted of farmers alone, because that would not be fair. This board has to determine what is the probable amount of the standard production that has been fixed that will be absorbed in domestic commerce, and on this board would be three men nominated by farmers, one man nominated by the American Bankers' Association, one man nominated by the American Federation of Labor, one man nominated by the President of his own choice, and the Secretary of Agriculture. It would be their duty to determine if any of the basic products that were being produced in the United States were being produced at a loss to the producers, so that it would be necessary to award a duty to them, and that would be done in this way. Suppose they find that 50 per cent of the cotton would be consumed in the domestic trade; that would be 6,000,000 bales of cotton, or 50 per cent of the standard production.

Going back to your original farmer who came in and received his standard of 15,000 pounds of cotton as a standard, he would then receive from this county agent a certificate which would be a debenturable certificate to receive his debentures on 7,500 pounds of cotton.

In this bill it is provided that a tax shall be levied as an excise tax on the buyers from the producers for resale and processing at a schedule of 5 cents a pound on cotton—and these rates are merely to bring the matter to the attention of Congress—1 cent a pound on cattle, which I took from the tariff rates, one-half cent on pork, and 42 cents per bushel, which I took from the tariff rate, on wheat. Then the Secretary of the Treasury would furnish debentures in denominations of coin and currency to be purchased at the banks or at the post office or from the collectors by men who are engaged in buying directly from the producers. That is where you get your money with which to pay these debentures, and the manufacturer, when he manufactures cotton into goods to be exported, gets his drawback in the same manner from the same fund, and so does the exporter who exports direct to the foreign markets.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit another question? I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Let us take a specific case and say there are 1,000 pounds of cotton and the price of cotton is 25 cents a pound. That would be $250 of debentures issued.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman means on a thousand pounds?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Five cents a pound would amount to $50.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BEGG. What security is back of the $50 debenture?

Mr. McKEOWN. The money is paid into the Treasury.

Mr. BEGG. Who pays it into the Treasury?

Mr. McKEOWN. The man who buys the cotton.

Mr. BEGG. Where did he get it?

Mr. McKEOWN. Took it out of his own pocket.

Mr. BEGG. Then if the price of cotton is 25 cents, he pays 30 cents.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Where does he get his money back?

Mr. McKEOWN. If he ships it abroad, he gets the money back from the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Where does the farmer get it?

Mr. McKEOWN. He gets his 5 cents addition on his 7,500 pounds, and on the other 7,500 pounds the farmer gets the market price and the debenture money; it is paid into the Treasury.

Mr. BEGG. Assuming that he pays 25 cents cash to the farmer, he is issued a debenture for $50, 5 cents a pound more, and he gets a drawback. But suppose he sells it in Europe for 20 cents a pound.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is a question of business with him.

Mr. BEGG. It is his hard luck.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Where does that leave the farmer or the buyer?

Mr. McKEOWN. If you give the farmer 5 cents a pound additional on his lint cotton, if you give that in addition to the market price on a part of his crop, and in order to keep the market fair, the manufacturer can have no objection, because he gets his drawback from the same fund.

Mr. BEGG. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Where does this pool come from that they are getting the drawback from—the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. McKEOWN. It comes from the fact that every buyer of cotton pays 5 cents more a pound on every pound, and the farmer would get the debenture for a part, and the other part comes back to Washington to refund the manufacturers and exporters of cotton.

Mr. BEGG. I may be dense, but I do not see how this money gets into this pool. Who puts it in?

Mr. McKEOWN. The man who buys the cotton in the first instance.

Mr. BEGG. Before the man can contribute anything to the pool he must buy it for less than it is worth.

Mr. McKEOWN. The bill provides that he shall pay 5 cents a pound in addition to the market price. I am not trying to fix the price on cotton.

Mr. BEGG. I see that all right.

Mr. McKEOWN. Now, take the manufacturer. You put a customs duty of 30 per cent on an article that he manufactures. Where does he get the advantage of that 30 per cent?

Mr. BEGG. When he sells the property.

Mr. McKEOWN. Exactly, and when the farmer sells his 7,500 pounds of cotton he gets the advantage of 5 cents a pound.

Mr. BEGG. Who is going to pay it?

Mr. McKEOWN. The consumers of the country, because the buyer pays it, and he knows that he gets his money back on his sale.

Mr. BEGG. The man who works up the material pays 5 cents extra, and he sells it for 5 cents more?

Mr. McKEOWN. It is just the same as you put the tariff duty on manufactures. When a man makes up his material that is protected he adds the protection of the tariff to the price of his goods, and so it goes all the way down the line.

Mr. BEGG. Then, if I understand the scheme, it is to take money out of the consumer's pocket and give it to the producers; in other words, it is not to shut out cheap labor, it is to take it out of one man's pocket and put it into another?

Mr. McKEOWN. It is just like your tariff.

Mr. BEGG. That takes it out of cheap labor.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not taking anything out of labor.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma, with reference to the interjection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], that it is just as legitimate for the Government, in order to encourage the exports, to aid exporters, as it is to tax all of the people in the United States and cut out the imports for the benefit of affording a domestic market to certain special favored manufacturing interests in the United States.

Mr. McKEOWN. My bill figures on this basis, that it simply turns to the farmer and gives the farmer something that will help lift his condition up to the prosperous condition of the other industries of the country.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. In order to correct the record, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] stated that the high protective tariff was put on the statute books to protect American labor from the importation of goods produced under cheap labor. In substance his statement was to that effect.

Mr. BEGG. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. SCHAFER. That is not correct.

Mr. McKEOWN. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to make a speech in my time.

Mr. SCHAFER. Just one minute. If that statement is correct, then we would not have these conditions in New Jersey in the textile mills, where men are on strike for a living wage.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not want to go into that phase of the matter at this time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. In other words, the position of the gentleman from Oklahoma is that the protective tariff under which we have been living for many years in this country benefits very materially the manufacturer in the country, including both capital and labor?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And that he now is in favor of legislation that will put the farming communities and the farmers of the country upon the same favorable basis?

Mr. McKEOWN. That is exactly what this bill proposes to do. Take wheat, as an example. We produce 600,000,000 bushels of wheat in the United States this year, we will suppose, and our consumption is 500,000,000 bushels of wheat. This board that I set up does not issue and declare debenturable every product, but the board uses its judgment. The President of the United States will have to declare when any product is in such condition as to be debenturable, and he determines from the price of the product at the time it is marketed whether that price is fair to the producer as well as fair to the consumer.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I wonder why the gentleman does not follow out the rubber-restriction plan by putting a penalty on the excess producers.

Mr. McKEOWN. Oh, this is a free country.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The gentleman wants to put the penalty on the consumer and not on the excess producer.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; I am simply doing this: My bill proposes to give to the farmer something to help him out of his present condition, and put him on an equal basis, so far as the things that he has to sell is concerned, with the things that he has to buy. The laboring people of this country have said time and again before the Committee on Agriculture that they are willing to take some part of the burden. This does not propose going into the Treasury of the United States and taking any money, except for the administration of it. It is simply putting into the commerce of this country an added burden to save agriculture from destruction. If you do it, then you will not hear any more complaint about the high tariff from the farmer, because he will benefit alike with the manufacturer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Has the gentleman made any estimate as to the cost of bookkeeping in order to keep this complex scheme for 6,000,000 farmers in the United States.

Mr. McKEOWN. That will be a very easy thing to do.

Mr. BEGG. How many bookkeepers would it take?

Mr. McKEOWN. It will not take very many bookkeepers, because the debentures will be printed in the form of money.

Mr. BEGG. Will they be negotiable?

Mr. McKEOWN. Of course they will be. If a man goes to buy hogs to-day he will take his debentures with him, and the farmer will have his certificates with coupons on it showing how much is debentured; the farmer presents his coupons for debenture until his certificate is exhausted, when he has to sell products that are debenturable, and takes the market price for the balance of his stuff.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman another very important question to me, in all of these schemes, and this is one of the schemes. Let us say that the gentleman and I are both farmers. Suppose I raise a thousand bushels of wheat and he raises a thousand bushels of wheat. When our harvests are in, the Government has not decided that there is any necessity for this debenture process. I sell my wheat at the market price of $1 a bushel. Two months later it develops that the Government puts in the debenture process, and gives the gentleman $1.25 a bushel for his wheat. Where do I get off?

Mr. McKEOWN. That could not happen under my bill because they must declare before the crop planting season whether or not the crop will be debenturable.

Mr. BEGG. Then this fall they must decide whether there will be a shortage next year?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this discussion is entirely out of order. Under the rules the debate must be confined to the subject before the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAWLEY). The gentleman had unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes out of order.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, no; Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asked unanimous consent to speak out of order and then was yielded 15 minutes at first, and later 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time. That makes a difference. The gentleman will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; I can not yield further.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I wanted to help the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to say to you under this proposed plan instead of levying something on the farmer, instead of the United States going out and going into business, undertaking to fix a false system of economy, undertaking to fix the price of farm products, undertaking to change the economic structure of this country, this simply gives to the farmer a small amount of protection and allows the commerce of the country to consume it, to take it up and it is passed to the consumer, and the proposition is simply turning the tariff around and giving the same thing to the farmer you give to the manufacturer. That is what this system will do, and this costs only the necessary amount to administer it.

Take men in the wheat, cotton, or corn country: It is just the difference between whether they may make a profit or go broke. The man who raises 15,000 bushels of wheat, if he was debentured upon 10,000 bushels of wheat he would receive 42 cents in addition to the market price of his 10,000 bushels. Upon the 5,000 bushels he would receive the market price. The 42 cents on the bushel for 5,000 bushels would be paid into the board at Washington, to be paid back to exporters, thus keeping the export price going as against the domestic price, so they could not take the debenture and beat down the domestic price. It is not an erratic scheme, it is simply turning the tariff, which works so well for the manufacturer, around and applying it to the farmer. Why, the manufacturers on steel goods, they do not import them—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. McKEOWN. No.

My bill is H. R. 11253, and reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11253) to create a Federal farm committee, a Federal farm board to standardize production, issue debentures, levy an excise tax on purchasers of agricultural products, and for other purposes.
Be it enacted, etc.—

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is declared to be the policy of Congress to standardize the production of the basic farm products and to encourage the producers of agricultural products for the general welfare of the United States.

FEDERAL FARM COMMITTEE

SEC. 2. a. There is hereby created and established a Federal farm committee (hereinafter referred to as the committee) to consist of the State presidents of farm organizations and cooperative organizations (whose membership consists wholly of producers) having a bona fide paid membership of not less than 10,000 members in any such State; and the national president of farmers' organizations and cooperative organizations (whose membership consists of producers) where such national organizations have a bona fide State organization in not less than 10 States. The Secretary of Agriculture may designate one member from each of the 12 Federal land bank districts whom he considers to be representative of agriculture.

b. The term of office of each member shall expire one year from the date of the enactment of this act, and vacancies occurring during such period shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. Thereafter successors shall be elected and vacancies shall be filled in accordance with regulations made by the committee with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; the term of office of each individual so selected to expire one year from the date of the expiration of the preceding term.

c. Any member in office at the expiration of the term for which he was elected may continue in office until his successor qualifies.

d. The members of such committee shall be paid a per diem compensation of not exceeding $25 for attending meetings of the committee. Each member shall be paid his traveling expenses to and from the meetings of the committee and his actual expenses while engaged upon the business of the committee.

DUTIES OF COMMITTEE

SEC. 3. a. Meet as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and nominate to the President 12 individuals eligible under section 4 for appointment to the board.

b. Meet thereafter at least twice in each year, in the District of Columbia or at such other time and place designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, or upon a petition duly signed by a manager of the individuals, members, or selected members of the committee at a time and place designated therein.

c. Nominate upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture individuals to fill vacancies occurring in the board.

d. The committee at its semiannual meetings shall determine and fix the "Standard of production" in the United States for the ensuing year of the basic agricultural commodities and shall take into consideration the production of the preceding year, the amount of surplus on hand, the probable requirements for domestic consumption and the foreign demand, and all other available information to determine the "Standard production" per acre based on the acreage of the preceding year and the number of animals marketed in such year as shall be sufficient to meet the domestic requirements at a reasonable price to the consumer, including the excise embodied in section 10 as to make a reasonable return to the producers of such basic agricultural products.

e. To certify the standard of production to the Secretary of Agriculture immediately upon its determination.

f. The Secretary of Agriculture shall designate the temporary presiding officer to preside until the committee at its meeting shall select its permanent chairman.

g. The committee shall adopt written rules of procedure.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

SEC. 4. There is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture a board to be known as the Federal Farm Board and to be composed of said members as follows: Six members, one to be designated as chairman, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; three from the individuals nominated by section 3; one from four individuals nominated by the American Bankers Association; and one from four individuals nominated by the American Federation of Labor; one of his own choice, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

APPOINTMENT AND QUALIFICATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 5. a. The terms of office of the appointed members first taking office after the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President, two at the end of the second year, two at the end of the fourth year, two at the end of the sixth year after the date of the enactment of this act. A successor to an appointed member shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate from the individuals nominated as provided hereinbefore for a term expiring six years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed.

b. Any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

c. Any member in office at the expiration of the term for which he was appointed may continue in office until his successor takes office.

d. Whenever a vacancy occurs in the board, or whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, a vacancy will soon occur, he shall notify the organization entitled to nominate individuals and request that such organization nominate at least four individuals qualified under this section to fill such vacancy, and upon receipt of such nomination he shall submit their names to the President as the nominees for such vacancy.

e. Vacancies in the board shall not impair the power of the remaining number to execute the functions of the board, and a majority of the appointed members constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the board.

f. Each of the appointed members shall be a citizen of the United States, shall not actually engage in other business, vocation, or employment, other than that of serving as a member of the board, and shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, together with all actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while away from the principal office of the board on business required by this act.

GENERAL POWERS OF THE BOARD

SEC. 6. a. Shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia.

b. Shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

c. Shall make an annual report to Congress.

d. May make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in it by this act.

e. May (1) in accordance with the classification act of 1923 fix the salaries of the secretary, expert officers, and employees, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws; (2) make such expenditures (including expenses for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the board and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. All expenditures of the board shall be allowed and paid upon presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman.

SPECIAL POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 7. a. The board shall meet at the call of the chairman at least weekly and at such other times as the chairman deems advisable.

b. The board is authorized to obtain from any available source information in respect to the supply and demand, current receipts, exports, imports, markets, and prices of agricultural commodities, and determine the probable amount required to supply domestic requirements of any such product for the ensuing year, and shall fix the per cent of the "standard of production" of any or all basic agricultural commodities which the producers of said product shall be entitled to receive the debentures, as set forth in section 10, and to certify said decision to the President of the United States to be proclaimed prior to the production season of such products. The board may in any one year determine that the market price of any basic agricultural product is sufficient to return a fair consideration to the producer without the debenture provided in section 10, and in any such event it shall suspend the debenture for such ensuing year on such product, but that such debenture shall not be suspended during the year for which it has been declared.

c. The board shall disseminate any information or analyses or summaries from time to time among cooperative associations and farm organizations and other business interests in the United States.

d. The board shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount of debentures that will be required in any one year, as provided in section 10 of this act, to cover the domestic requirements and foreign exports.

e. The board shall keep a record of all debentures received by it from producers, manufacturers, and exporters, and surrender to the Secretary of the Treasury at such times as required all such debentures received by it from all sources.

DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be issued agricultural debentures in convenient form in the denominations of coins and currency of the United States in the amount certified by the Federal farm board, and shall supply said debentures for sale through internal-revenue collectors, Federal reserve banks, and the Post Office Department. The Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem the debentures from the Federal farm board whenever there are sufficient funds collected from the sale of the same, and at such times as he may designate.

PAYMENT BY DEBENTURE

SEC. 9. During the period in respect of which the President has proclaimed that the producers of any basic agricultural commodity may receive debentures, every purchaser of any such basic agricultural commodity shall deliver to the producer (or to the person making the sale on his account) a debenture for the amount provided in the schedule contained in section 10 herein, in addition to the purchase price agreed upon for the commodity.

SCHEDULE OF DEBENTURES FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS

SEC. 10. a. Cattle weighing less than 1,050 pounds each, 1 cent per pound; cattle weighing 1,050 pounds each or more, 1½ cents per pound; fresh beef and veal, 2 cents per pound; tallow, one-half of 1 cent per pound; oleo oil and oleo stearin, 1 cent per pound.

b. Swine, one-half of 1 cent per pound; fresh pork, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; bacon, hams, and shoulders and other pork prepared or preserved, 2 cents per pound; lard, 1 cent per pound; lard compound and lard substitutes, 1 cent per pound.

c. Oats, rolled, 15 cents per bushel of 32 pounds; unrolled, ground oats, 45 cents per 100 pounds; oatmeal, rolled oats, oat grits, and similar products, 80 cents per 100 pounds.

d. Paddy or rough rice, 1 cent per pound; brown rice, hulled, 1½ cents per pound; milled rice, bran removed, 2 cents per pound; brown rice and rice-mill flour, polished, 1 cent per pound.

e. Wheat, 42 cents per bushel of 60 pounds; wheat flour crushed or cracked, with similar wheat products not specifically provided for, $1 per 100 pounds.

f. Cotton and cotton waste, 5 cents per pound.

g. All tobacco, unstemmed, 35 cents per pound; stemmed, 50 cents per pound.

It shall be the duty of every producer (or the person making sale on his account) to exhibit to the purchaser of any such basic agricultural commodity his certificate showing the amount of the debenture he is entitled to receive before receiving said debentures on said product, and upon the exhibition of said certificate it shall be the duty of said purchaser to deliver said debentures to said producer (or the person making the sale on his account). If the producer (or the person making the sale on his account) has no certificate, the purchaser shall transmit the debenture in the amount set forth in the above schedule to the Federal Farm Board, Washington, D. C., with an itemized statement showing from whom each commodity was purchased, and the amount of the same, within 10 days after the purchase of said commodity. Each purchaser of any agricultural basic product upon which the President's proclamation was issued shall write or stamp upon every letter, memorandum, or account of resale the words "debenture paid."

EXPORT PROVISIONS

SEC. 11. During the period in relation to which the President has proclaimed a debenture period upon any basic agricultural products, there shall be issued upon such debenturable product exported from the United States to the Philippine Islands, Virgin Islands, Guam, and Tutuila, or any foreign country, debentures upon the same article upon which the excise tax has been paid at the same rate, and manufacturers or processors of any such article may receive debentures upon the export of any manufactured or processed products upon the same ratio as such manufactured or processed article exported bears to the whole debentured product purchased for processing or manufacturing.

SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be printed certificates of "Standard production" in blank form and furnish the same to the county agents throughout the United States, or such person designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as agent, whose duty it shall be to open an office in the county seat of each county and give notice that said office will be opened for a period of 60 days prior to the commencement of the production period for the purpose of issuing said certificates of production to individual producers. Individuals desiring to receive the certificates of standard production shall disclose to said agent the amount of acres planted or the number of animals marketed during the past year, and if the individual was not engaged as a producer during the preceding year he shall make known the amount of acres proposed to be planted or the number of animals proposed to be marketed.

It shall be the duty of the board upon the proclamation of the President declaring any basic agricultural product debenturable during the ensuing period to cause blank certificates with coupons to be issued and delivered to such agents in the employ of the United States and the several States in the several counties, to issue to individual producers upon application said certificates with coupons which may be detached by purchasers upon delivery of debentures.

EXCISE TAX ON PURCHASE OF DEBENTURABLE BASIC AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

SEC. 13. (a) Whenever the President shall proclaim all or any of the following basic agricultural products debenturable under this act, there is hereby levied a tax in the nature of an excise upon the purchase for the purpose of resale or processing from the producer of any debenturable product as follows:

Cattle weighing less than 1,050 pounds each, 1 cent per pound; cattle weighing 1,050 pounds or more, 1½ cents per pound; fresh beef and veal, 2 cents per pound.

Swine, one-half of 1 cent per pound; fresh pork, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; other pork cured, prepared, or preserved, 2 cents per pound; lard, 1 cent per pound.

Oats, hulled or unhulled, 15 cents per bushel of 32 pounds; unhulled ground oats, 45 cents per 100 pounds; oatmeal, rolled oats, oat grits, or similar oat products, 80 cents per hundred pounds.

Paddy or rough rice, 1 cent per pound; brown or unhulled rice, 1¼ cents per pound; milled rice (bran removed), 2 cents per pound; broken rice and rice meal, flour, polished, and bran, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

Wheat, 42 cents per bushel of 60 pounds; wheat flour, semolina, crushed or cracked wheat, and similar wheat products not specifically provided, $1.04 per 100 pounds.

Cotton and cotton waste, 5 cents per pound.

Tobacco, unstemmed, 35 cents per pound; stemmed, 50 cents per pound.

Whenever the period for which any of the basic agricultural products is proclaimed debenturable expires this tax is suspended until it shall again be proclaimed debenturable.

(b) Where the method of issuing and retiring debentures or collecting the excise tax imposed is not provided in this act the same shall be done in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

PENAL LAWS

SEC. 14. All the penal laws of the United States relating to "obligations and other security of the United States" shall apply to debenture certificates and debentures issued under this act.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD

SEC. 15. The board is authorized to prescribe rules for the issuing of debentures to exporters, processors, and manufacturers of debenturable agricultural basic products for export.

SEC. 16. The Secretary of Agriculture shall fix the compensation for the performance of the duties of the agents not to exceed $300 per annum.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 17. As used in this act—

(a) The term "committee" means Federal Farm Committee.

(b) The term "board" means Federal Farm Board.

(c) The term "producer" means a person who first makes a sale or other disposition.

(d) The term "basic agricultural product" means wheat, cotton, oats, rice, tobacco, cattle, and swine.

(e) The term "purchaser" means the buyer for resale or processing who first buys from a producer.

(f) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense means continental United States.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 18. If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or invalid the validity of the remainder of the act shall not be affected thereby.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 19. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000 to enable the carrying into immediate effect the provisions of this act.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 20. This act may be cited as the "Agricultural standard act of 1926."

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD].

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I dislike very much to object to my colleague, the distinguished and genial gentleman from New York, who I apprehend is going to discuss a matter in which two gentlemen who were interested this morning were present, and the gentleman knows what happened here. Objection was made to his remarks, and I take it that the gentleman proposes to discuss the same matter. I have assured those gentlemen that they would have that same opportunity if the gentleman made his speech, and I apprehend that is what the gentleman expects to do. Will the gentleman withhold his request until I can communicate with those gentlemen and get them here?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I will say to my friend from Texas that I am not going to make any statement that criticizes either of the Members to whom the gentleman refers. I am going to be very careful in their absence not to make any statement that in any way criticizes the Members to whom he refers. I am going to omit from my statement things that I otherwise might say if they were present.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman if he will withhold his request until I can communicate with those gentlemen, I shall be very much pleased as I do not want to object, but in the present state of affairs I much prefer for the gentleman to withhold his request.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I withhold my request and yield back what time I have not consumed.

Mr. PORTER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to use some time?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. SCHAFER. It is clear there is no quorum here, and I make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Who made the objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not want to have anybody over here make a point of no quorum—

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request in fairness to the membership of the House. Even if the objection were withdrawn I will not speak out of order at this time.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to use more time. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to use some time? If not, let the Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to use more time?

Mr. PORTER. No.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not seem to have anybody—

Mr. PORTER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be paid to Great Britain, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of legal liability of the United States, the sum of $2,000, as full indemnity.

mity for the death of Daniel Shaw Williamson, a British subject, who was killed by a policeman at East St. Louis, Ill., July 1, 1921, as set forth in the message of the President on December 13, 1924, printed as Senate Document No. 172, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11308 had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE NEW YORK STATE REFERENDUM ON LIGHT WINES AND BEER

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement concerning the national prohibition act with respect to the New York State referendum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the form in which the prohibition referendum was voted in the assembly and in the senate of the Legislature of New York for submission at the polls at the election next November is as follows:

Should the Congress of the United States modify the Federal act to enforce the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States so that the same shall not prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, and exportation of beverages which are not in fact intoxicating as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective States.

It was said by a distinguished public official that this proposed referendum in New York is an act of treason. Let me examine that for a moment.

The Constitution of the United States in Article I of the amendments sets forth the following:

Congress shall make no law . . . abridging . . . the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for redress of grievances.

What is the grievance of our people and of our State? On October 28, 1919, Congress passed the Volstead Act and provided that it take effect upon the same day as the eighteenth amendment. On January 29, 1920, the eighteenth amendment took effect. The Volstead Act prohibited for use as beverages all liquors containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. On March 24, 1920, Governor Smith approved what was known as the Walker Act permitting the use of beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight and prohibiting the use of all other beverages containing over one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol.

This was one of the finest temperance acts adopted in the country. It was known on the New York State law books as chapter 910 of the laws of 1920. The people of the State of New York and its officials felt that they had complied with the terms of the Constitution. There is no question about it. They obeyed the Constitution in both spirit and letter. We were under the delusion that within the limits of the Constitution we were still a sovereign State. Our delusion was short lived. On June 7, 1920, the Supreme Court of the United States, 253 United States, in deciding the national prohibition cases, announced a doctrine which was summed up by Justice Clarke in the following words:

The eighth, ninth, and eleventh paragraphs (of the decision) taken together, in effect declare the Volstead Act to be the supreme law of the land, paramount to any law with which it may conflict in any respect.

The result of that decision, because the Volstead Act declared anything over one-half of 1 per cent intoxicating, while the Walker Act declared anything over 2.75 per cent intoxicating, was that the Walker Act was rendered null and void. The sovereign act of the State was destroyed by an act of Congress. Did the Walker Act conflict with the Constitution? No. The Constitution prohibited intoxicating liquors, but did not define a precise alcoholic content as unlawful. The Walker Act conflicted with the Volstead Act. If the Volstead Act had permitted the use of beverages containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol, the Walker Act would still be in full force and effect and the Volstead Act would have been well within the Constitution.

What is the subsequent history? In 1921, under the administration of Governor Miller, the Mullan-Gage Act, an enforcement act concurring word for word with the Volstead Act, was adopted. For two years the officials attempted to enforce it. It was universally disobeyed. Graft, corruption, disgrace, disrespect for law and government, debauchery in public and private life marked the efforts to enforce it on an unwilling public. It crumbled and broke in the jury box. It congested and stagnated the courts. It polluted the police in every section of the State. Homes were invaded. Business enterprises were subjected to search. In all of the history of crime so many search warrants were never before issued. Bands of blackmailers, fake agents, thugs, gunmen, and rascals, posing as officers of the law, reaped a harvest of graft. Infamous secret resorts sprang up. Poisoned liquor was peddled everywhere. The rebellion against the tyranny of the law and the clash between Government officials and liquor-law crimes never ended. Grand juries, under whose eyes passed the consequences of this orgy of crime, blackguardism, and tyranny, petitioned the legislature to repeal the law. In 1923, under the pressure of an overwhelming public demand, the law was repealed.

What is the grievance of the State of New York? Its sovereign law has been destroyed by a national statute. Its power to govern its own citizens in accord with its best judgment has been taken away by Congress. The Constitution does not direct Congress to destroy the sovereignty of each State.

Pressed by a desire to preempt the entire field of prohibition and gain all the glory for itself, Congress reduced the States to mere subordinate agencies bound to follow congressional orders word for word. The proposed referendum in New York State will be in the form of a petition advising the legislature to present the grievance of the State of New York to the National Congress. This is alluded to as an act of treason.

We have the right as a State government to petition Congress for redress of grievances—

First. Because we desire to pass a temperance act along the lines of the Walker Act and can not do so until the tyranny and fanaticism is removed from the Volstead Act by Congress.

Second. As a State government, New York State charges that under the term "concurrent power," the Congress has usurped the entire field of enforcement and interpretation and must, if it maintains its position, take entire responsibility for the disaster to free government that the unmodified Volstead Act is fast bringing on.

Third. As a State government it resents the intrusion into the intimate affairs of its people of agents and petty dictators brought from other sections of the country to intimidate its citizens.

Fourth. As a State government that has safeguarded the health, happiness, lives, and property of the people of the most populous State in the Union until its work stands to the forefront of the civilization of the world, it resents the usurpation by the Federal Government in naming in tyrannical and impractical terms the precise conditions which it will permit the State of New York to observe in an undertaking which should be carried on in a spirit of partnership and not dictatorship.

Fifth. As a State government it has a right to petition Congress to modify the Volstead Act, because a two years' test of the Mullan-Gage act has proven that public funds spent in an effort to enforce it are wasted; that public officials assigned to enforce it are confronted with an impossible task.

Sixth. As a State government it has a right to petition Congress to modify the Volstead Act in the interest of temperance, justice, public order, and private decency.

Upon these and many other grounds of grievance the government of the State of New York has a right to petition the Congress. It has a right, in view of the solemnity and importance of the issue, to ask the people of the State for instruction as to its duty to speak or be silent. It has a right under its own sovereign power as a State to protect its sovereignty against the aggression of the Federal Government.

The constitutionality of the referendum under the constitution of the State of New York is plain. Clearly the Legislature of New York has the power to petition Congress with reference to any subject in which the people of the State have an interest. The State legislatures of all of the States of the country have repeatedly petitioned Congress to take action or to refrain from action on pending policies. Since no one seriously denies the right of the New York State Legislature to petition the National Congress, it is plain and clear that the legislature has a right to ask the people of the State by referendum whether the petition should be filed with Congress as an expression of the will of the State. When the right of petition for redress of grievances is questioned, when dread of the will of the people expressed by ballot in an orderly manner is challenged as an act of treason in free America, it is high time for the people to consider whether tyranny is enjoying too much sanctity in a country created by and for free people.

SEVENTH INTERNATIONAL DENTAL CONGRESS

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 209, entitled "Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign governments to participate in the Seventh International Dental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., August 23 to 28, 1926."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up House Resolution 209. This resolution is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 209. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 209, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 209, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite foreign governments to appoint delegates and otherwise participate in the Seventh International Dental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., August 23 to 28, 1926, under the auspices of the International Dental Federation.

Sec. 2. That the President is hereby further authorized and requested to appoint delegates not in excess of 10 to represent the Government of the United States at the said congress; and for the purpose of meeting the expenses which may be actually and necessarily incurred on account of such representation the appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized.

With committee amendments, as follows:

On page 1, line 8, after the word "federation" insert: ", and for the purpose of meeting the expenses which may be actually and necessarily incurred by the Government of the United States by reason of such invitation in the observance of appropriate courtesies the appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act."

On page 2, line 9, after the word "Congress" strike out "and for the purpose of meeting the expenses which may be actually and necessarily incurred on account of such representation the appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how about the division of time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour if he desires it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. This is a very important matter affecting our foreign relations. I think it ought to be fully discussed.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, as my friend from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has suggested, but I think hardly of sufficient importance to require an hour of debate on either side.

It is an authorization to the President of the United States to extend invitations to foreign governments to send delegates to an international dental congress to be held in Philadelphia.

There have been previously six international dental congresses. The first one was held in Paris in 1889, and upon the invitation of the French Government our Government accepted and sent delegates to attend that conference. The next was held in this country in 1893 in Chicago and was called the "World's Columbian Dental Congress." The next one was held in Paris in 1900. The next one was held in St. Louis in 1904, in connection with the International St. Louis Exposition to commemorate the Louisiana Purchase. The next one was held in 1909 in Berlin. The next one was held in England in 1914. The one held in 1914 in England was cut short by the European war. This coming Congress will be the first international dental conference that has been held since the World War.

To all of these conferences held in foreign countries our Government has accepted invitations and has participated. For the conferences held in this country, in Chicago, and in St. Louis, our Government extended invitations to the foreign governments, which invitations were accepted, and the foreign governments participated. That was all without any need of legislative enactment. But since the last conference held in this country Congress passed an act which provided as follows:

Hereafter the Executive shall not extend or accept any invitations to participate in any international congress, conference, or like event, without first having specific authority of law to do so.

Because of that present statute law it is necessary for the Secretary of State to come to Congress to ask authority to participate in this international conference to be held in Philadelphia and to extend the invitation to foreign countries. The bill is recommended by the State Department.

The committee amendment makes one change from the bill as originally introduced. So far as the dentists in this country are concerned, the members of the different dental organizations throughout the United States, there is no purpose or intent on their part to ask any money from the Federal Government. They all expect to pay, and they all will pay, their own expenses. The way the bill was originally drawn, it might have been construed that a part of the appropriation, which is authorized only for the purpose of the usual courtesies that the Nation extends to visiting delegates from foreign countries, could be used for the expenses of delegates from this country. Therefore the amendment; and the bill as amended, merely authorizes, as asked for by the State Department, our Government to extend this invitation to foreign countries to send delegates to the international conference to be held in Philadelphia in connection with the Philadelphia exposition without any authorization of money excepting that which will be used by our State Department itself in extending courtesies to the foreign delegates.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Can the gentleman assure the House that our adoption of this resolution will not in any way involve us in foreign entanglements of any kind?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I may suggest to the gentleman from Texas that this resolution not only will not involve us in any foreign entanglement but it points out the only way in which our Government could ever have international relations, and that is by special authority in each special instance instead of signing a blank check, which might involve us in the Lord knows what.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Can the gentleman further assure us that this has no connection with the League of Nations?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Assuredly, or the gentleman from New York would not be here advocating it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will an invitation be extended to the Russian Government and the Mussolini Italian Government to send delegates if this resolution is adopted?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I can not say whether it will or not. But we can certainly assume that an invitation will not be extended to any government with which we have no diplomatic relations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite foreign governments to appoint delegates and otherwise participate in the seventh international dental congress to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., August 23 to 28, 1926, under the auspices of the International Dental Federation.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "Federation" insert a semicolon and the following: "and for the purpose of meeting the expenses which may be actually and necessarily incurred by the Government of the United States by reason of such invitation in the observance of appropriate courtesies the appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby further authorized and requested to appoint delegates not in excess of 10 to represent the Government of the United States at the said congress; and for the purpose of meeting the expenses which may be actually and necessarily incurred on account of such representation the appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "congress" strike out the semicolon and the remainder of line 9, and all of lines 10, 11, and 12.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I announced in the course of the brief remarks I made this afternoon I proposed to offer an amendment, but on the assurances of the gentleman from Michigan that no part of this fund will fall into the hands of any of the dentists I will not offer the amendment.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 209) requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign governments to participate in the Seventh International Dental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., August 23 to 28, 1926, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage. The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have clearly a question of personal privilege, but I only want five minutes. I have submitted the matter to the majority leader. I only want five minutes to answer the statement. It is a clear question of privilege with respect to a statement in the press this afternoon, and I would like to have this time either now or I can take it up in general debate.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman take that up afterwards, because there is no opposition to the bill we are going to call up.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the general debate on the next bill to be considered I may have five minutes to speak out of order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will ask five minutes on a question of privilege.

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition from the Speaker in my own right on a question of personal privilege with regard to a matter which the gentleman from New York gave to the press this evening wherein I am charged with making a false statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair very much doubts whether he can entertain a question of privilege on Calendar Wednesday. It has been held repeatedly that Calendar Wednesday is above questions of privilege. It was held by Speaker Clark and by Speaker Cannon that a question of constitutional privilege could not be raised.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would rather I should have five minutes this evening than one hour to-morrow, and I will not ask that if I am given five minutes now.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I am going to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, this court record which I hold in my hand shows that the judgment—

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the Chair hold that a question of personal privilege is not in order on Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The House of Representatives so held, overruling Speaker Cannon in the case of a census bill. In the early days of Calendar Wednesday Speaker Cannon held that a motion presented a question of constitutional privilege and held it in order on Calendar Wednesday. An appeal was taken from his decision, and the House decided that even a question of high constitutional privilege could not be raised on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. BLANTON. But, Mr. Speaker, it has been held that a question of personal privilege is in order at any time. It even displaces a rule.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the ruling the Chair refers to was not a question of privilege, but a question as to whether an issue then raised was a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. No; it was admitted to be a question of high constitutional privilege. Speaker Cannon so held, holding it was in order on Calendar Wednesday, but the House overruled that decision.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The rules as I understand them provide that anything that touches the House or the membership is of the very highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in view of this decision, a decision not of the Speaker but of the House itself, the Chair can not entertain a question of privilege on Calendar Wednesday. Furthermore, the gentleman makes the point that this is a matter of constitutional privilege. Rule IX provides:

Questions of privilege shall be: First, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions except motions to adjourn.

Calendar Wednesday rule provides that—

On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule.

Reading these two rules together it would appear that a question of personal privilege can not be entertained on Calendar Wednesday. The Chair thinks it is fair to say that he thinks it is a bad precedent, but the Chair does not think that he should overturn the decision of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I agree that where there are two rules you have to read them together, but the rule of Calendar Wednesday is not the sweeping rule the Chair would seem to indicate.

Section 656 of the House Manual says:

The clause of the rule giving questions of privilege precedence of all other questions except a motion to adjourn is a recognition of a principle always well understood in the House, for it is an axiom of the parliamentary law that such a question "supersedes" the consideration of the original question and must be first disposed of.

They held that it took precedence of every other kind of business except a motion to adjourn.

The rule with reference to Calendar Wednesday is a rule that merely singles out the kind of legislation that shall be in order on that day. It would not supersede any high question of privilege. It means that on Calendar Wednesday no other business except that called up by the committee under section 4 shall be in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I appreciate that, but the gentleman has agreed to let me have five minutes out of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But this is a higher question than the gentleman's individual question. There is something else before the House, and I would like to have the Chair, if he is not wholly convinced, to withhold his ruling for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer not to rule on the question now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to avoid any further consideration of the matter I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I have stated that I shall object unless I can have five minutes in reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced this morning that he will not entertain a request contingent upon granting another request.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will wait until to-morrow to make my request.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up bill H. R. 11203.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the bill H. R. 11203. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

To amend subsections (c) and (o) of section 18 of an act entitled "An act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service, and for other purposes," approved May 24, 1924.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no general debate, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (c) and (o) of section 18 of the act approved May 24, 1924, entitled "An act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes," be, and the same are, amended so as to read as follows:

"(c) Five per cent of the basic salary of all Foreign Service officers eligible to retirement shall be contributed to the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund, and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed on the date on which this act takes effect to cause such deductions to be made and the sums transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances: Provided, That for the purpose of computing deductions and calculating annuities all basic salaries in excess of $9,000 per annum shall be treated as $9,000.

"(o) Any diplomatic secretary or consular officer who has been or any Foreign Service officer who may hereafter be promoted from the classified service to the grade of ambassador or minister or appointed to a position in the Department of State shall be entitled to all the benefits of the Foreign Service retirement and disability system provided by section 18 of this act in the same manner and under the same conditions as Foreign Service officers; and there shall likewise be entitled to the benefits of this section in the same manner and under the same conditions as Foreign Service officers any ambassador or minister or any Assistant Secretary of State now in the service, who at the time of original appointment to the grade of ambassador or minister or to the position of Assistant Secretary of State was a diplomatic secretary or consular officer, or who at any time prior to such appointment had served for a period of 10 years as diplomatic secretary or consular officer, or in the Department of State, or on special duty under the Department of State, or in any or all of these capacities."

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "on," insert the words "and after."

Page 2, line 19, after the word "of," strike out the words "this section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "said system."

Page 2, line 25, strike out the word "officer" and the comma and insert the word "officer."

Page 3, line 3, strike out the word "officer" and the comma and insert the word "officer."

Page 3, line 3, strike out the word "State" and the comma and insert the word "State."

Page 3, line 4, strike out the word "State" and the comma and insert the word "State."

Line 3, page 5, strike out the quotation marks at the end of the line.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11203 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAN AMERICAN CONGRESS OF JOURNALISTS—VOTE OF THANKS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

PAN AMERICAN UNION,
Washington, D. C., U. S. A., April 17, 1926.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have great pleasure in transmitting to you herewith copy of a resolution adopted by the First Pan American Congress of Journalists.

The reception tendered to the Latin-American members of the congress by the House of Representatives made a deep impression on every one of the distinguished journalists attending the congress, and I am certain that the courtesy shown to our foreign guests by the House of Representatives will have a far-reaching influence on our relations with the nations of Latin America.

I beg to remain, my dear Mr. Speaker,

Very sincerely yours,

L. S. ROWE.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE FIRST PAN AMERICAN CONGRESS OF JOURNALISTS

The Pan American Congress of Journalists adopts a vote of thanks to the Congress of the United States of America for the reception of the delegates and for the generous words of welcome pronounced in both Houses.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4785) entitled "An act to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to complete the acquisition of the land authorized to be acquired by the public buildings appropriation act approved March 4, 1913, for the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park, the Zoological Park, and Potomac Park," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. KING as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments Nos. 46 and 62 to the bill (H. R. 6707) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. JONES of New Mexico as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9685. An act providing for expenses of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia;

S. 549. An act for the relief of John H. Walker;

S. 2274. An act providing for the promotion of a professor at the United States Military Academy;

S. 2752. An act for the purchase of land as an artillery range at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.;

S. 2763. An act to amend section 103 of the Judicial Code, as amended;

S. 3213. An act to provide for the disposition of moneys of the legally adjudged insane of Alaska who have been cared for by the Secretary of the Interior;

S. 3283. An act to provide for the appointment of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, as warrant officers, United States Army;

S. 3287. An act relating to the purchase of quarantine stations from the State of Texas;

S. 3463. An act to extend the time for the exchange of Government-owned lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii;

S. 3627. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State; and

S. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to allot war trophies to the American Legion Museum.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9341. An act making appropriations for the Executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes;

H. R. 120. An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including the District Court of Hawaii, the District Court of Porto Rico, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 5858. An act for the relief of Charles Ritzel; and

H. R. 6874. An act for the relief of James Madison Brown.

H. R. 8192. An act authorizing the designation of postmasters by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of contractors, emergency carriers, and temporary carriers, for performance of authorized service on power boat and star routes in Alaska.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6707) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate, and appoint the conferees.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is this a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is a privileged motion.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And does not require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Has the gentleman spoken to the minority member of the conference?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I have not.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Who is the ranking minority member?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. Of course, he will be consulted before we go into the conference.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not like to hold up a conference, but I think that is a courtesy that is due the minority.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can withdraw the request, if the gentleman desires to do so. There is no urgency about it. It can be taken up in the morning.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Very well, I wish the gentleman would do that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion.

FREIGHT RATES ON KENTUCKY COAL

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by placing therein my own remarks upon the subject of the Pittsburgh Coal Operators' Association against the Ashland Coal & Iron Railway Co. et al., now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, the public is vitally interested as to what the final result will be in the controversy between the Pittsburgh Coal Operators Association, the Pittsburgh Vein Operators Association, of Ohio, and other organizations, called plaintiffs, against the Ashland Coal & Iron Railway, the Chesapeake & Ohio, Norfolk & Western, Louisville & Nashville, Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, and New York Central and other railroads, called defendants, now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Much has been said both in this House and in the Senate of the United States as to the contention of the parties and probable results that would follow if the plaintiffs' demands should be granted. The acts of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been assailed in denying plaintiffs' demands. In defense of the action of the committee and in opposition to a reopening of this case, I desire to make a brief statement.

About 18 months ago the plaintiffs instituted proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission against the defendants, the Ashland Coal & Iron Railway Co., and others, including the railroad companies named above, asking the commission for a reduction in freight rates on their coal shipped from their mines to the Lake Erie ports at Toledo and Sandusky, ranging from 11 to 28 cents per ton. The plaintiffs also asked the commission to increase the freight rates on coal shipped by the defendants from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia to the Lake Erie ports at Toledo and Sandusky from approximately 28 to 40 cents additional per ton over the existing rate now in force, notwithstanding the fact that the existing rates paid by the defendants, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia operators were then and are now from 25 to 40 cents more on each ton of coal shipped to these ports than is paid by Pennsylvania and the Ohio districts to the same ports. If this increase asked for by the plaintiffs had been granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia operators would have been forced to pay a freight rate ranging approximately from 53 to 84 cents more per ton on coal shipped to these ports than the operators of the Pittsburgh and Ohio districts would have had to pay for coal shipped to the same ports.

If this increase had been granted, there could have been but one result, the Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia operators would have been forced out of the market, and then the purchasers of this coal in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Chicago, and other cities and States would have been at the mercy of the Pittsburgh and Ohio operators, and the price of coal would have gone up, and the people of the Northwest would have been forced to pay an exorbitant price for their coal; and if the plaintiffs' further request for a reduction of freight rates of from 11 to 28 cents per ton had been granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission on coal shipped by them, and had granted plaintiffs' request for an additional increase in freight rates ranging from approximately 28 to 40 cents per ton on the coal shipped by the defendants, they would have had a differential in rates in their favor over the defendants over the present rates of from approximately 64 cents to $1.12 per ton.

In 1917 the Interstate Commerce Commission increased the rates on coal shipped to these ports from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia, ranging from 25 to 40 cents per ton over the rates charged per ton on coal shipped from Pittsburgh and Ohio district to the same ports. This rate has existed since 1917 and exists to-day; but, not satisfied with this, plaintiffs are asking an additional increase as against the defendants and a decrease in favor of themselves, so that the differential contended for by the plaintiffs, considering the present rate, the increase on defendants' coal requested, and decrease in rates on plaintiffs' coal asked for would equal approximately 99 cents on $1.52 per ton. If plaintiffs' prayer had been granted, all competition would have been ended at the expense of the public, with disastrous results to business, to the employer and employee, as will be hereafter shown.

The Interstate Commerce Commission had before it for consideration the question here presented for about one year and a half; it had numerous sittings and hearings—heard patiently all the evidence and argument of council for and against the plaintiffs' contention, and after due consideration of all the facts the commission, on July 16, 1925, rendered its decision denying the plaintiffs' petition and leaving the parties where it found them at the time of the institution of this proceeding, which leaves in force the rates fixed in 1917, with a differential in freight rates in favor of plaintiffs as against defendants ranging from 25 to 40 cents per ton. Not satisfied with the final decision of the Interstate Commerce Board, the plaintiffs are again attempting to get a reopening of the case and a reversal of the decision by the board.

I am constrained to believe that this board, as a court created to dispense justice and do equity to all concerned, will not disturb its finding, unless it decides to take off the existing differential of from 25 to 40 cents per ton and allow the defendants to enter these markets on equal terms with the plaintiffs, which as a matter of justice and right they should be allowed to do. The plaintiffs attempt to reach the end desired by the destruction of the business of the operators in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia who depend on this trade, by forcing them out of the market, by making the freight rates so high that the defendants can not compete with the plaintiffs in the price of coal sold at these ports on the open market. To accomplish this, the plaintiffs call upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel the great transportation companies against their will to charge and accept a higher freight rate on coal shipped by defendants to the Lake ports to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission at a sum suggested by the plaintiffs themselves.

I want to call attention to the fact that the railroads carrying this coal to this market are not asking for an increase in freight rates, but have joined with the consumers, shippers, and coal operators of these States protesting against this unreasonable attempt on the part of the plaintiffs to induce the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise the freight rates on their lines of railroads:

First. Because it would be unfair to the railroads which carry this coal to market to these ports from the four States mentioned.

Second. Because it would be unfair to the consumers of coal who buy at these ports on the open market.

Third. Because it would be unjust to shippers and coal operators who ship coal to this market.

Fourth. Because it would be unjust and unfair to the miners and laborers who produce this coal.

On the first proposition I want to urge that the railroads, including the defendants, the Chesapeake & Ohio, the Norfolk & Western, the Louisville & Nashville, which carry this coal to market, are not asking a freight increase, but are opposing it. They knew, as a good business proposition, that if the rates were increased, as demanded by plaintiffs, that no coal could be shipped from the four States named over their lines to this market, and they would therefore lose the freight which they are now receiving, and their business to that extent would be destroyed; they therefore feel that they would rather carry the coal to this market at a reasonable rate than to not carry it at all, and, from a business standpoint, they oppose the proposed increase in freight rates on coal shipped to this market over their lines from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia.

On the second proposition, it would be unfair to the consumers of coal in the Northwest to place a freight rate on coal shipped from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia so high as to prohibit the shipment of coal into that market from these States, and thus destroy competition and place the consumers of coal in that country at the mercy of the coal operators from Pennsylvania and Ohio. This is contrary to the spirit of American institutions. Nevertheless, if plaintiffs' contention should be sustained, this condition would result, and to prevent this the consumers of coal from that section of the country have likewise protested to the Interstate Commerce Commission against the increase of the proposed freight rate urged by the plaintiffs in this case.

On the third proposition, to grant plaintiffs' demand would be unfair and unjust to the operators who ship coal to this market over the lines of railroad mentioned, because it would, beyond question, drive them from this market, and on failure to secure markets elsewhere at a reasonable profit their mines would be compelled to close down, as at least one-half of the mines have done already in these States within the last three or four years, notwithstanding they had access to this market. I desire to say further that I live in the coal section of Kentucky from whence a large quantity of coal is shipped into the market in question under the existing rates, and I can say as a fact that I know no mines in either of the States mentioned that have made a noticeable profit within the last three years. Some of them have run at a loss. A great many have failed and gone into the hands of receivers and into bankruptcy. Scores have been sold for less than 20 per cent of the investment, and to compete with the plaintiffs in the market in question it is necessary to produce coal from 25 to 50 cents on the ton cheaper than plaintiffs produce it in order to meet the differential in the existing freight rates, and as matters now stand we are face to face with this situation:

The consumer in the Northwest comes to the producer of southern West Virginia, eastern Kentucky, Tennessee, or Virginia and says to him, "I am in the market for 1,000,000 tons of coal for the year 1926. I can buy this coal in Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee, or Kentucky, but if I buy this coal in Pennsylvania or Ohio I save from 25 to 43 cents per ton on freight rates. Ohio and Pennsylvania have good coal, and coal that I can use and that will be satisfactory. Can and will you make me a price on your coal that will enable me to buy this coal in competition with coal from Ohio and Pennsylvania, and will you in doing this make a price whereby you will absorb the difference in the freight rates?" The coal operators in West Virginia, Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee can not sell their coal unless they absorb this disadvantage in freight rates. To get the business at all they must show that they have coal of equal or better quality; that they can give equal or better preparation and shipping service, and that they must make a price, including freight rate, that will be as attractive, if not more attractive, than the prices made by shippers in Pennsylvania and Ohio. Not only do the producers in West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia have freight-rate differentials against them in the Lake cargo region, but they have differentials against them in practically all the consuming markets, and in order to meet this competition the coal producers in these States, in order to do business at all, have had the necessity of using the greatest economies in their mining operations in order to be in a position to meet and survive this competition, and to increase this differential to from 53 to 83 cents on the ton higher than the rates from plaintiffs' coal field to this market would be a denial of the market to these four States because the operators of the four States could not produce this coal so as to sell it in this market except at a loss.

The result would be a surrender of this market, and probably a surrender of this operation, which would mean a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars of invested capital. The railroads which built into this great coal field within the last 25 years at a cost of many million dollars, to carry this coal to market, would cease to operate, and the money loss to them and the coal operators could not be figured in dollars and cents. This is a condition that could be brought about if plaintiffs' contention should prevail.

On the fourth proposition I desire to say that it presents a more serious question viewed from humanitarian standpoint than either of the others. The coal beds of Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia are located in the hilly sections of these four States where the sole industry upon which these communities depend is the production, transportation, and shipping of coal. The country is so mountainous and rough that agriculture and stock raising as a means of support is practically impossible. The timber resources were substantially exhausted years ago, and the result is that the coal operators and coal miners have worked hand in hand for the last few years to put themselves in position where they and their families can survive and live in spite of the handicap of existing freight differentials, although almost one-half of the mines in this section have been closed down since 1921 and many others running without a profit. What does it mean to the people of this section of these four States for the mines to run full time? It means everything; it means better clothes, better food, better schools, a better education for the coming generations, more churches, more happiness, better homes, better furniture in the homes, a better spirit, a better feeling, a better and more determined citizenship; it means that the homes built in the hills which cost the operators millions of dollars will be brighter and will so remain.

It means that the excellent schoolhouses built and maintained in the splendid mining towns will continue to open their doors to the thousands of happy children attending school eight and nine months of the year who are given an equal chance for an education. It means that the churches will continue to open their doors for divine service. It means life itself. Who would destroy such conditions? Who would take away the chance of over 100,000 laboring men to do an honest day's work and receive an honest day's wage which will enable him to feed and clothe over 500,000 dependents, including women and children? Who would drive this industry out and empty these houses, close up the schools and churches, and close down the mines? They that ask for a freight rate so high that the coal can not be produced, shipped, and sold at a profit on the market in competition with like coal from more favored sections. Who suffers most when the mines close? The man of toll and his wife and children. In justice to the working-man conditions should be such that he can be assured of a living wage. He is entitled to this, he ought to have it, and the operator assured of a fair return on his investment. He is entitled to that and ought to have it. If the rates sought to be applied as requested by the plaintiffs prevail in the case now before the Interstate Commerce Commission, this unhappy condition may arise, provided another market could not be found for the coal mined and shipped from these States.

Much has been said about Federal control and fact-finding committees, and various suggestions have been made, but so far as the coal producers are concerned the facts are easily found; they are known to all the operators of the United States and are known to most all the business men of the country. Government ownership or Government control has been frequently mentioned by those who are not informed as to the coal industry. Labor has never favored Government ownership or control of the coal industry or of the railroads of this country. Samuel Gompers, one of the great leaders of labor, said in a speech at Montreal, Canada, in June, 1920:

I believe there is no man to whom I would take second position in my loyalty to the Republic of the United States, and yet I would not give it more power over the individual citizenship of our country.

It is a question of whether it shall be Government ownership or private ownership under control. If I were in the minority of one in this convention, I would want to cast my vote so that the men of labor shall not willingly enslave themselves to Government authority in their individual effort for freedom.

Hon. William N. Doak, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in a speech delivered over the radio in Washington, some months ago, said:

This plan [Government ownership] should be opposed for many reasons, but if for no other because it is detrimental to the best interest of the employees.

The proposed plan of Government ownership applies not only to the railroads but also to other utilities, including coal mines, etc. If this program goes through it will ultimately be extended to the farms, mills, factories, and other industries, resulting in a super-government which will control all the activities of the country. This is not a theory; it is a fact in Russia, where this program is in full force and where nationalization is fully effected.

The foregoing arguments apply to the coal industry as well as railroads. Therefore the cry for Government ownership or control of the coal industry is rightfully opposed by both the operators and employees, and such agitation is only calculated to create an unsettled condition in this great industry, with no good results.

What the operators and employees want most is to be let alone, and be not disturbed in their pursuit of this industrial enterprise, because such agitation does much to retard and hinder the industry which is already having the battle of its life for existence. In addition to the differentials above referred to the operators from these States, and especially in the immediate section where I live, are further handicapped by rates on equipment shipped to them for the mines and higher rates on passengers brought in to labor for them than are paid by other sections more favorably situated, amounting annually to thousands and thousands of dollars, all of which goes into the expense of the operators in the production of coal. This, coupled with the rate agitation year after year, has done a great injury to this industry upon which so many are dependent for a living, causes men with capital to hesitate to invest in such enterprises.

For the reasons stated I hope the increase in freight rates asked by the plaintiffs will not be granted and their request to reopen the case will be denied.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 22, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

SETTLEMENT OF CZECHOSLOVAK REPUBLIC DEBT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 6777) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Czechoslovak Republic to the United States of America was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 3, the bill (S. 1134) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Czechoslovak Republic to the United States of America, a bill exactly similar to the House bill just laid before the Senate, be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill be placed upon the calendar as Order of Business No. 3 in its place.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, what is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks that a House bill be substituted for a Senate bill on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is proposing now to indefinitely postpone the Senate bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it identical with the House bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Word for word.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall not make any objection, but I suggest to the Senator that when the House bill is ready for consideration we might proceed with that bill and, when it is disposed of, indefinitely postpone the Senate bill. However, if the Senator desires to proceed the other way, I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be better to proceed as I have suggested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, House bill 6777 will be substituted on the calendar for Senate bill 1134 and Senate bill 1134 will be indefinitely postponed.

SETTLEMENT OF ESTHONIAN DEBT

The bill (H. R. 6775) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Esthonia to the United States of America was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the House bill be substituted on the calendar as Order of Business No. 4 for the bill (S. 1135) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Esthonia to the United States of America, and I ask that Senate bill 1135 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

SETTLEMENT OF LATVIAN DEBT

The bill (H. R. 6776) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Government of the Republic of Latvia to the Government of the United States of America was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 6776 be substituted on the Senate calendar for Order of Business No. 7, the bill (S. 1138) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Government of the Republic of Latvia to the Government of the United States of America, and that Senate bill 1138 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SETTLEMENT OF RUMANIAN DEBT

The bill (H. R. 6772) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Rumania to the United States of America was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 6772 be substituted on the Senate calendar for Order of Business No. 8, the bill (S. 1139) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Rumania to the United States of America, and that Senate bill 1139 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SETTLEMENT OF ITALIAN DEBT

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business No. 5, the bill (S. 1136) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America, be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I made no objection to the request of my colleague, because I hoped that he would not bring up for consideration any of the bills from the House this morning. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has been compelled to be in attendance on a committee and will not be here before 2 o'clock. He wanted to be here when the other measures were taken up; so I did not object to the request of my colleague, hoping that he would not press for consideration of the other bills until after 2 o'clock. I promised the Senator from Missouri that I would present the matter to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that it is expected that the committee of managers from the House of Representatives will present resolutions of impeachment to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. At 2 o'clock; and that will take only about an hour. Do I understand my colleague to ask that we do not take up House bill 6774, for the settlement of the Belgian debt, which was made the unfinished business last night?

Mr. KING. Yes; I make the request that none of the measures to which attention has just been called be taken up until after 2 o'clock. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is compelled to be in attendance upon the Appropriations Committee. I have no objection, speaking for myself, to taking up these measures after 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 6559, for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT. I am trying to accommodate the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and every other Senator.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that we proceed until 2 o'clock with the call of the calendar under Rule VIII and consider bills to which there is no objection, beginning where we left off the last time the calendar was called. That is about the only thing we can do under the circumstances.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the number at which consideration is to begin?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Order of Business 480. The clerk will state the first order of business.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 6) for the relief of Addison B. McKinley was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIS. Will not the Senator from Utah permit the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

BATHING BEACHES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6556) for the establishment of artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill—I assume the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is in charge of the bill—where the bathing pools are to be located?

Mr. COPELAND. The exact location has not yet been determined, but it will be on property owned by the District.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. On what water?

Mr. COPELAND. The Potomac River.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over. The sum of $345,000 is too much money to appropriate for this purpose.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the bill draws any distinction between white and colored people in the use of the proposed bathing pools?

Mr. COPELAND. It does. Two pools are provided for, the one for the colored people being one-half the size of that for the white people. Let me say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that this bill has been given very careful consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. But there is nothing in the bill which provides that there shall be separate pools for white and colored persons.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from North Carolina will read the report on the bill, I think his objection will be met.

Mr. OVERMAN. The report seems to be all right, but I am talking about the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The bill provides for two entirely separate pools, one for the white people with a capacity for 2,000 bathers and one for the colored people with a capacity for 1,000 bathers. The bathers are not to go into the Mirror Pool. This bill was given such thorough study by the District Committee I hope there will be no objection to its passage. I think it should be passed as soon as possible, because if we are to get any benefits from the bathing pools this year the construction ought to begin at once.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should it cost $345,000 to construct these pools? That is an enormous amount of money to appropriate for bathing pools.

Mr. COPELAND. The pools provided for are very large.

Mr. OVERMAN. Are these pools to be like the bathing pools of Rome?

Mr. COPELAND. No. The District Committee realized that there was not enough money in the United States to build pools such as those. These are to be built of concrete.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over and we can confer about it.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say that I have the assurance of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that there is in contemplation the separation of the two races in the use of the bathing facilities.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the Senator from New York is all right; I have every confidence in him; but he will not have the authority to construct these pools and arrange for the bathers; that will be a matter which will be left to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. There ought to be some language in the bill requiring that the pools be separate.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from North Carolina has confidence in the Senator from New York, who happens to be chairman of the subcommittee on health of the District Committee, let him evince that confidence by relying on the Senator from New York to see that what he suggests is brought about; and if there shall be any hesitation upon the part of the District authorities, I will promise the Senator to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. After the bill shall become a law, what would be the use of bringing the matter to the Senate? What can the Senator from New York then do? Mr. President, I think I will ask that the bill may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 481, being the bill (H. R. 6556) for the establishment of artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia. I have an amendment to offer which will meet the objection of my friend from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I offer an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "District of Columbia" and the comma, to insert "one for the white race and the other for the colored race."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the words "District of Columbia" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "one for the white race and the other for the colored race," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to locate and construct, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park Commission, and to conduct and maintain two artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia, one for the white race and the other for the colored race, with suitable buildings, shower baths, lockers, provisions for the use of filtered water, purification of the water, and all things necessary for the proper conduct of such pools or beaches. The Commission of Fine Arts shall be consulted as to the location and construction of said pools or beaches. The cost of these pools or beaches, with buildings and equipment, shall not exceed $345,000, and the appropriation of such sum for the purposes named is hereby authorized. No part of the sums appropriated for the purposes of this act shall be expended in the purchase of land and the pools or beaches herein provided for shall be located upon lands acquired or hereafter acquired for park, parkway, or playground purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3641) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. On behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], I ask that that bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

RETIREMENT OF DISABLED WORLD WAR OFFICERS

The bill (S. 3027) making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I desire to say that that bill has been on the calendar for some time, and I now wish to give notice that I shall ask for its consideration at an early day.

HOME CARE FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN

The bill (H. R. 7669) to provide home care for dependent children was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, that bill has been on the calendar now for many weeks. I am very anxious to secure action upon it at as early a date as possible.

Mr. BRUCE. Does the Senator from Kansas desire me to withdraw my objection to the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It is the mothers' aid bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. KING. I am for the bill, as I understand it, but the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], I think, is very much opposed to it. I do not like to take advantage of his absence, though, as I have stated, I am for the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Senator from New York is opposed to the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. We should not take the bill up in the absence of the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. I have stated that I am for the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. I was not aware that the Senator from New York was absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that Order of Business No. 495, being the bill (H. R. 7669) to provide home care for dependent children, was passed over owing to my absence from the Chamber a few moments ago. I did not realize that the calendar had been taken up or I should have been present. I have consulted with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and it is entirely agreeable to him that I make the request that the Senate recur to that bill and that it be considered now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will recur to Order of Business No. 495.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is debate limited to five minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is proceeding with the call of the calendar under Rule VIII, and debate is limited to five minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator think that we can consider this bill under the five-minute rule?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to experiment with it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think we will gain anything by undertaking to consider it under that rule. It is a very important bill and it will take more time to consider it than can be given to it under Rule VIII. I have no objection to it being taken up in order that the Senator from New York may speak, but I do not think it can be acted upon now unless unanimous consent can be given to allow more time to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time can be extended upon motion, and the five-minute rule abrogated.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, would it not be of advantage, and put the bill that far ahead, if under the five-minute rule the Senator from New York could explain at least the amendments which he has in mind and his objection to the bill as it stands?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I attempt an explanation, at least, under the five-minute rule?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator does that I do not want to be understood as waiving any objection to sending the bill over. I am familiar with the bill to some extent, and I am satisfied we can not discuss it and consider it properly in the time limited. I have no objection to the Senator making his explanation; but in the event that we can not dispose of it under the five-minute rule, I do not want to be understood as waiving my objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly not.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, of course I will be compelled to ask that the bill go over. It is a very important bill, as the Senator knows, and it involves very sharp differences of opinion. I think what we ought to do is to have a unanimous-consent agreement with reference to it and have it set down for consideration on some particular day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing would please me better, and I am sure nothing would please the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] better than that.

Mr. BRUCE. That is what I understood.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is very difficult, in view of the situation which has existed during the last month, and which probably will persist for two or three weeks more, to get at this bill, and it should be acted upon. The only hope of consideration is in the morning hour on some day. I hesitate to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill now, because I know that many Senators are interested in other bills upon the calendar which they desire disposed of practically by unanimous consent. That being the case, Mr. President, I can see that it would be quite useless to indulge in a discussion of the measure, but I hope to consult with the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Maryland and ascertain if we can not get action on this bill.

Mr. BRUCE. I think we can arrange it. I will be only too glad to have that done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is only one point at issue, and it is purely a question of administration. The principle back of the bill arouses no difference of opinion, I think.

Mr. BRUCE. I will be very glad to have an agreement entered into for the consideration of the bill and also limiting the time of discussion on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection the bill will go over.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL LEASING ACT

The bill (H. R. 7372) to amend section 27 of the general leasing act, approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 437), was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill be read, please, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to this bill, and I have not even had an opportunity to read the report. I should like to have it go over to-day in order that I may be able to read the report.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. STANFIELD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico. Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have no special interest in this bill, but I believe if the Senator from Utah understood it he would make no objection to its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. As I have said, I have not had time to read the report on the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I can state in a few words the purpose of the bill. Under the general leasing act of 1920 it is provided that no person shall have more than three leases in any one State. That has been construed to mean even if a lease consisted of only 20 acres or 40 acres, that such a lease shall constitute one-third of the right to lease in the State. This bill is intended to amend the law so as to carry into effect the original intention, that the lessee might in any given State have three leases of 2,560 acres each, and the bill bases the amount of land which can be held under leases in a State on area instead of on the number of leases. That is the only change the bill makes.

Mr. BORAH. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. BORAH. Has the bill been unanimously reported?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The bill has been unanimously reported, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the bill propose to make any other change in existing law than that with reference to the acreage which may be embraced in the leases?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It makes no change except that instead of the number of leases which may be held in a State it fixes the number of acres to conform to what was the original intention of the act of 1920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire the further reading of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; I am satisfied with the explanation which has been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 27 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 437), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold coal, phosphate, or sodium leases or permits during the life of such leases or permits in any one State exceeding in aggregate acreage 2,560 acres for each of said minerals; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold at one time oil or gas leases or permits exceeding in the aggregate 7,680 acres granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than 2,560 acres within the geologic structure of the same producing oil or gas field; and no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold at one time any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease or leases, permit or permits, under the provisions hereof, which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease or leases, permit or permits, under this act, or which together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease or leases, permit or permits, under the provisions hereof for any kind of mineral leases hereunder, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee or permittee under this act. Any interests held in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any ownership or interest forbidden in this act which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18, 18a, 19, and 22 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines of railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal or to increase the acreage which may be acquired or held under section 17 of this act: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same: And provided further, That if any of the lands or deposits leased under the provisions of this act shall be subleased, trusted, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form a part of, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, with consent of lessee, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, or sodium entered into by the lessee, or any agreement or understanding, written, verbal, or otherwise to which such lessee shall be a party, of which his or its output is to be or become the subject, to control the price or prices thereof or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, or control, in excess of the amounts of lands provided in this act, the lease thereof shall be forfeited by appropriate court proceedings."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM FRIES

The bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of the estate of William Fries, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be re-committed to the Committee on Claims, in view of certain information which has been submitted to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be taken from the calendar and re-committed to the Committee on Claims.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR WESTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The bill (S. 1490) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the western district of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I interposed an objection to this bill the last time it was reached on the calendar. I have since discussed the matter with my colleague and we have gone over the bill together. I am in full accord with it and so wish to withdraw the objection which I have interposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that on April 10 last the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether the situation calls for an additional judge? We have been creating them not by the pairs, but 25 additional judges were created a short time ago, and now we are about to lift the floodgates and create a large number of additional judicial districts and appoint additional judges.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill provides for an additional judge for the western district of New York. Not within my knowledge has any suggestion been made for an additional judge in that district until the last four or five years, during which period the situation has become exceedingly acute.

The district is growing in population very rapidly. It includes the city of Buffalo and the manufacturing towns up and down the Niagara frontier. It includes the city of Rochester, and, as I recall, 14 populous counties. There is but one judge there now.

It is the universal opinion of the members of the bar that the Federal district judge in that district at present is terribly overworked. I think I have never known a public officer so driven as is Judge Hazel, of the western district of New York. Literally, he never gets a day off. The court is having extraordinary difficulty in keeping up with its docket. Of course, the number of cases has increased tremendously. We must remember that the western district of New York is on the frontier, as it were, the Canadian border, marked by the Niagara River. The complications there with respect to the enforcement of the prohibition law and the narcotic law are acute beyond the average. There is a letter, made a part of the report of the Judiciary Committee, written by Judge Hazel himself; and I may say that in addition to that the United States attorney of that district, Mr. Templeton, also wrote a letter, which I handed to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, confirming what Judge Hazel says.

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to Judge Hazel's letter, which is found in the report. He says, in part:

Even before prohibition there was always considerable criminal business, and that, added to the common-law cases, patents, and admiralty pretty well filled up the time of the court; but since the national prohibition act passed nearly three weeks of each term of court are taken up with the disposal of cases of that description, including, of course, smuggling liquor cases now and then. United States Attorney Templeton informs me that there are about 1,500 liquor cases on the docket wherein pleas of not guilty have been entered—cases that ought to be tried speedily—and there are thought to be about 600 pending before the United States commissioners in which informations are to be filed. In this district there are six terms of court held in different localities—two regular terms at Buffalo, one at Rochester, Canandaigua, Elmira, and Jamestown, and it happens not infrequently that one term of court continues until another commences.

One can see from that statement the pressure under which the Federal judge is placed in this situation.

Special terms for trial of criminal cases have been held by judges from New York, Vermont, and New Hampshire at different times while I was engaged in civil work. It is not only the trial of prohibition cases but arraignments to plead, which occur frequently, and motions to quash search warrants for illegal searches and seizures, and motions to return automobiles unlawfully seized, which take up considerable time.

I may interpose there the observation, which I think the Senator from Utah will understand; that in a very large degree we have converted our Federal courts into police courts.

These matters mostly come up each week on the regular motion day, but they are often continued to other days for one reason or another. This, of course, tends to delay other trials and decisions. In patent cases, for example, testimony is taken in open court and often a week or two are required for these hearings. And so it is with admiralty—most of my time during the month of February having been given up to the latter.

I think it should be understood, also, that the Department of Justice recommended an additional judge several years ago, and so has the conference of circuit judges, held at Washington last September, and bar associations throughout the district have passed resolutions asking for the appointment of an additional judge for the western district.

I have been reading from the letter of Judge Hazel. I have also received a letter from the presiding judge of the circuit court of appeals of the district urging very strongly that relief be granted to the western district of New York. The Judiciary Committee has examined into the matter very carefully and has reported this bill, I believe, unanimously.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I wish merely to say to the Senator from Utah that there is nothing exceptional or unusual about this application of the Senator from New York for the appointment of another judge in his State. There is pending at the present time a very considerable number of similar applications, and so far as I have been able to ascertain the necessity for those applications has been brought about wholly or in the main by the workings of the Volstead Act.

Of course, whatever we may think of the Volstead Act, I conceive it to be our duty, so long as that act is upon the statute books, to see that there is the proper number of judges to administer its provisions. Nobody would have anything but a feeling of contempt for the President of the United States or for any executive or judicial official of the United States who did not discharge the full measure of his duty in relation to that act as to every other Federal act.

It so happens that I find myself in the same situation as the Senator from New York. An application has been made by the present Federal judge of the district of Maryland—Judge Soper, a very able, faithful, and conscientious judge—for the appointment of an associate. He finds that cases arising under the Volstead Act have assumed such large proportions that he is unable unaided to dispose of the business of his court. He is, I believe, a year and a half behind with his calendar, and in a recent letter written to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] he states that one-half of all the time of his court might be properly devoted to the hearing of cases arising under the Volstead Act alone. So, feeling that it was but due to him and to the administration of justice that he should have all the judicial assistance that his office required, I, too, as the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee knows, made an application for the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Maryland under precisely the same circumstances as those under which the Senator from New York is making his application.

I should like to add in this connection that if any Member of the Senate has any curiosity about the exigencies as respects the services of judges created by the practical workings of the Volstead Act, all he has to do is to look at a series of letters, recently published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, addressed to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] by judges in different portions of this country, telling just how far they were overburdened by business imposed upon them by the administration of the Volstead Act. Indeed, it is a very interesting fact that in one case the responsibilities imposed upon a judge—the judge of the district of Minnesota—by that act proved so onerous that he took his own life, leaving behind him a note saying that he had hoped to be able to end all the liquor and narcotic cases before him, but that he had found that they had ended him.

But, as I say, we have no choice. Law is law in the courts if nowhere else. Whoever else may disregard it, it can not be disregarded by its own ministers. Therefore, I hope that in the light of the considerations that I have suggested, if no others, this bill will receive the approval of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee I think I ought to say that we have given this and all other cases in which bills have been introduced for additional judges the most careful consideration; and our course is determined by the state of the business in the particular district.

In the western district of New York it is utterly impossible for any judge to do the business that comes before that court for disposition. The cases are accumulating from month to month and from year to year, and it is such a denial of justice as shocks the moral sense of anyone who examines the situation. We will have to add a great many judges if we intend to administer the laws as they are now before us. There is no doubt whatever about the great and pressing need of an additional judge in the western district of New York.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the chairman of the Judiciary Committee will report a bill repealing a multitude of little petty cases that are denominated misdemeanors and come within the cognizance of Federal control, and I hope that he will oppose a lot of the bills before us that create more Federal offenses.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much in favor of restricting some of the jurisdiction of district judges; but, even if we did that, if we went to any length that it is reasonable to suppose we will go, there nevertheless is still a necessity for additional district judges, but not altogether on account of the Volstead Act. It is because of the accumulation, the development, the growth of business in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COTTON AND GRAIN FUTURES

The bill (S. 454) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let that go over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Louisiana will agree that at some near date this matter may be considered.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be very glad to discuss the matter at any date in the future we can agree on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the Senator have any objection to the bill being taken up for consideration immediately after the disposition of the public buildings bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know that I would like to agree to that. I do not want to interfere with the program here. Personally, I would not have any special objection. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I shall be very glad to get a vote on this proposition. I want to discuss it quite fully. I think it is going to take a good while to discuss it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will discuss it with the Senator, then, without delaying the business of the Senate, because I want to get some kind of action on it soon.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that I shall be very glad indeed to have it discussed and voted on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2584) to promote the development, protection, and utilization of grazing facilities on public lands, to stabilize the range stock-raising industry, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NICK MASONICH

The bill (S. 2348) for the relief of Nick Masonich was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the general manager of the Alaska Railroad is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriations for said railroad, to be reimbursed by transfer of funds from the United States employees' compensation fund, to Nick Masonich, who was disabled by personal injury sustained while in the performance of his duty as a member of a station gang employed by the Alaskan Engineering Commission, the respective monthly amounts that would have been allowable under provisions of the United States employees' compensation act had he been an employee of said commission receiving wages at the rate of $100 per month at the time of injury.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will state for the benefit of the Senate that this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. WALSH], asking that this man, Masonich, should be allowed to come under the compensation act. He was injured while employed on the Alaska Railroad as a workman, and the compensation board held that he did not come strictly within the meaning of the term because of the fact that he contracted to do some of the work that he was doing rather than to be on day's pay; but the reason why the work was let out in that way was so that they would get more work out of the workmen. He was to all intents and purposes a workman working upon this railroad, just the same as if he had been getting his day's pay, and this is simply to avoid a strict legal interpretation placed upon it. This man lost both of his eyes in a blast, and was otherwise seriously injured; and all we are asking is that he be allowed to come under the general act allowing compensation in such cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SACAJAWEA, OR BIRD WOMAN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 19) authorizing the erection of a monument to the memory of Sacajawea, or Bird Woman, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the joint resolution is intended to provide a monument for the famous Indian woman who acted as interpreter for the Lewis and Clark expedition. Recently there has been some controversy raised as to the burial place of Sacajawea, and I therefore ask that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that further investigation may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be recommitted.

ROYALTIES ON PRODUCTION OF MINERALS

The bill (S. 2716) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. That is a rather important bill, and I notice the chairman of the committee, having charge of this, is not present. I suggest that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSPORTATION OF POISONS THROUGH THE MAILS

The bill (S. 2657) to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this bill provides for a slight amendment to the present law. On page 2, lines 17 to 22, it reads:

Provided further, That poisons prepared for use as disinfectants, fungicides, germicides, or insecticides, or for the destruction of rodents or other animal pests, when packed in containers according to the specifications of the Postmaster General, shall be accepted for mailing.

The Department of Agriculture recommends this bill, and the various farm organizations recommend it very highly. The Postmaster General makes no particular objection. The type of containers is left entirely to the discretion of the Postmaster General. We had a hearing on the bill, reported it favorably, and I believe it would be of great benefit to the farmers, especially in the sparsely settled districts of the Middle West and the West, and also to fruit growers.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to ask the Senator whether I am correct in my understanding that the only new part of the bill is on page 2, lines 17 to 22?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have received objection from certain retail merchants, those who run country stores, stating that they feared that this bill would prevent them selling certain articles containing poison, and would compel people to go to drug stores.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not believe that objection is valid. This simply is to allow certain articles to be sent through the mail by parcel post.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then there is no more restriction than there was before?

Mr. FRAZIER. No further restriction. As the Senator will notice a little higher up on the same page, in lines 11 and 12, certain poisons can now be mailed by manufacturers thereof or dealers therein "to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, and veterinarians." This simply provides that they may be mailed to other people as well who use these articles.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator how much this supplements existing law, and whether or not, in his opinion, dangers are not to be apprehended from the use of the mail for carrying the kinds of poisons covered in this bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not get the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. To what extent does this bill modify or change existing law?

Mr. FRAZIER. Just to the extent that is provided in lines 17 to 22 on page 2. Most of these articles may be sent through the mails now by wholesalers to physicians and dealers. They may be sent through the mail by parcel post.

Mr. KING. The Senator thinks it wise to permit the use of the mail for the transmission of poisons of various kinds, arsenical and other kinds, poisons of the most virulent character?

Mr. FRAZIER. The last part of the bill states that the container must be approved by the Postmaster General. In the hearings containers were brought before the committee, and they have been put through various tests. They stood the usual tests and some unusual tests.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 2, after line 18, to insert the words "or for the destruction of rodents or other animal pests," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 217. That all kinds of poison, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable material, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scales, and all other natural or artificial articles, composition, or materials, of whatever kind, which may kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier: Provided, That the Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails from the manufacturer thereof or dealer therein to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, and veterinarians, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property: Provided further, That poisons prepared for use as disinfectants, fungicides, germicides, or insecticides, or for the destruction of rodents or other animal pests, when packed in containers according to specifications of the Postmaster General, shall be accepted for mailing: Provided further, That all spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind are hereby declared to be nonmailable, and shall not be deposited in or carried through the mails. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon, or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY STATUS OF UNITED STATES ARMY CHAPLAINS

The bill (S. 3284) to amend a portion of section 15 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will not the Senator withhold his objection just for a moment? I think I can explain this bill.

Mr. KING. I will do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At first reading the bill may seem to bring about some very drastic changes in the matter of the rank of chaplains of the Army. As a matter of fact, the changes are very slight. The purpose of the bill is to put chaplains in the Army on exactly the same basis as the Medical Corps and the Dental Corps and Veterinary Corps in the matter of rank. Rank in those corps is covered by length of service. The chaplains have a little less favorable consideration than the others. This puts them on exactly the same basis with the other noncombatant professional branches. The annual cost incident to the enactment of this legislation will be only $6,600.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the bill, and I know the objects of it. When I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee I opposed this purpose to give pharmacists and veterinarians and chaplains the rank of admirals. I have objected to this plan, which has become, of course, a fixed one, and I do not expect my objection to change the accepted order of making dentists and veterinarians and chaplains officers, giving them rank and advancing them from time to time in the military ranks which are provided by law. I know it is the established order and my objections do not carry any weight, but I think it is unwise, I think it is unnecessary, and I wish we could resort to this question de novo, and draw a bill that would let fighting men get the ranks, and let those who are civilians and noncombatants get their compensation, but serve as noncombatants and civilians, instead of being admirals and generals and colonels and captains and majors, when they are horse doctors or chemists, or when they pray. Probably the chaplains deserve more consideration than the horse doctors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is to give the same relative rank to chaplains in the matter of length of service as is given to the other professional services, and I do not see how it can be denied, as a matter of simple justice. These men are with troops all the time. They must go where the troops go.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection, but I want the Record to show that I vote against the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of section 15 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, reading as follows:

"Chaplains shall hereafter have rank, pay, and allowances according to length of active commissioned service in the Army, or, since April 6, 1917, in the National Guard while in active service under a call by the President, as follows: Less than 5 years, first lieutenant; 5 to 14 years, captain; 14 to 20 years, major; over 20 years, lieutenant colonel. One chaplain, of rank not below that of major, may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be chief of chaplains. He shall serve as such for four years, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of colonel while so serving," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Chaplains shall hereafter have rank, pay, and allowances according to length of active commissioned service in the Army, or, since April 6, 1917, in the National Guard while in active service under a call by the President, as follows: Less than 3 years, first lieutenant; 3 years to 12 years, captain; 12 to 20 years, major; 20 to 26 years, lieutenant colonel; over 26 years, colonel. One chaplain, of rank not below that of major, may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be chief of chaplains. He shall serve as such for four years, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general while so serving."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) giving and granting consent to an amendment to the constitution of the State of New Mexico providing that the moneys derived from the lands heretofore granted or confirmed to that State by Congress may be apportioned to the several objects for which said lands were granted or confirmed in proportion to the number of acres granted for each object, and to the enactment of such laws and regulations as may be necessary to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS] requested me two or three days ago to withhold action in this matter until he might investigate it. He is out of the Chamber at this time, and I ask that it go over without prejudice. If the Senator comes in during the call of the calendar, I shall ask that we return to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The bill (S. 750) to amend paragraph (18) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That paragraph (18) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended is amended to read as follows:

"(18) After this paragraph takes effect no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall undertake the construction of an entirely new line of railroad unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction and operation of such line of railroad, and no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity permit of such abandonment; but no such certificate for the abandonment of any line of railroad, or any portion of any line of railroad located wholly within one State, or of the operation thereof, shall operate to relieve the carrier from also procuring such authority for such abandonment from that State as may be required by its laws."

SEC. 2. That paragraph (19) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended is amended by striking out "or extended."

SEC. 3. That paragraph (20) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended is amended by striking out "or extension thereof."

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I can explain this in just a word or two. This amendment was recommended by the subcommittee to meet the objections of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. As the bill is amended now it applies only to the extension of railroads that are in existence and not to any new construction whatever.

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand the Senator to mean that this applies to a railroad wholly within a State?

Mr. MAYFIELD. No; anywhere.

Mr. COUZENS. It can be extended to roads engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. MAYFIELD. Yes; I discussed that fully with the Senator from Iowa, and he said he thought it should be amended so as to permit railroads now in existence to make extensions anywhere. I accepted that amendment at his suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course the Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction save over a road that does an interstate business. The transportation act provides that in every case of extension or construction an application must be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is necessary that it shall be done, whether it is wise. While I think that is a sound policy, so far as original undertakings are concerned, I can see no reason for securing the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a mere extension of an existing road. Therefore I said to the Senator from Texas that not only would I not object to this amendment to the transportation act but that I was in favor of it. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, may I inquire if this changes the present law in any respect with regard to the building of a new railroad wholly within a State?

Mr. MAYFIELD. It does not affect new construction at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Every railroad is within some State, and the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission does not depend upon the physical location of a particular railroad. It depends upon whether that railroad does or is intended to do an interstate business, and it may be said that there is not a railroad in the United States that does not carry goods that are in interstate commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend paragraphs (18), (19), and (20) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as amended."

NAVAL RESERVE FORCE AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The bill (S. 3480) for the relief of former officers of the United States Naval Reserve Force and the United States Marine Corps Reserve who were erroneously released from active duty and disenrolled at places other than their homes or places of enrollment was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REMOVAL OF GATES AND PIERS

The bill (H. R. 54) authorizing the removal of the gates and piers in West Executive Avenue between the grounds of the White House and the State, War, and Navy Building was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that may go over. Furthermore, I want to ask how that got on the calendar. It does not appear to have been reported by a committee and has not even been referred to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). The Chair is informed by the clerk that the bill came over from the House and was placed on the calendar because of the fact that a similar bill had already been reported by the committee and placed on the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has this bill been substituted for a Senate bill?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I think I can explain the situation. It has not been substituted, but there is a similar bill on the calendar. That is no doubt the reason why it was done. I do not recall specifically the circumstances, but that is undoubtedly why it was done, because the committee had already acted on a similar bill. Perhaps the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] can state the facts.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know how it happens to be on the calendar, but there is a similar bill on the calendar at an earlier point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar No. 443 is similar, but not identical.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the bill had better go to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine if he is not willing that it should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The District Committee is trying to look after District affairs.

Mr. FERNALD. These matters have always come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that inasmuch as Order of Business No. 443 has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it is appropriate that this similar bill should be referred to the same committee.

Mr. KING. It does not necessarily follow. I think it ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, where the Senator from Washington and others of us who are giving attention to the streets and buildings of the city will have something to say in regard to the propriety of the measure.

Mr. FERNALD. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that House bill 54, authorizing the removal of the gates and piers in West Executive Avenue between the grounds of the White House and the State, War, and Navy Building, be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

FEES FROM ROYALTIES ON INDIAN LANDS

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained by the so-called prohibition committee when Order of Business

535, the bill (S. 2716) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands, was passed over. May I ask that we recur to that order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 535. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 2716) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to collect a reasonable fee, not exceeding 3 per cent, from Indian lessors for moneys collected as royalties on production from the leasing of restricted Indian lands for mining purposes, the amounts collected to be covered into the Treasury subject to appropriation by Congress for necessary supervision in connection with the execution, development, and operation of leases: Provided, That no collection shall be made from Indian lessors where agency expenses are paid entirely from tribal funds.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I would like to inquire if there has not been a misprint in the bill. Did they not intend lessees rather than lessors? Is it intended to collect from the lessor or the lessee?

Mr. HARRELD. The fees are collected from royalties coming to Indian tribes. I will say to the Senator that in handling leases on properties, Executive-order lands, if we may call them that, or other lands belonging to Indians, there is a great deal of expense to the Government. The bill gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to levy a tax on the royalty that accrues in his hands from those lands in sufficient quantities, not exceeding 3 per cent, to cover the actual expense of making the leases and handling the matter of leasing.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then the bill relates to cases where individuals become lessors in leasing lands under the supervision of the Interior Department.

Mr. HARRELD. Exactly so. It allows them a certain amount, not exceeding 3 per cent, for expenses incidental to the handling of the leases, and it relieves the Public Treasury to that extent.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS

The bill (S. 2020) for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to settle, adjust, and certify the following claims for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service, Treasury Department, namely, the claims of certain Chicago newspapers for advertising services rendered October 3, 1918, amounting in all to $2,894, under the appropriation "Suppressing Spanish influenza and other communicable diseases, 1919"; the claim of a Houston, Tex., newspaper, $65.17, and the claim of a New York newspaper, $30, for advertising services rendered between June and October, 1920, under the appropriations "Pay of personnel and maintenance of hospitals, Public Health Service, 1920," and "Maintenance, marine hospitals, 1921."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I think I can explain the bill. The bill is to aid certain newspapers who printed advertisements at the request of the Federal Government. When the time came for payment it seemed that conditions precedent had not been complied with which required certain notice to be given to and permission obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The first item was for the publication by the Federal Government of an advertisement in regard to the "flu" epidemic, and others in regard to sanitary arrangements conducted by the Federal Government. In each case the Federal Government got full consideration and in each case the money was in the Treasury, but because of this technical requirement of notification before hand, it could not be paid to the claimants. In each case the money was turned back to the Federal Treasury. The Government has lost nothing, but obtained full benefit from the advertisement. I trust the Senator realizes the situation, as it was explained two years ago and again last year. A similar bill has passed this body twice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS BUILDINGS IN PORTO RICO

The bill (H. R. 9831) to provide for the completion and repair of customs buildings in Porto Rico was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the completion and repair of customs buildings in Porto Rico, under allotments provided by the acts of Congress approved January 10, 1920, and June 7, 1924, respectively, the sum of $7,700, and that he be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Contractor Antonio Higuera the sum of $1,826.80 for extra work performed in addition to the amount of money available under allotment provided by the act of January 10, 1920, and that he be likewise authorized and directed to reimburse said contractor the sum of $300 for balance due him for furnishing labor, equipment, and materials to test foundations before building the new customhouse at San Juan, P. R., act of January 10, 1920, all said amounts to be paid out of duties collected in Porto Rico as an expense of collection, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, in order that there may be a full explanation at hand I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury bearing upon this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

MARCH 26, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Your letter of the 6th instant addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, transmitting copies of H. R. 9831 and H. R. 9314, allotting certain funds from the Porto Rico tariff fund for the erection and completion of customs buildings in Porto Rico, and asking for the facts in this connection, has been referred to this department for attention.

H. R. 9314 provides for the construction of customs offices on the roof of the customs warehouse. The customs offices at San Juan are now located in the Federal building at that port and have sufficient space in which to transact the customs business. The post office, located in the Federal building, however, is in urgent need of additional space, according to reports received by the department. The proposition to construct quarters for customs offices on the roof of the customs warehouse at San Juan is made to relieve congestion in the Federal building, so as to provide much needed space for the post office. It is not essential to the proper functioning of the customs service in the islands, but will concentrate the work of the headquarters port of the customs service in one building, and in this respect be an added convenience to the importers as well as the officers of the service.

H. R. 9831 provides for the completion and repair of customs buildings in Porto Rico under allotments provided by the acts approved January 10, 1920, and June 7, 1924, and also authorizes and directs the payment to Antonio Higuera of $1,826.80 for extra work in connection with the construction of the customs warehouse at San Juan, and $300 for expense incurred in connection with the testing of the foundations before the building was erected.

There is transmitted herewith a letter dated January 13, 1926, addressed to the collector at San Juan by the commissioner of the interior of Porto Rico, under whose technical supervision the building was constructed, which fully states the facts connected with the charge of $1,826.80 for work in excess of the contract and in excess of the expenditures authorized by the department.

A copy of the letter of October 7, 1925, addressed to the department by the collector at San Juan, and a copy of a letter from the commissioner of the interior to the collector of San Juan, under date of December 26, 1925, giving the facts in detail concerning the additional charge of $300 for the testing of foundations before the erection of the customs warehouse was commenced, are also inclosed.

The $7,700 mentioned in this bill for the completion of repairs to certain buildings is needed to complete the work of repairs of buildings damaged by the earthquake, for which the allotment originally made by the act was not sufficient. It is desirable that these buildings be fully completed, which can be done if the amount mentioned in the bill, $7,700, is made available.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions,
United States Senate.

(Inclosures.)

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
January 13, 1926.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,

San Juan.

DEAR SIR: You will remember that when the customs warehouse building at this port was nearing completion it was found that the money available would not be enough to finish certain items included in the contract, and that it would therefore be necessary to leave these unfinished unless more money was made available.

You will no doubt recall that when we made a visit to the building together we saw that it would really be a shame to leave these few items unfinished, since the money required to complete the building entirely was really very small, and, on the other hand, the building could hardly be left in the state it then was, as it would suffer greatly in appearance and in its ability to stand wear and tear.

The two big items which were not complete were the cement top dressing and the wall finish with carborundum. The difference in appearance between the finished sections and those not completed was very marked, and it was also easy to see that unless the entire floor received a good cement top dressing it would deteriorate rapidly under the heavy traffic.

With this thought in mind, and considering also that if this work was done at a later date, as would no doubt be the case, the cost of execution would far exceed its cost at that time, we instructed the contractor to go ahead with the work, so that the building could be turned over to you complete in all its details.

When we took this step we felt confident that under the circumstances it was the wise thing to do, and that when matters were fully explained it would be easy for you to obtain the money needed to cover the cost of this work.

The following is an itemized list of work done by the contractor for which he has not received payment:

928 square yards cement top dressing, at $1-----	$928.00
4 cubic yards reinforced concrete slat over elevator shaft, at $22-----	88.00
2,286 square yards wall finish with carborundum, at $0.30--	685.80
1 wood platform for the auctioneer, at $25-----	25.00
10 hose bibbs, at $10-----	100.00
Total-----	1,826.80

It should also be mentioned that in order that this work might be carried on, the contractor agreed to reduce the price for the wall finish and the hose bibbs from $0.50 to $0.30 and from $15 to $10, respectively.

I trust that this letter, which is in the way of a reminder and an explanation, will enable you to obtain the small amount necessary to close this matter.

Very truly yours,

Commissioner.

CERTAIN PRIVILEGES UNDER NATURALIZATION LAWS

The bill (H. R. 9761) to supplement the naturalization laws by extending certain privileges to aliens who served honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States during the World War was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read.

Mr REED of Pennsylvania. Mr President, I think I can save time by explaining in a few words the purpose of the bill.

It was found at the close of the World War that a number of American veterans accepted their discharges in Europe in order that they might visit their families, their parents, who are still living abroad. Most of them came back to this country within the following 12 months. A few of them, for family or business reasons, were detained. There are at present abroad something less than 5,000 American veterans holding honorable discharges from our Army and Navy. Most of them want to stay there, but a few of them have tried to come back and have discovered to their astonishment that although they hold an honorable discharge from our service they are not good enough to be allowed free admittance to the United States without waiting for the quota.

The American Legion post in Rome is the original sponsor for the legislation. They have a membership of over 700 ardent American veterans, all English-speaking, all of them trained soldiers, all of them with honorable discharges. About half of them are anxious now to get back to the United States. Their parents have died or they have settled up the business matters which kept them there, and it seemed to the Committee on Immigration, although we believe most sternly in standing by the immigration policy of the United States, that any man who had an honorable discharge from our forces and was good enough to fight for us in our Army or our Navy is good enough to come back to the United States where he was enlisted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the Senator has answered what I was about to ask, which was that most of these men, as I understand, actually enlisted in this country.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, absolutely every one of them enlisted in this country. They were all here originally. Their absence from the United States occurred because we took them abroad with our armed forces. They were here lawfully in the beginning. They had emigrated to the United States in the past. We took them away from the United States to fight for us, and now we will not let them come back.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The bill is reported just as we agreed upon it in the committee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely; but I want to add a word in that connection. I am coming now to the second section of the bill, which relates to naturalization. During the World War there was put into one of the World War acts, an act passed in July, 1918, I think, a provision allowing the immediate naturalization of these men. A good many thousand aliens then in our Army took advantage of that provision. It was discovered afterwards that a requirement had been adopted here by the Bureau of Immigration, which was not communicated to the officers of our forces abroad, that the naturalization papers then issued should be invalid unless they were filed in the office of the clerk of a district court in this country. Possibly that was in the original law. In any event, it was not known to the officers who administered the naturalization.

I know of several instances in my own State of men who came back and regarded themselves as citizens and went ahead voting. Some of them are voting yet. But technically their naturalization was not complete, because on their return to this country they did not file their papers with the clerk of a district court.

The provisions of the bill are entirely temporary. Immigration is allowed only for a period of one year from the passage of the bill. It is not intended to be a permanent policy. Naturalization is allowed only for a period of two years from the passage of the bill under the provisions of the war time law. Neither section changes the permanent policy of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the five-minute rule the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed two minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The legislative drafting service has drafted a bill accomplishing exactly the result aimed at by this bill, making no change in any sense except that it provides against the return of any veteran who has a loathsome or dangerous or contagious disease. Such a provision ought to be put in, and I think the committee overlooked it. It provides against the return of a polygamist person, a procurer, contract laborer, a person previously deported, or a person convicted of a crime. The drafting service thought properly enough that these exceptions ought to remain in the bill, and they have rewritten to the same effect the bill now reported. I believe what they have written and what has been instituted in the House by Mr. TILSON does the same thing in a better way than the bill now here, and therefore I offer it as a substitute for the bill now pending and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the proposed substitute.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is very short and will not take long.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That (a) as used in this act the term "alien veteran" means an individual, a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, who is now an alien not ineligible to citizenship; but does not include (1) any individual at any time during such period or thereafter separated from such forces under other than honorable conditions, (2) any conscientious objector who performed no military duty whatever or refused to wear the uniform, or (3) any alien at any time during such period or thereafter discharged from the military or naval forces on account of his alienage.

(b) Terms defined in the immigration act of 1924 shall, when used in this act, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

SEC. 2. An alien veteran shall, for the purposes of the immigration act of 1924, be considered as a nonquota immigrant, but shall be subject to all the other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws, except that—

(a) He shall not be subject to the head tax imposed by section 2 of the immigration act of 1917;

(b) He shall not be required to pay any fee under section 2 or section 7 of the immigration act of 1924;

(c) If otherwise admissible, he shall not be excluded under section 3 of the immigration act of 1917, unless excluded under the provisions of that section relating to—

(1) Persons afflicted with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, except tuberculosis in any form;

(2) Polygamy;

(3) Prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons;

(4) Contract laborers;

(5) Persons previously deported;

(6) Persons convicted of crime.

SEC. 3. The unmarried child under 18 years of age, the wife, or the husband of an alien veteran shall, for the purposes of the immigration act of 1924, be considered as a nonquota immigrant when accompanying or following within six months to join him, but shall be subject to all the other provisions of that act and of the immigration laws.

SEC. 4. The foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to any alien unless the immigration visa is issued to him before the expiration of one year after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 5. An alien veteran admitted to the United States under this act shall not be subject to deportation on the ground that he has become a public charge.

SEC. 6. Nothing in the immigration laws shall be construed as subjecting any person to a fine for bringing to a port of the United States an alien veteran who is admissible under the terms of this act, even though such alien would be subject to exclusion if this act had not been enacted.

SEC. 7. An alien veteran shall, if residing in the United States, be entitled, at any time within two years after the enactment of this act, to naturalization upon the same terms, conditions, and exemptions which would have been accorded to such alien if he had petitioned before the armistice of the World War, except that such alien shall be required to appear and file his petition in person and to take the prescribed oath of allegiance in open court.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to admit to the United States, and to extend naturalization privileges to, alien veterans of the World War."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to House bill 9761, which has already been printed. That amendment is drawn to fit the text of House bill 9761. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has now moved to substitute another bill for the bill which is on the calendar with an entirely different arrangement textually. That means that the amendment which I have drawn would not fit it. I suggest that the amendment which I have drawn and have submitted to the Senate, and which now lies on the table, which I want to offer, should take precedence over the amendment suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, because my amendment is to perfect the text of the bill now on the calendar.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I think that is a proper way of going about the matter. We can first vote on the amendment of the Senator from New York and then on the substitute. I hope the Senate will do that. In that way the matter can be disposed of very readily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the amendment of the Senator from New York is in order and direct the clerk to read the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Might I ask, should we adopt the amendment of the Senator from New York and then adopt the substitute of the Senator from Pennsylvania, would not that do away with the amendment of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The test will come on the amendment offered by myself. Of course, if the amendment offered by myself shall be adopted, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania logically would be rejected, because it would be inconsistent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would be inconsistent.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think the two amendments are so inconsistent that if the amendment of the Senator from New York wins mine must lose.

Mr. FESS. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the Senate bill?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I want to say in explanation of the question which has been asked me by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that the amendment which I have had printed and which now lies on the table awaiting the consideration of House bill 9761 is an amendment to the House bill now being considered.

Mr. FESS. It is an amendment to the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is an amendment to the House bill which is now on the calendar and is drawn to fit into that bill.

Mr. FESS. And a House bill is the substitute offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Pennsylvania, after describing the House bill that is on our calendar, offered a substitute for it to accomplish the same purpose, but with an entirely different arrangement of language.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania offer a substitute for the House bill to which the Senator from New York desires to offer an amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I have offered an amendment to it.

Mr. FESS. Then the question will come first on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Pennsylvania has conceded that.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is satisfactory to him?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely not. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York does not relate to the veterans.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I hope the Senator from New York and the Senator from Pennsylvania, respectively, will explain just what the two proposals are.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment which I now offer—and I will ask the Secretary to read it in just a moment—does not—

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLEASE. I object, Mr. President, to the consideration of either of the amendments. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania should lie over. I think this is too important a matter to be passed on now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York yielded only for a question, the Chair will say to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BLEASE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York did not yield for any purpose except for the asking of a question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that my amendment has been printed as a House bill and is available for every Senator.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not yield the floor to be taken off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. BLEASE. This is a matter of unanimous consent. I have suggested that there is no quorum present, and I demand a quorum to transact the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor and has declined to yield.

Mr. BLEASE. Does the Chair hold that a Senator can not raise the question of a quorum at any time?

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. I inquire if it is not permissible, even when a Senator is on the floor, under the rule under which we are operating this morning, for another Senator to raise objection to the consideration of a bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has the floor, and having been asked to yield stated that he yielded for a question only. The Chair therefore construed his yielding the floor to be for that purpose only.

Mr. BLEASE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COUZENS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. BLEASE. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have to yield to the parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes beyond the time allowed by the rule. I ask the Chair if that two minutes have not expired and if therefore the Senator from Pennsylvania was not out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator from New York has the floor on another amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I submit that when this bill came up the Senator from Pennsylvania asked permission to go two minutes beyond the five minutes allowed under the rule, and he proceeded over the two minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not exceed the two minutes granted to him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator from New York will look at Order of Business No. 603 on the calendar, being House bill 6238, he will see that it is an immigration bill to change the nonquota provision. His amendment will be more appropriate to that bill than it would be to the bill now under consideration. I wish to ask the Senator, therefore, if he will not consider offering his amendment to that bill and let the bill now pending go through. Every Senator, I think, is agreed that we should take care of the veterans in this matter. Why not offer the Senator's amendment to House bill 6238 and debate that if it is desired? I am sure the Senator from South Carolina will agree to that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no opportunity to answer any questions put to me.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIS. I withhold my parliamentary inquiry until the Senator from New York may answer the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania, let me say that I have no objection to offering my amendment to Order of Business No. 603, House bill 6238.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas wishes to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry for the benefit of the Senator from South Carolina, if I may. I inquire if he may not raise objection at any time before final action is taken on the bill if he delays his objection until after the Senator from New York shall have concluded his remarks?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator again state his parliamentary inquiry for the benefit of the Chair?

Mr. CURTIS. Can not the Senator from South Carolina raise objection to the bill at any time before final action on it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that objection can be raised at any time when a Senator secures the floor.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not wish to yield for a speech.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I wanted to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I was refused the opportunity of doing so. I want to know whether a practice of that kind is to be followed in the Senate. If so, I should like to have the Senate settle the question. This is an effort to press a bill through here in the face of many absent seats on this side of the Senate, and when a quorum is asked for the Presiding Officer refuses to order the roll called, although he must know that absent Senators on this side of the Chamber are against opening the doors of this country to immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum may not be made when the Senator making it has not the floor, but only when he has the floor. The floor was yielded by the Senator from New York for another purpose. The Senator may not make the suggestion until he secures the floor.

Mr. BLEASE. I will be compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from South Carolina to appeal from that decision?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes, sir; and I ask for a quorum to vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. FESS. Suppose there is but one Member in the Chamber besides the Senator speaking; does the Chair hold that Member could not raise the question of the absence of a quorum while the Senator speaking was on the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without securing the floor?

Mr. FESS. Yes; without securing the consent of the Senator holding the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that a Senator not having the floor may properly make any inquiry.

Mr. FESS. A Member can make the point of no quorum at any time even without the consent of a Senator who holds the floor at the time. That is the ruling of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has appealed from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, a point of order can be made at any time even when a Senator is on the floor and without his consent. The Constitution requires the presence of a quorum. The only circumstance in which it has been held that the point can not be raised is when the roll has been called, the presence of a quorum disclosed, and no business has intervened. Debate is not considered the transaction of business. A Senator, therefore, can not keep on calling for a quorum until some business has intervened. However, to-day the point of no quorum has not been made until now. A Senator can be taken off his feet by another Senator to make a point of order. The Senator from South Carolina really made a point of order that the Senator from New York was not proceeding in order because a quorum was not present. I am satisfied that if the Chair will examine the rule and consider the circumstances he will realize that a Senator can not proceed except in order, and he is not in order unless a quorum is present if the absence of a quorum is suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Virginia that the Senator from South Carolina did not rise to a point of order; otherwise he would have obtained the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. He did that when he raised the point of no quorum. Of course, when the Senator from South Carolina stated that he wished to object to the bill he could not raise the objection at that time while the Senator from New York had the floor, and the Chair was right to that extent; but, subsequently, he made the point of order that there was no quorum present and insisted that it should be ascertained whether there was or not, and the Senator from New York was not proceeding in order, because a quorum must be present if the question of the lack of a quorum is raised.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to call the Chair's attention to a decision which I think settles this question:

The agricultural bill being before the Senate and Mr. McCumber having the floor, Mr. Jones made a point of order that nothing can be settled without a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hitchcock). The Chair rules that a Senator can not be taken off his feet by a point of no quorum against his consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, you will find several other decisions to the contrary.

Mr. SWANSON. Why, all the decisions are to the contrary. A Senator can only proceed in order. A point of order can be raised at any time under the specific terms of the rule. I admit that when the Senator wanted to interpose an objection while the Senator was on the floor, he could not do that while the Senator had the floor by unanimous consent; but when he shifted and said: "I am going to raise the point of order that the Senator is proceeding out of order because there is no quorum present," that point of order can be made at any time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this discussion will have become entirely academic if I can have a chance to say what I have been trying to say for the last 15 minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. The point of order is that the Senator has no right to say it until there is a quorum present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Pennsylvania has suggested that I offer my amendment to Order of Business No. 603. I think my amendment would be germane to that bill. I realize perfectly well that my amendment, whenever offered, will give rise to debate. I wanted, however, if the other bill should be taken up to-day, to propose it and have it pending. That was my sole object in rising.

Mr. President, I have no intention whatsoever of holding up the bill affecting the return of these former American soldiers. I am heartily in favor of it. That provision was a part of my bill originally. It has been separated from my bill and reported as a part of a House bill by the Committee on Immigration of the Senate. That is how it happens to be here now. I am willing to vote for it as a separate bill or as part of another bill, the provisions of the other bill being satisfactory; that is all. I have no objection to the passage of this bill, but I shall—

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will not yield.

Mr. FESS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator is going to make a speech again, I must insist upon the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FESS. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. FESS. My point of order is that the Senator from South Carolina was within his rights when he raised the question of the absence of a quorum; and I quote section 22, on page 498 of volume 2, of the Precedents:

A Senator may take another Senator off his feet at any time to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GLASS. Otherwise, it would be entirely with the Chair to conduct the business of the Senate all day long without a quorum being present by refusing to recognize any Senator to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I make a suggestion? Will the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his request for a quorum? There is no necessity for it, as my amendment is not to be pressed.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, if it is a courtesy to the Senator from New York, I will do it with pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is on the appeal by the Senator from South Carolina from the decision of the Chair. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from South Carolina withdraws the appeal?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, I withdraw the amendment which I offered. I have been trying to do that for 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which has been read.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he does not think that after the words "or following to join him" there should be an amendment giving a limited time for that—say within 6 months or 12 months?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I shall be very glad to accept that.

Mr. BLEASE. I suggest that the Senator offer such an amendment, then.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that is entirely reasonable.

Mr. BLEASE. I am in favor of the bill, except that I think there should be some limitation there.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. After the word "following," then, I accept the amendment to insert the words "within six months."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question? As I understand, he prefers the bill which he has offered as a substitute on the ground that he thinks it better maintains the safeguards erected in the law against the entrance of those who are diseased or otherwise highly objectionable from a sanitary or moral standpoint.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that covered in the language of the bill as reported by the Senate committee, on lines 20, 21, and 22? The language reads:

and who applies at a port of entry of the United States in possession of a valid, unexpired, nonquota immigration visa.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that is implied, but we did not want to leave it in any doubt. If people have lousisome diseases we do not want them here, no matter what their qualifications are.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course not.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And we wanted to make it sure beyond peradventure. That is why we preferred the redraft.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My own construction is that the expression "a valid, unexpired, nonquota immigration visa" keeps the door locked against those cases just as well as if we said it all over again in another way.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania is the House bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is the House bill. It is simply a redraft by the legislative drafting service of the bill which is on the calendar.

Mr. COPELAND. It is House Calendar 196; is it not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not recall its House Calendar number. The clerk can tell us.

Mr. BLEASE. I think the only difference is to take in the mother and father; is it not? That is practically the only difference in the printed bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; we do not admit the mother and father.

Mr. BLEASE. That is what I say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask where that amendment is to be inserted?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is a substitute for the bill as rewritten by the legislative drafting service.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood, though, that the Senator from South Carolina offered an amendment, or the Senator from Pennsylvania offered an amendment. Where does the amendment come in the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is in the substitute. In dealing with the relatives following to join the immigrant, the Senator from South Carolina very wisely suggested that they ought to follow within six months; and I was glad to accept his amendment.

Mr. BLEASE. That is to keep them from staying there and marrying, and then coming in under the same permission that they had before they were married.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to admit to the United States and to extend naturalization privileges to alien veterans of the World War."

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TRAFFIC ACT

The bill (H. R. 3802) to amend the act known as the District of Columbia traffic act, 1925, approved March 3, 1925, being Public, No. 561, Sixty-eighth Congress, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of amendments have been suggested to me which I think ought to receive consideration. Under the limited time I shall ask that this bill go over without prejudice; and I will join with the Senator from Kansas to-morrow, if we can get the floor, or day after to-morrow, to take it up.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Utah the bill will, of course, be passed over; but I do want to emphasize the importance of getting action on this bill at the earliest possible opportunity. There are over 100,000 operators' permits in this city to-day that are of no force and effect, and it is exceedingly important that the traffic department should have action on this bill.

Mr. KING. I share the views of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF AMERICAN LEGION IN PARIS

The bill (S. 3560) to authorize the granting of leave to ex-service men and women to attend the annual convention of the American Legion in Paris, France, in 1927 was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government be, and they hereby are, authorized to grant, in their discretion, extended leave not to exceed 60 days in the year 1927 to ex-service men and women for the sole purpose of attending the annual convention of the American Legion in Paris, France: Provided, however, That this statute shall not be construed to modify the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1893, limiting the annual leave which may be granted with pay to 30 days in any one year except that any portion of the 30 days' leave not granted or used during the year 1926 may be allowed to accumulate and be pyramided for the purpose herein specified in addition to the 30 days' leave with pay in 1927.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOISE RECLAMATION PROJECT, IDAHO

The bill (S. 3732) making appropriations for the Hillcrest and Black Canyon units of the Boise reclamation project, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of this measure, but I do want to say that I think we are embarking upon a very unwise policy in passing bills authorizing the appropriation for specific projects of the reclamation fund.

In the first place, I do not think it is necessary. That fund is already appropriated for reclamation purposes; and the matter of the selection of the projects, the investigation of the projects, and the approval of the projects that are to be taken up, is left to the Secretary of the Interior; and upon estimates that come down from the Budget this fund can be appropriated to any project or any unit that is found to be feasible and has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. In addition to that, it is entirely within the jurisdiction and power of the Appropriations Committee to appropriate any part of that sum for any project that it considers advisable; so that this legislation is, I think, wholly unnecessary under the existing circumstances. I think that if we do start in upon this policy there will be a scramble in the Senate and a scramble in Congress to pass special appropriation acts for these special projects, and I think it will bring our reclamation policy into discredit; but this bill has the recommendation of the committee, and, as I say, I am not going to object. I just wanted, however, to express my view that this is very unwise from the standpoint, especially of reclamation.

I asked the other day that the bill that was reached, in which the Senator from Texas was interested, should go over. That was largely because there were only three or four minutes left, and I thought there ought to be some explanation of it. I have examined that bill. It is on all fours with this, and so if I make no objection to this, of course, I will not object to that; but I wanted to have in the RECORD my view on the policy upon which we are embarking.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I am sure that this unit of the Boise project, called the Hillcrest project, stands out individually in the work of the Reclamation Bureau.

Something like 20 years ago the Government threw open for settlement what is known as the Boise project. The people settled upon the Hillcrest project, which is a part of the Boise project, built their homes and built their schoolhouses. They have been waiting almost 20 years now for water. In 1918 the Government asked them to form an irrigation district, which they did, and in 1921 the Government signed a contract to furnish the Hillcrest people with water. Since that time not a dollar has been spent for the completion of this project. Five hundred and ninety thousand dollars have been spent on this project. Let me say it is not a new project in any sense. It will take $850,000 to complete it, and then the money will come back into the Treasury. Three times the Secretary of the Interior recommended a direct appropriation for this project, and three times the Budget turned it down. Now, this bill makes an authorization of this project.

I want to do something to give the people who have been living on that project out there, within 5 miles of the capital of the State of Idaho, out on the desert, some encouragement that this work is going to be done and that the project is going to be finished, so that they may stay there with the hope of getting water.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOODING. I yield.

Mr. KING. Why was not an appropriation for this project, if it was approved by the department, included in the last appropriation bill, which carried several million dollars for reclamation projects?

Mr. GOODING. I will say to the Senator that the Budget took the position that they did not care to increase the direct appropriation, so I changed this to an authorization, which, of course, gets away from the objection of the Budget.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator one other question. Is this for the irrigation of private lands or of public lands?

Mr. GOODING. Private lands. The people went out there and homesteaded. There are a number of homes standing out there now as monuments of a forlorn hope, of people who have been waiting practically 20 years for water. This will complete the last unit of the Boise project. The Secretary held that it was economically sound to appropriate; in fact, he recommended $850,000, and I took the responsibility of cutting it down to $450,000, with the hope that these people could get some encouragement to hang on to their claims, for I believed it would be easier to pass an appropriation for $450,000 than one for $850,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill, while it does seem to me that heretofore Congress has manifested considerable generosity in making appropriations for these arid-land projects of the West. As I have before stated upon the floor of the Senate, I have no objection to the policy that is being carried out in the reclamation of the arid lands of the West, but I am again going to express my condemnation of a policy which recognizes reclamation of only one class of lands within this country that is worthy and deserving of the assistance of the Government.

The Government having launched upon a policy of appropriating millions and millions of dollars for the reclamation of the arid lands, at a cost per acre of from $50 to $75, in justice and in equity it should also assist the projects in this country where reclamation is carried on by drainage.

In the southern part of the country we have great areas of land that are as fertile and productive land as there is in the world—lands which can be reclaimed for from $10 to $25 an acre. Yet Congress has never seen proper to even give any financial assistance in the way of lending credit to those projects.

Within my own State we have by far the greatest reclamation project in the whole country within one territory, 4,000,000 acres of wonderfully rich land, that territory being reclaimed at the present time under State laws and through a State agency. We have time and time again asked Congress to incorporate in the reclamation laws provisions that would apply to the swamp and overflowed lands of the South.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. They are projects which can be carried on more economically, where the lands can be reclaimed for not more than 25 per cent of what it costs to reclaim arid lands, and when once reclaimed, especially in my State, the cost of irrigation is not necessary, as we have 55 to 60 inches annual rainfall, making conditions ideal for growing crops.

Mr. GOODING. I want to say to the Senator that I shall always be with the South when that matter is presented to the Senate. I have always stood for appropriations for the improvement of rivers and for the building of levees to control the floods, which has resulted in the reclamation of something like 17,000,000 acres of land. I have always stood by the South in those projects, and I always shall.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I appreciate the spirit of the Senator, and I am sure he has done as he has said. I have been promised time and time again by certain Senators on the committee, and Senators coming from the West supporting all these projects, that they would give me their assistance. I have nothing against them and their projects. I desire to see them progress. I have been assured by them that they would assist me in bringing about legislation which would assist the reclamation projects in the South. But session after session measures are presented which does not include those sections. This is true, although I have as many as three sessions of Congress had reclamation bills before the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. In the Interior Department appropriation bill which has recently been agreed to by the Senate and the House, with the exception of two items, there is an appropriation of $15,000 for the investigation of the overflowed and swamp lands of the South. That investigation no doubt will be made during the coming year.

I may say to the Senator that I wish the southern Senators had supported the bill I offered for the very purpose of developing the cut-over and the swamp lands of America, along the lines of the reclamation of the arid lands of the West; but I did not get enough votes. I believe that if the bill had been enacted there would have been more land reclaimed under it than has been reclaimed under the western reclamation projects; but the Senator did not vote for it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. As I recall—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the five-minute rule the time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word. I want to make one observation in reply to my friend from Florida.

I think the condition in the South to which he has referred is to be distinguished from the reclamation projects of the West in this regard, that the lands in the South are owned by private individuals. The lands which the Government is reclaiming in the West belong to the Government itself. They have no value and they can not be disposed of unless water is furnished. The Government has to provide reclamation projects in order to dispose of them.

I should oppose reclamation projects if they involved the appropriation of money to irrigate private lands. I should oppose an appropriation for the irrigation of private lands of Utah, the private lands of Colorado, or of Florida. So I hope the Senator will distinguish between Government-owned lands and privately owned lands.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah one question. Unirrigated arid land is valueless. The Government goes to the expense of irrigating the land it owns, and makes it valuable, then allows it to be homesteaded without any cost to the one who takes up the homestead. What is the difference between that and taking land that is already owned that is valueless and making it valuable?

Mr. KING. The land is absolutely valueless unless water is placed upon it and unless persons go on the land, and it takes them years to develop that land. As a matter of fact, there are two or three crops of settlers before settlers can be found to stay and reclaim the land.

Mr. SMITH. I would like to debate that with the Senator. There is no difference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will state the amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "following," to strike out the words "sums are" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "sum is"; on the same line, after the word "hereby," to insert the words "authorized to be"; on line 6, after the word "reclamation," to strike out the words "fund, to be available immediately" and to insert the word "fund"; on page 2, to strike out the words "Black Canyon unit, Boise project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $300,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sum is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the special fund in the Treasury of the United States created by the act of June 17, 1902, and therein designated "the reclamation fund."

Hillcrest unit, Boise project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $450,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an appropriation for the Hillcrest unit of the Boise reclamation, Idaho."

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE GEORGE W. ENGLISH

At 2 o'clock p. m., the managers of the impeachment, on the part of the House of Representatives, of Judge George W. English appeared below the bar of the Senate, and the Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate (C. A. Loeffler) announced their presence as follows:

I have the honor to announce the managers on the part of the House of Representatives to conduct proceedings in the impeachment of George W. English, a United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT (CHARLES G. DAWES). The managers on the part of the House will be received and the Sergeant at Arms will assign them to the seats provided for them.

The managers were escorted by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate (David S. Barry) to the seats assigned to them in the area in front of the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Sergeant at Arms made proclamation as follows:

Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons are commanded to keep silence, on pain of imprisonment, while the House of Representatives is exhibiting to the Senate of the United States articles of impeachment against Hon. George W. English, judge of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Illinois.

Mr. Manager MICHENER. Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. Manager.

Mr. Manager MICHENER. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House of Representatives are here present and ready to present the articles of impeachment which have been preferred by the House of Representatives against George W. English, a district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Illinois. The House adopted the following resolution, which I will read to the Senate:

House Resolution 201

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
April 6, 1926.

Resolved, That EARL C. MICHENER, W. D. BOIES, IRA G. HERSEY, C. ELLIS MOORE, GEORGE R. STORRS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, JOHN N. TILLMAN, and FRED H. DOMINICK, Members of this House, be, and they are hereby, appointed managers to conduct the impeachment against George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois; that said managers are hereby instructed to appear before the Senate of the United States and at the bar thereof in the name of the House of Representatives and of all the people of the United States to impeach the said George W. English of misdemeanors in office and to exhibit to the Senate of the United States the articles of impeachment against said judge which have been agreed upon by the House; and that the said managers do demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of said George W. English to answer said impeachment, and demand his impeachment, conviction, and removal from office.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

WM. TYLER PAOR, Clerk.

The articles of impeachment, which have been adopted by the House of Representatives and which the managers on the part of the House have been directed to present to the Senate, are in the words and figures following:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SIXTY-NINTH CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
April 1, 1926.

Resolved, That George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, be impeached of misdemeanors in office; and that the evidence heretofore taken by the special committee of the House of Representatives under House Joint Resolution 347 sustains five articles of impeachment, which are hereinafter set out; and that said articles be, and they are hereby, adopted by the House of Representatives, and that the same shall be exhibited to the Senate in the following words and figures, to wit:

ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN THE NAME OF THEMSELVES AND OF ALL OF THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AGAINST GEORGE W. ENGLISH, WHO WAS APPOINTED, DULY QUALIFIED, AND COMMISSIONED TO SERVE DURING GOOD BEHAVIOR IN OFFICE AS UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS, ON MAY 3, 1918

ARTICLE I

That the said George W. English, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and while acting as the district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, did on divers and various occasions so abuse the powers of his high office that he is hereby charged with tyranny and oppression, whereby he has brought the administration of justice in said district in the court of which he is judge into disrepute and by his tyrannous and oppressive course of conduct is guilty of misbehavior falling under the constitutional provision as ground for impeachment and removal from office.

In that the said George W. English, on the 20th day of May, 1922, at a session of court held before him as judge aforesaid, did willfully, tyrannically, oppressively, and unlawfully suspend and disbar one Thomas M. Webb, of East St. Louis, a member of the bar of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Illinois, without charges having been preferred against him, without any prior notice to him, and without permitting him, the said Thomas M. Webb, to be heard in his own defense, and without due process of law; and also

In that the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on the 15th day of August, 1922, in a court then and there holden by him, the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did willfully, tyrannically, oppressively, and unlawfully suspend and disbar one Charles A. Karch, of East St. Louis, a member of the bar of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Illinois, without charges having been preferred against him, without any prior notice to him, and without permitting him, the said Charles A. Karch, to be heard in his own defense, and without due process of law; and also in that the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, restored the said Karch to membership of the bar in said district, but willfully, tyrannically, oppressively, and unlawfully deprived the said Charles A. Karch of the right to practice in said court or try any case before him, the said George W. English, while sitting or holding court in said eastern district of Illinois; and also

In that the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on the 1st day of August, 1922, unlawfully and deceitfully issued a summons from the said district court of the United States, and had the same served by the marshal of said district, summoning the State sheriffs and State attorneys then and there in the said eastern district of Illinois, being duly elected and qualified officials of the sovereign State of Illinois, and the mayor of the city of Wamac, also a duly elected and qualified municipal officer of said State of Illinois, residing in said district, to appear before him in an imaginary case of "the United States against one Gourley and one Daggett," when in truth and fact no such case was then and there pending in said court, and in placing the said State officials and mayor of Wamac in the jury box and when they came into court in answer to said summons then and there in a loud, angry voice, using improper, profane, and indecent language, denounced said officials without any lawful or just cause or reason, and without naming any act of misconduct or offense committed by the said officials and without permitting said officials or any of them to be heard, and without having any lawful authority or control over said officials, and then and there did unlawfully, improperly, oppressively, and tyrannically threaten to remove said State officials from their said offices, and when addressing them used obscene and profane language, and thereupon then and there dismissed said officials from his said court and denied them any explanation or hearing; and also

In that the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, on the 8th day of May, 1922, in the trial of the case of the United States v. Hall, then and there pending before said George W. English, as judge, the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, from the bench and in open court, did willfully, unlawfully, tyrannically, and oppressively, and intending thereby to coerce the minds of the jurymen in the said court in the performance of their duty as jurors, stated in open court and in the presence of said jurors, parties, and counsel in said case, that if he told them (thereby then and there meaning said jurymen) that a man was guilty and they did not find him guilty that he would send them to jail; and also

In that the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, on the 15th day of August, 1922, willfully, unlawfully, tyrannically, and oppressively did summon Michael L. Munie, of East St. Louis, a member of the editorial staff of the East St. Louis Journal, a newspaper published in said East St. Louis, and Samuel A. O'Neal, a reporter of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper published at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and when said Munie and the said O'Neal appeared before him did willfully, unlawfully, tyrannically, and oppressively, and with angry and abusive language, attempt to coerce and did threaten these members of the press from truthfully publishing the facts in relation to the disbarment of Charles A. Karch by said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and then and there used the power of his office tyrannically, in violation of the freedom of the press guaranteed by the Constitution, to suppress the publication of the facts about the official conduct of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, and did then and there forbid the said Munie and the said O'Neal to publish any facts whatsoever in relation to said disbarment under threats of imprisonment; and also

In that the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, on the 15th day of August, 1922, at East St. Louis, in the State of Illinois, did unlawfully summon before him one Joseph Maguire, being then and there the editor and publisher of the Carbondale Free Press, a newspaper published in Carbondale, in said eastern district of Illinois, and then and there, on the appearance before him of said Joseph Maguire in open court, did violently threaten said Joseph Maguire with imprisonment for having printed in his said paper a lawful editorial from the columns of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper published at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and in a very angry and improper manner did threaten said Maguire with imprisonment for having also printed some lawful handbills—said handbills having no allusion to said judge or to his conduct of the said court—and then and there did threaten this member of the press with imprisonment.

Wherefore the said George W. English was and is guilty of a course of conduct tyrannous and oppressive and is guilty of misbehavior in office as such judge and was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE II

That George W. English, judge as aforesaid, was guilty of a course of improper and unlawful conduct as said judge, filled with partiality and favoritism, resulting in the creation of a combination to control and manage in collusion with Charles B. Thomas, referee in bankruptcy, in and for the eastern district of Illinois for their own interests and profit and that of the relatives and friends of said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and of Charles B. Thomas, referee, the bankruptcy affairs of the eastern district of Illinois.

In that said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, corruptly did appoint and continue to appoint said Charles B. Thomas, of East St. Louis, in said State of Illinois, a member of the bar of the district court of the United States in and for said district, as sole referee in bankruptcy in said district with all of the advantages and preferments of said appointment, notwithstanding he then and there well knew that said eastern district was a great commercial district of 45 counties nearly 300 miles long with a large volume of business in bankruptcy, and that the said volume of business would necessarily take all the time and attention of any appointee as referee in bankruptcy to perform properly the work and duties of said office, and well knew at the time of said appointments that said Charles B. Thomas was practicing in all the courts, both civil and criminal, in said eastern district of Illinois, he, the said Charles B. Thomas, through said appointment as sole referee in bankruptcy and the favors in connection therewith extended to him by said George W. English, judge aforesaid, built up a large and lucrative practice; and that, notwithstanding the size of the eastern district of Illinois, the volume of bankruptcy business therein, and the large practice of said Thomas, referee aforesaid, did then and there give said referee in bankruptcy enlarged duties and authority by unlawfully changing and amending the rules of bankruptcy for said eastern district for the sole benefit of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, and the said Charles B. Thomas, sole referee aforesaid, as follows:

"It is hereby further ordered that the following rule be, and the same is hereby, made and adopted as a rule of this court in bankruptcy, to be effective in all cases from and after this date, namely:

"All matters of application for the appointment of a receiver, or the marshal, to take charge of the property of the bankrupt or alleged bankrupt, made after the filing of the petition, and prior to its being dismissed or to the trustee being qualified, shall be and are hereby referred to the referee in bankruptcy for his consideration and action; and the clerk will enter such order of reference as of course in each case; and the referees of this court heretofore or hereafter appointed are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint receivers, or the marshal, upon application of parties in interest, in case the referee shall find same is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the estate, to take charge of the property of the bankrupt; and to exercise all jurisdiction over and in respect to the actions and proceedings of the receiver or marshal which the court by law may exercise. After adjudication, where the referee deems it necessary for the protection of the estate, he may make such appointment on his own motion.

"And it is hereby further ordered that all special rules and general orders heretofore entered or adopted be, and they are hereby, set aside and annulled in so far as they in any way conflict with the provisions of the above rule and general order.

"For the purpose of transacting the business of the court of bankruptcy, it is ordered that the referee [meaning then and there said Charles B. Thomas] be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure and maintain suitable offices for the transaction of said business, and to suitably furnish and equip same for said purpose; that the referee be, and he is hereby, further authorized and directed to employ such clerks, stenographers, and court reporters or any other assistance which he finds and deems necessary for the proper management of said court and offices and the administration of bankrupt estates; to install telephones; to procure and keep on hand needed stationery; and generally to provide all such other and further office equipment proper to transact business of the referee; and

"It is further ordered that in the event that the charges for referee's expenses authorized by any and all of the rules of this court to be charged against the estates administered before the referee do not amount to a total to pay the expenses which the referee has incurred or for which he may have paid or obligated himself to pay, the referee be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a charge against the bankrupt estates administered before him, in as equitable pro rata share as the nature and circumstances will permit, sufficient in amount to meet the deficit existing by reason of the referee's receipts from expenses or charges authorized by this and other rules being less than the total expenses incurred by the referee."

Said amendments of the rules of court were then and there made with the intent to favor and prefer said Charles B. Thomas and did thereby give said Charles B. Thomas the power and opportunity to appoint his friends and members of his family and the family of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, to receiverships and to use said office of referee as aforesaid for the improper personal and financial benefit of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, and said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, and the friends and families of both.

The said Thomas, in pursuance of said unlawful combination and by authority of said rule and order aforesaid, and with the full knowledge and approval of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, did rent and furnish a large and expensive suite of rooms and offices in said East St. Louis near the said judge's chamber, in the Federal building in said East St. Louis, occupied by said George W. English, judge aforesaid, at the expense and cost of the United States and of estates in bankruptcy by virtue of said rule and order;

And the said Charles B. Thomas then and there, with the full knowledge and consent of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, did wrongfully and unlawfully create and organize a large and expensive office force supported by and paid for out of the funds and assets of estates in bankruptcy as aforesaid, and then and there did hire and provide a large number of clerks, stenographers, and secretaries, at the cost and expense of the United States and the funds and assets of the estates in bankruptcy, as aforesaid;

And the said Charles B. Thomas did then and there hire and place in said offices, with the knowledge and approval of the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, one George W. English, Jr., the son of the aforesaid Judge English, at a large compensation, salary, and fees, paid out of the funds and assets of the estates in bankruptcy, in and under the charge and control of said Thomas, referee aforesaid;

And the said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, did further confer upon said George W. English, Jr., appointments as trustee and receiver and appointments as attorney for trustees and receivers in estates in bankruptcy;

And said Referee Charles B. Thomas then and there, with the knowledge, consent, and assistance of the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, did hire and place in the said office and make a part of said organization one M. H. Thomas, son of said Charles B. Thomas; and one D. S. Leadbetter, son-in-law of said Charles B. Thomas; and one C. P. Wideman, son-in-law of said Charles B. Thomas;

And the said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, did then and there wrongfully and unlawfully pay to all of the persons last aforesaid large salaries, fees, and commissions, and did likewise confer upon said persons, appointments as trustees, receivers, and masters in estates in bankruptcy, with the full knowledge, consent, and approval of said George W. English, judge aforesaid;

And said George W. English, judge aforesaid, in order further to carry out and make effective said improper and unlawful organization, did appoint one Herman P. Frizzell, United States commissioner in and for said eastern district of Illinois, and said commissioner did occupy free of charge the said offices of Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, and did receive from said Charles B. Thomas, as said referee, large and valuable fees, commissions, salaries, appointments as trustee, receiver, and master in estates in bankruptcy with the knowledge and consent of the said George W. English, judge aforesaid;

And the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, did further allow and permit the said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, to appear as attorney and counsel before said Commissioner Frizzell in divers and sundry criminal cases; and then and there, further to carry out and make effective the said unlawful and improper combination, the said

George W. English, judge aforesaid, with full knowledge of the premises, did improperly and unlawfully consent and approve the appointment by the said referee, Charles B. Thomas, of one Oscar Hooker, of said East St. Louis, as chief clerk in said offices of said referee, and thereby the said Hooker did receive from said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, large and valuable fees, salaries, appointments as trustee, receiver, and master, and as attorney for trustees and receivers in bankruptcy estates;

And, further, the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, did improperly allow and permit said Hooker, as the agent of a bonding company, to furnish surety bonds for said George W. English, Jr., the son of George W. English, judge aforesaid, and also surety bonds for said Herman P. Frizzell, said United States commissioner, and surety bonds for said M. H. Thomas, son of said Charles B. Thomas, as aforesaid, and surety bonds for D. L. Leadbetter and said C. P. Wideman, sons-in-law of said Charles B. Thomas, in all matters of trusteeships and receiverships to which they were appointed by said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, the said Oscar Hooker, George W. English, Jr., D. S. Leadbetter, C. P. Wideman, and Herman P. Frizzell being then and there without property or credit;

And then and there, further to carry out and make effective said unlawful and improper combination, the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, with full knowledge of the premises, did improperly and unlawfully allow said Charles B. Thomas, referee as aforesaid, to organize and incorporate from his office force and employees a corporation known as the Government Sales Corporation, organized and incorporated November 27, 1922, for the object and purpose of furnishing appraisers in bankruptcy estates and auctioneers in the sale and disposal of assets of estates in bankruptcy, the said Government Sales Corporation being then and there made up and composed, organized, and formed of incorporators and directors from the families and friends of said George W. English, judge aforesaid, and said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, and from said office force of said Thomas, referee aforesaid;

The said George W. English, judge aforesaid, well knowing the facts and premises, then and there did willfully, improperly, and unlawfully take advantage of his said official position as judge aforesaid, and did aid and assist said Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, in the establishment, maintenance, and operation of said unlawful and improper organization as above set forth, for the purpose of obtaining improper and unlawful personal gains and profits for the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, and his family and friends;

Wherefore the said George W. English was and is guilty of a course of conduct as aforesaid constituting misbehavior as such judge and was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE III

That George W. English, judge aforesaid, was guilty of misbehavior in office in that he corruptly extended partiality and favoritism in divers other matters hereinafter set forth to Charles B. Thomas, said sole referee in bankruptcy in the said eastern district of Illinois, and by his conduct and partiality as judge brought the administration of justice into discredit and disrepute, degraded the dignity of the court, and destroyed the confidence of the public in its integrity;

In that in the matter of the case of East St. Louis & Suburban Co. et al. v. Alton, Granite & St. Louis Traction Co., pending before George W. English, judge as aforesaid, upon the petition for appointment of receivers for said Alton, Granite & St. Louis Traction Co., the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did improperly and unlawfully refuse to appoint the temporary receivers suggested by counsel for the parties in interest in said case unless said Charles B. Thomas was appointed attorney for the receivers; that by reason of the condition imposed by George W. English, judge aforesaid, the counsel for the parties in interest in said case did agree to the appointment of said Charles B. Thomas as counsel for said temporary receivers at a salary stipulated by said Charles B. Thomas of $200 a month; and thereupon the said George W. English as judge, improperly, corruptly, and unlawfully appointed said Charles B. Thomas as attorney for the temporary receivers and approved of the payment of said salary by an order entered in said case as of August 11, 1920; and that subsequently, to wit, on January 20, 1921, George W. English, judge aforesaid, did issue an order making the temporary receivers permanent and that the said Charles B. Thomas, as attorney and counsel for the receivers, be paid the sum of $350 per month, and that the further sum of $500 per month additional be paid to said Charles B. Thomas for his services and responsibilities in assisting the receivers in the control and management of said receivership properties, making a total salary of $850 per month, and that said salary should be retroactive from October 1, 1920; that the services of said Charles B. Thomas, both as attorney for the receivers and for assisting in the management of the receivership properties, were not required or necessary, and thereby an additional burden upon the receivership properties was imposed which said George W. English, judge aforesaid, well knew; that his salary of $850 per month was continued to be paid to said Charles B. Thomas for a long period of time, to wit, from October 1, 1920, to January 1, 1925, making the total amount received under said order by said Charles B.

Thomas $43,350; that the said appointment of said Charles B. Thomas was made by George W. English, judge aforesaid, with the intent wrongfully and unlawfully to prefer and show partiality and favoritism to said Charles B. Thomas, to whom George W. English, judge aforesaid, was under obligations, financial and otherwise; and also

In that in the case of Handelsman v. Chicago Fuel Co. pending before him, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did improperly and unlawfully appoint said Charles B. Thomas as one of the receivers in said case and then and there did improperly order, direct, and fix the compensation and salary of said Charles B. Thomas as said receiver at the rate of $1,000 per month; and did then and there improperly and unlawfully appoint said Herman P. Frizzell, United States commissioner for said eastern district of Illinois and chief clerk in the office of said Thomas as referee in bankruptcy, to be attorney for the said receiver Charles B. Thomas, and then and there did improperly fix the salary and fees of said Frizzell as said attorney at the rate of $200 per month; that all said acts of said English as judge aforesaid were done with the unlawful and improper intent unlawfully to favor and prefer said Thomas and benefit the said organization.

In that on the 15th day of August, 1924, at a session of court then holden by George W. English, judge as aforesaid, in the matter of Glendon N. Heuffman et al. v. Hawkins Mortgage Co., in bankruptcy, did improperly and unlawfully allow and permit said Charles B. Thomas, referee as aforesaid, to appear and conduct said case as attorney and counsellor at law in behalf of Morton S. Hawkins, one of the bankrupts in said case, in violation of the statute of the United States that forbids a referee to practice as an attorney or counsellor at law in any bankruptcy proceedings, and afterwards, to wit, on the 27th day of August, 1924, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did again improperly and unlawfully allow and permit said Charles B. Thomas, referee as aforesaid, to appear before him and practice as an attorney in behalf of said bankrupt, Morton S. Hawkins; that said unlawful acts were willfully permitted in order to favor said Charles B. Thomas in obtaining from said Morton S. Hawkins, a fee for his services of $2,500, which was then and there paid to said Charles B. Thomas by said Morton S. Hawkins, all with the full knowledge and consent of George W. English, judge as aforesaid; and, also,

In that on the 18th day of May, 1922, after conviction by a jury of one F. J. Skye, in a case before George W. English, judge as aforesaid, involving the crime of selling and possessing intoxicating liquors, the said George W. English, as judge, did impose a sentence upon said F. J. Skye of imprisonment in jail for four months and the payment of a fine of $500; that on the trial the said F. J. Skye was represented by one Charles A. Karch; that after such conviction and sentence said Charles A. Karch took an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in behalf of his client and filed an appeal bond in due course; that subsequently to the appeal said F. J. Skye discharged said Charles A. Karch as attorney and retained Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid; that on July 5, 1922, said F. J. Skye, by his attorney, said Charles B. Thomas, abandoned his appeal to the circuit court of appeals and filed a motion for a stay of the sentence of imprisonment, which motion, after hearing, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did allow and did stay the sentence of imprisonment until December 31, 1922; and on June 7, 1923, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did order said jail sentence vacated and said stay of execution and commitment to jail of said F. J. Skye made permanent, relieving said F. J. Skye from imprisonment and only obligating him to pay a fine of $500; that said F. J. Skye paid to said Charles B. Thomas $2,300 as a fee in said case; that said vacation of the jail sentence and the permanent stay of execution and commitment was granted by George W. English, judge as aforesaid, without the presence of said Charles B. Thomas in court and without any investigation of the affidavits filed in support thereof, and was done willfully, improperly, unlawfully, and with intent to prefer and show favoritism to said Thomas, to whom said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, was under obligations, financial and otherwise; and, also,

In that in the case of Hamilton v. Egyptian Coal Mining Co., George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did arbitrarily and unlawfully and without notice remove from office the duly appointed receiver in said case, and with intent improperly to prefer and favor Charles B. Thomas, aforesaid, did then and there appoint the said Charles B. Thomas in place of the removed receiver; that this removal of the receiver was made on July 11, 1924, with the intent to prefer unlawfully the said Charles B. Thomas, to whom the said George W. English, judge aforesaid, was under great obligations, financial and otherwise; and, also,

In that on or about March, 1924, at a hearing before George W. English, judge aforesaid, in the case of Wallace v. Shedd Coal Co., George W. English, judge aforesaid, did appoint Charles B. Thomas as an attorney for the receiver (one F. D. Barnard), when in truth and in fact no attorney for said receiver was needed, and afterwards, to wit, on or about August, 1924, said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did arbitrarily and improperly remove from office said F. B.

Barnard as such receiver and then and there did improperly appoint as receiver in place of said Barnard said Charles B. Thomas; that the removal of said receiver and the appointment of said Charles B. Thomas was made with the intent to corruptly prefer said Charles B. Thomas, to whom said George W. English was under great obligations, financial and otherwise; and, also,

In that on or about the 27th day of June, 1924, at a hearing held by him, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, in the case of Ritchey et al. v. Southern Gem Coal Corporation, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did then and there improperly appoint Charles B. Thomas, aforesaid, one of the receivers in said case, and then and there unlawfully did order and decree that said Charles B. Thomas, as said receiver, should have as his salary the excessive and exorbitant sum of $1,000 per month; that said act of George W. English, judge aforesaid, in the appointment of said Charles B. Thomas, as receiver aforesaid, and in the fixing of said exorbitant salary was all done by George W. English, judge as aforesaid, with intent to prefer unlawfully said Charles B. Thomas, to whom said George W. English was under great obligations, financial and otherwise; and, also,

In that on or about the 24th day of October, 1921, at East St. Louis, in the State of Illinois, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, wrongfully, improperly, and unlawfully did accept and receive from said Charles B. Thomas, sole receiver in bankruptcy aforesaid, the sum of $1,435, which was applied toward the purchase price of an automobile that had been purchased by George W. English, judge as aforesaid; that said sum of money was improperly and unlawfully accepted and received by the said George W. English from the said Charles B. Thomas as a return or in recognition of the favoritism and partiality extended by George W. English, judge as aforesaid, to Charles B. Thomas, aforesaid; and, also,

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, at a term of court held by said judge for the eastern district of Illinois in the case of the Southern Gem Coal Corporation in receivership, did receive and approve the report of Charles B. Thomas, as one of the receivers in said case, for the first six months of said receivership; that in said report to George W. English, judge as aforesaid, said Charles B. Thomas stated that he had during those six months spent all of his time in Chicago looking after the interest of said Southern Gem Coal Corporation in receivership; and then and there George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did receive and approve said reports; that with full knowledge that said referee, Charles B. Thomas, was neglecting his duties as referee in bankruptcy in his office at East St. Louis in spending six months of his time 200 miles away from his office at East St. Louis, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did then and there, despite this knowledge and these facts, approve said negligence on the part of said Charles B. Thomas and said neglect of duty without criticism or rebuke by then and there reappointing him for another term.

Wherefore the said George W. English was and is guilty of misbehavior as such judge and was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE IV

That George W. English, while serving as judge as aforesaid in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Illinois, did, in conjunction with Charles B. Thomas, sole referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, corruptly and improperly handle and control the deposit of bankruptcy and other funds under his control in said court by depositing, transferring, and using said funds for the pecuniary benefit of himself and said Charles B. Thomas, sole referee in bankruptcy, thus prostituting his official power and influence for the purpose of securing benefits to himself and to his family and to the said Charles B. Thomas and his family.

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on or about December, 1918, did designate the First State Bank of Coulterville, in the State of Illinois, to be the sole United States depository of bankruptcy funds within said district; that said bank was situated a great distance from East St. Louis, the office and place of business of Charles B. Thomas, said referee in bankruptcy; and that then and there one J. E. Carlton, a brother-in-law of George W. English, judge aforesaid, was a large stockholder and director and cashier of said bank; and that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, was a depositor, stockholder, and director in said bank; that said improper act of George W. English, judge as aforesaid, in designating said bank, tended to scandalize the court in the administration of its bankruptcy business; and, also,

In that on or about July, 1919, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, at a hearing then had before him in the case of Sanders v. Southern Traction Co., in which certain assets had been sold for the sum of $400,000, did willfully and unlawfully order and decree that of said sum of $400,000 the sum of, to wit, $100,000 should be deposited in the Merchants State Bank of Centralia, Ill., a United States depository of bankruptcy funds, said deposit to draw no interest; that said deposit was made in said bank as ordered and that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, was then and there a depositor, stockholder, and director in said bank; that said order and deposit of funds was made for the benefit of himself, George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and for his personal gain and profit and for the benefit of his family and friends, to the great scandal of the said office of judge aforesaid, and all tending to bring the administration of justice in said court into distrust and contempt; and, also,

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on or about October 1, 1922, and Charles B. Thomas, sole referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, did make and enter into the following improper and unlawful agreement with the officers of the Drovers National Bank of East St. Louis, to wit, that in consideration that said bank would employ one Farris English, son of said George W. English, as cashier in said bank at a salary of $1,500 per year, that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, referee aforesaid, would make and designate said bank as a Government depository of bankruptcy funds without interest thereon, and that funds from estates in bankruptcy and receiverships should thereafter largely be sent to and deposited in said bank, and that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, sole referee as aforesaid, and said Farris English would become depositors in said bank and then and there would purchase shares of stock therein as follows:

George W. English, judge as aforesaid, 10 shares; said Farris English, 10 shares; and said Charles B. Thomas, 50 shares, at $80 per share; that in pursuance of said agreement said Farris English was hired as cashier at said salary of $1,500 per year and entered upon this employment; that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, in pursuance of said agreement, did designate said bank to be a Government depository of bankruptcy funds, and said George W. English and said Farris English and said Charles B. Thomas, in pursuance of said agreement, did become depositors in said bank, and the said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, the said Charles B. Thomas, referee as aforesaid, did make 17 transfers of bankruptcy funds from the Union Trust Co. of East St. Louis and cause the same to be deposited in said Drovers National Bank without interest to the aggregate amount of $100,000, and then and there George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did receive and pay for his said 10 shares of stock and also for the stock of his son, said Farris English; that the said improper acts were done and performed by George W. English, judge as aforesaid, with the wrongful and unlawful intent to use the influence of his said office as judge for the personal gain and profit of himself, said George W. English, and for the unlawful and improper and personal gain of the family and friends of the said George W. English; and, also,

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on or about the 1st day of April, 1924, with the knowledge and consent of Charles B. Thomas, referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, did make and enter into the following improper and unlawful agreement with said Union Trust Co., a Government depository of bankruptcy funds, to wit, that if said Union Trust Co. would then and there employ one Farris English, the son of George W. English, judge aforesaid, at a salary of $200 per month, he, said George W. English, judge aforesaid, with said Charles B. Thomas, would become depositors in said Union Trust Co., and that he, the said George W. English, and said Charles B. Thomas would cause to be removed from the Drovers National Bank of East St. Louis the bankruptcy funds deposited there and would deposit the same in said Union Trust Co. and that said Union Trust Co. should pay to said Farris English, in addition to his said salary of $200 per month, interest on said bankruptcy funds from time to time on deposit in said Union Trust Co. at the rate of 3 per cent on monthly balances, and for this consideration George W. English, judge as aforesaid, further did agree with said Union Trust Co. that while said agreement continued said funds should not be withdrawn and deposited in any other Government depository, and thereupon said Farris English was employed by said Union Trust Co. under said agreement and remained in the services of said company for 14 months and drew out of said company during this said period, in addition to his salary of $200 per month, the sum of $2,700 as interest on bankruptcy funds; that the bankruptcy funds were withdrawn from said Drovers National Bank and deposited in the said Union Trust Co. under said agreement; that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, did then and there become depositors in said Union Trust Co., the said George W. English did then and there use his influence as judge for the unlawful and improper personal gain and profit to himself, family, and friends; and, also,

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, did improperly designate the Merchants State Bank of Centralia, Ill., to be a Government depository of bankruptcy funds, in which bank he, the said George W. English, and he, the said Charles B. Thomas, were then and there depositors and stockholders, and George W. English was then and there a director; and, also,

In that George W. English, judge as aforesaid, on divers days and times prior to the 7th day of April, 1925, and while George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, were each depositors and stockholders and George W. English, a director of said Merchants State Bank of Centralia, Ill., and while said bank was a Government depository of bankruptcy funds, did borrow from said bank without security, at a rate of interest below the customary rate, sums of money from time to time amounting in the aggregate to $17,200, and that during said time prior to the 7th day of April, 1925, Charles B. Thomas, said referee in bankruptcy, did borrow from said bank without security and at a rate of interest below the customary rate sums of money to the total of $20,000; that said sums were loaned and said loans were renewed from time to time and carried by said bank to the said George W. English and said Charles B. Thomas, by reason of the use of the official influence of George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, sole referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, and by reason of said bank having been made and continued as a United States depository for bankruptcy and other funds without interest; that said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, and Charles B. Thomas, sole referee in bankruptcy aforesaid, acting in concert with officers and directors of said Merchants State Bank of Centralia, Ill., did borrow with said directors sums of money in the total equal to all of the surplus, assets, and capital of said bank and at a low rate of interest and without security.

Wherefore the said George W. English was and is guilty of a course of conduct constituting misbehavior as such judge and that said George W. English was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in office.

ARTICLE V

That George W. English, on the 3d day of May, 1918, was duly appointed United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, and has held such office to the present day.

That during the time in which said George W. English has acted as such United States district judge, he, the said George W. English, at divers times and places, has repeatedly, in his judicial capacity, treated members of the bar in a manner coarse, indecent, arbitrary, and tyrannical, and has so conducted himself in court and from the bench as to oppress and hinder members of the bar in the faithful discharge of their sworn duties to their clients, and to deprive such clients of their right to appear and be protected in their liberty and property by counsel, and in the above and other ways has conducted himself in a manner unbecoming the high position which he holds and thereby did bring the administration of justice in his said court into contempt and disgrace, to the great scandal and reproach of the said court.

That said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places, while acting as such judge, did disregard the authority of the laws, and, wickedly meaning and intending so to do, did refuse to allow parties lawfully in said court the benefit of trial by jury, contrary to his said trust and duty as judge of said district court, against the laws of the United States, and in violation of the solemn oath which he had taken to administer equal and impartial justice.

That the said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places, when acting as such judge, did so conduct himself in his said court, in making decisions and orders in actions pending in his said court and before him as said judge, as to excite fear and distrust and to inspire a widespread belief, in and beyond said eastern district of Illinois that causes were not decided in said court according to their merits but were decided with partiality and with prejudice and favoritism to certain individuals, particularly to one Charles B. Thomas, referee in bankruptcy for said eastern district.

That the said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places, while acting as said judge, did improperly and unlawfully, with intent to favor and prefer Charles B. Thomas, his referee in bankruptcy for said eastern district, and to make for said Thomas large and improper gains and profits, continually and habitually prefer said Thomas in his appointments, rulings, and decrees.

That said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places while acting as said judge, from the bench and in open court, did interfere with and usurp the authority and power and privileges of the sovereign State of Illinois, and usurp the rights and powers of said State over its State officials, and set at naught the constitutional rights of said sovereign State of Illinois, to the great prejudice and scandal of the cause of justice and of his said court and the rights of the people to have and receive due process of law.

That said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places, did, while acting as said judge, unlawfully and improperly attempt to secure the approval, cooperation, and assistance of his associate upon the bench in said eastern district of Illinois, Judge Walter C. Lindley, by suggesting to said Walter C. Lindley, judge as aforesaid, that he appoint George W. English, Jr., son of said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, to receiverships and other appointments in the said district court for said eastern district of Illinois, in consideration that said George W. English, judge as aforesaid, would appoint to like positions in his said court a cousin of said Judge Walter C. Lindley, and thereby unlawfully and improperly avoid the law in such case made and provided; all to the disgrace and prejudice of the administration of justice in the court of George W. English, judge as aforesaid.

That said George W. English, as judge aforesaid, during his said term of office, at divers times and places, did, while serving as said judge, seek from a large railroad corporation, to wit, the Missouri

Pacific Railroad Co., which had large trackage, in said eastern district of Illinois, the appointment of his son, George W. English, Jr., as attorney for said railroad.

All to the scandal and disrepute of said court and the administration of justice therein.

Wherefore, the said George W. English was and is guilty of misbehavior as such judge and of a misdemeanor in office.

NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Attest:

WM. TYLER PAGE, Clerk.

(Seal of the House of Representatives, United States.)

Mr. Manager MICHENER (continuing). And, Mr. President, the House of Representatives by protestation, saving to themselves the liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any further articles of accusation or impeachment against the said George W. English, a district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Illinois, and also of replying to his answers which he shall make unto the articles preferred against him, and of offering proof to the same and every part thereof, and to all and every other article of accusation or impeachment which shall be exhibited by them as the case shall require, do demand that the said George W. English may be put to answer the misdemeanors in office which have been charged against him in the articles which have been exhibited to the Senate, and that such proceedings, examinations, trials, and judgments may be thereupon had and given as may be agreeable to law and justice.

Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, in pursuance of the action of the House of Representatives by the adoption of the articles of impeachment which have just been read to the Senate, do now demand that the Senate take order for the appearance of said George W. English to answer said impeachment, and do now demand his impeachment, conviction, and removal from office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. Manager, the Senate will take proper order in the matter of the impeachment of Judge George W. English and will communicate its action to the House.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in addition to the announcement made by the Chair, I think it is appropriate to present the following order. I ask that it be read at the desk, and I will ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the order proposed.

The Chief Clerk (John C. Crockett) read as follows:

Ordered: The House of Representatives, by its managers, having presented to the Senate articles of impeachment against George W. English, judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Illinois, the House, through its managers, is hereby informed that the Senate will, in accordance with its rules, on Friday, the 23d day of April, at 1 o'clock p. m., resolve itself into a body for the trial of said impeachment proceeding, enter the necessary orders, and inform the House of the time at which the Senate will be ready to receive the managers for further action with respect to said impeachment proceeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is agreed to.

Mr. Manager MICHENER. Mr. President, if there is nothing further, the managers will retire at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing further.

The managers thereupon withdrew.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, when I was a practicing attorney at my home, Newberry, S. C., there was a young man who was my law partner and my constant daily associate for many years. We were and are now the very closest of friends and love each other possibly as well as most brothers do.

He managed my campaign for governor. He was assistant attorney general when I was governor of my State. He himself was afterwards elected to Congress and is now serving his fifth term. We live in the same hotel. We take many of our meals together and are close and constant associates. I consider him one of the ablest lawyers I have ever known. He is a very close student both of law and facts and when he has made up his mind I have the most perfect confidence in his judgment.

On account of my close relations with the Hon. FRED H. DOMINICK, Representative from the third district of South Carolina, who is on the Board of Managers on the part of the House of Representatives, I request that I be excused from taking any part in the impeachment trial of Judge George W. English.

SETTLEMENT OF BELGIAN INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6774) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Government of the Kingdom of Belgium to the Government of the United States of America.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO. (LTD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2368) for the relief of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, owner of the steamship Alcinous, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said steamship Alcinous and the U. S. transport Artemis, in or near the harbor of New York on December 3, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.) by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within four months of the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEASE OF TRACKS AT ARMY SUPPLY BASE, SOUTH BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to the Bush Terminal Railroad Co. and to the Long Island Railroad use of railway tracks at Army supply base, South Brooklyn, N. Y., which was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "States," to insert the following:

and the discontinuance without cost of any action now pending by said company against the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SANDUSKY BAY BRIDGE

Mr. BINGHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9688) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Sandusky Bay, at or near Baybridge, Ohio, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to G. S. Beckwith, of Cleveland, Ohio, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Sandusky Bay, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Baybridge, in the county of Erie, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"Sec. 2. The said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"Sec. 3. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Ohio, any political subdivision thereof within which any part of such bridge is located, or two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 15 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"Sec. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Ohio under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"Sec. 5. The said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge, the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of his or their records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"Sec. 6. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"Sec. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And the Senate agree to the same.

SETTLEMENT OF ITALIAN INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri when he expects to present his motion for a reconsideration of the Italian debt settlement bill?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have just had a very brief conference with the chairman of the committee [Mr.

SMOOT]. I have said to him that I would present the motion for a reconsideration now, with the understanding between the chairman of the committee and myself, which is somewhat informal, that the matter may be discussed to-day, and that to-morrow we will agree on a time to vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Can we not agree now to vote at 3 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to agree to a time to vote until I know what discussion there will be, but I will say to the Senator that I shall not obstruct the matter at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us vote not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to agree now on an absolute time to vote. If Senators will trust to me in the matter—

Mr. SMOOT. Let us agree to vote before we recess or adjourn to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to make an agreement. I am willing to say to-day that I have no desire to delay the matter further than until such time as the Senate has had a chance to discuss it. To agree at this moment on a time to vote is impossible. Will not the Senator take my assurance that that is my attitude and let me enter the motion now? I understand the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is prepared to discuss the question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course I take the assurance of the Senator from Missouri unhesitatingly. All I am disturbed about is that some other Senator who is not a party to his assurance might object to a vote to-morrow. It is very important that the matter shall be finally disposed of one way or the other.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is possible that some Senator may object; and if so, we might have to proceed in the ordinary way to get to a vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Of course, we can always bring it to a vote by moving to lay on the table, but we do not want to do that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I hope not. I will say to the Senator that this is my attitude: I shall enter the motions forthwith. Let them go to discussion. So far as I am concerned there will be no effort to delay them beyond legitimate and necessary discussion. Probably to-morrow we will agree on an hour to vote, and I shall be agreeable to fixing an hour to vote provided that Senators are prepared to vote. If some one wants to discuss the question he ought not to be cut off from such discussion. I think if the Senator will let the matter drift along we will have no difficulty in getting through.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I want to fix the time is in order that Senators may know when we are going to vote, so that they may be present.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is difficult now to fix a time. The debate may go on for only an hour. I do not know the attitude of Senators at all. I do not know how they will receive these motions.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he is ready to go on now?

Mr. HOWELL. I am prepared to proceed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield now to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I announced yesterday that unless a motion was made to-day to reconsider I would feel under obligation to make it myself. If the motion is going to be made, that obviates the matter of undue delay and consideration, but I still reserve the right, if it proceeds unduly, to make the motion to table it. I want to have that understood. I do not want to do it unless it becomes necessary in order to get a vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did the Senator say he would reserve the right to move to table the motion or to make a motion to reconsider?

Mr. FESS. I will make a motion to table the Senator's motion to reconsider.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We all have that right. We do not have to reserve it.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to be considered as adopting sharp parliamentary practices as was charged yesterday. I want to announce in the beginning that if the matter proceeds unduly long, I shall be compelled to bring it to a vote by that motion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate rejected the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL].

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We will have to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed in order to have a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska was rejected.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. My point of order is that only a motion to reconsider can be made of the vote by which the bill was finally passed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am going to incorporate that in my motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to the bill commonly known as the Italian debt settlement bill was rejected, and I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill commonly known as the Italian debt settlement bill was passed by the Senate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, a point of order to the first part of the motion. The motion is not in order to reconsider any interlocutory vote previous to the final passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. The motion for reconsideration should be upon the passage of the bill and then the bill would be open to amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have tried to approach this matter in a way perfectly fair to the Senate and so as to present without any technicalities the broad questions that we have under consideration. The Chair having sustained the point of order that both matters can not be embraced in one motion, and having saved my record so far as I am able by the motion I have made, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill commonly known as the bill for the settlement of the Italian debt was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum. I think we ought to have a full attendance here when the Senator from Nebraska is addressing the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Fernald	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.
Bingham	Ferris	King	Robinson, Ark.
Blease	Fess	La Follette	Sackett

Mr. CAMERON. I was requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] are engaged in a hearing before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FORMS FOR BRIDGE BILLS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, some misunderstanding has arisen with regard to the new bridge policy of the Senate Committee on Commerce, due to one or two matters which have come up since that policy was first adopted. I should like to call the attention of Senators who are interested in bridge bills to the conference report adopted this afternoon on a typical toll bridge bill within the boundaries of a State, an intrastate bridge, constituting what is known to the committee as Form 3; and to the last three conference reports, adopted on yesterday, which embrace the bills providing for bridges over the Mississippi River at Natchez, at Vicksburg, and at Louisiana, Mo., which are in the form now agreed upon by the joint conference committee of the two Houses considering bridge bills, and which may be referred to as Form 4, the form for private toll bridges of an interstate character. If Senators will consult those two forms as printed in to-day's Record and in yesterday's Record, they will find the forms upon which they can rely as being those which will be followed in the future by the committees of both the Senate and House of Representatives, which have to pass upon bridge bills.

They will notice that those forms omit the proviso requiring a certificate from the Secretary of War as to whether the bridge is adequate from the point of view of the use to which it is to be put. A communication from the Secretary of War has shown that that proviso would greatly add to the cost of conducting the office of Chief of Engineers in the War Department, and would also greatly delay the construction of bridges. In view of that fact, the committee deemed it wise to postpone the inclusion of such proviso until a general revision of the bridge authorization legislation should take place. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record at this point an excerpt from the letter of the Secretary of War to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The excerpt from the letter is as follows:

The probable addition to department expenditures that will arise from this new procedure can not now be given. Experience will be needed in order to form an intelligent opinion. The present force of employees is organized to perform only the work Congress has heretofore directed. Judging from the experience of recent years, the probable number of bridge applications to be handled under congressional acts will average one per week. If the law is modified to require similar procedure in all bridge applications, the number of cases will average between four and five per week. The work of investigation and checking will be technical and difficult; and in view of the public necessity of prompt action upon applications, of the responsibility that must be accepted in the matter, of the liability that will rest upon the Government if changes in plans directed by its officers are found to be at fault, an adequate corps of thoroughly qualified assistants must be organized. The cost will undoubtedly be great—so great that, in my judgment, the proviso should receive consideration by the Bureau of the Budget before its adoption.

I wish it understood that the department is in no way hostile to the plan and will willingly undertake the work. The features of the matter herein set forth are presented simply for the reason that I regard it a duty to bring forward whatever may be suggested by the experience of the department as worthy of consideration in embarking upon new responsibilities. In this connection, I would also call attention to the fact that failure of bridge structures in the United States is a comparatively rare occurrence. The cost of mistakes in such work and the heavy liability likely to arise if they occur has been sufficient to cause the exercise of great care by bridge builders, both in designing and erecting their structures. Whether similar efficiency will be shown when the Federal Government assumes something of the responsibility, or whether proponents of bridges will rely on the Government to do the costly work of preparing proper designs and plans, remains to be seen.

Mr. BINGHAM. In the second place, Mr. President, a misunderstanding has arisen over the third paragraph of the statement which I made on March 3 regarding the proposal of the committee for securing an opinion from the highway commission or commissions of the State or States affected before we should give approval to the request of private parties for franchises for toll bridges over navigable streams.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the report of a hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce on the Big Sandy River bridge project, which contains a statement from Thomas H. Macdonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture, with regard to the desire of the department to secure from State highway commissions their opinion as to the desirability of a proposed toll bridge at a particular point, or whether they are about to construct a bridge on behalf of their own State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF THOMAS H. MACDONALD, CHIEF OF BUREAU PUBLIC ROADS, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be permitted to make a short general statement, which I regard as more important than any extended comment on this particular bill.

The Department of Agriculture has, in reporting on a number of bills which have been submitted to it, taken this method of putting before the Congress the situation which exists with reference to legislation affecting the building of toll bridges over streams under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

We believe that the present law does not meet the present situation and we have known of no better way to place this important matter before the Congress than by incorporating in our reports those principles which we believe are desirable to safeguard and protect the public interests.

There are over 3,000,000 miles of public highways in the United States. We have now operating over them about 20,000,000 motor vehicles. These facts are important in their relation to bridges at certain points because the 3,000,000 miles of public highways, over all of which some traffic moves, have been divided into groups. Certain main highways have been selected for the Federal highway system, to the extent of about 7 per cent of this total mileage, leaving 93 per cent of roads not in the Federal system. The State highway systems contain a total of slightly more, or in the neighborhood of 10 per cent of the total mileage. In other words, 10 per cent of the public-road mileage is under State jurisdiction and 90 per cent under local jurisdiction. There have been improvements with surfacing, roughly, over 400,000 miles, a very small portion of the total public-road mileage.

The improvement of so small a percentage of the whole mileage has this effect: The traffic from all of the public roads tends to concentrate on the improved roads. All those roads which are or will be improved as parts of the State or Federal highway systems are known, and the maps indicate without any possibility of material change the places at which these roads will cross the rivers. Our whole road improvement policy is concentrating traffic upon the roads of the State and Federal highway systems leading directly to these important or strategic river crossings.

This will be the tendency for an indefinite period, because it will be years before we will be able to improve fully the entire mileage of the 10 per cent State systems, to say nothing of the 90 per cent which is being improved by the local jurisdictions. So that we have in this situation our public-road policy not only concentrating the traffic on certain roads, but pointing out through the distribution of maps the strategic points where it would be profitable to erect toll bridges.

This fact is being taken advantage of by a very large number of individuals or corporations who have asked Congress to grant franchises for them to erect toll bridges at these points. We are mildly interested in this one particular bridge, but we are interested in performing any responsibility which ought to attach to us in finding out and bringing to the attention of Congress the conditions which exist. I may say that we are very highly interested in the permanent policy established. This proposed franchise seems to me to take away something of authority which ought to lodge with the States. That is, it is a serious question whether a franchise granted by the Federal Government for the erection of a toll bridge on the highway system which will in large part be paid for out of State funds, or out of funds of two adjoining States, does not take away from the States something of authority over the property which belongs to them.

Senator COUZENS. I understand you are suggesting that it might be proper for the Congress to inquire of the States before it grants the franchise?

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me so. Here is the point: I am in full sympathy with the general proposition that the Federal Government ought to stay out of local affairs.

Take this particular bridge, without any reference to any individual connected with it. This is not a matter that Congress ought to bother with. A $300,000 bridge ought not to be built as a toll proposition. I believe this is about the probable cost of this bridge. It ought not to be a toll bridge. If it were to cost $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, that would place it in another category; but my judgment is that this is purely a local matter, although technically it is under the jurisdiction of the Congress, because this stream is a navigable stream. At least on paper it is navigable.

Mr. MEEK. It is actually navigable.

Senator COUZENS. I understand, then, your idea is before Congress grants this franchise the wise thing and the proper thing to do would be to refer it to the States and get their viewpoint as to granting the permit.

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that would be a very wise thing to do; but, of course, having the view of those two States would not answer this question of the general policy, which, it seems to me, Congress must meet.

About our position with reference to these privately owned bridges, we believe, first, that so far as possible all bridges ought to be free bridges; that the bridges on all these important highways ought to be free bridges. Second, assuming there is a lack of public funds to meet the cost of construction, we believe that the States ought to be allowed to erect toll bridges and finance them by public bond issues to be retired by the collection of tolls and the bridge thereafter become a free bridge. Third, if a bridge is seriously needed and it is not possible to finance it by one of the first two methods, there may be in particular cases justification for the granting of franchises to private concerns to erect a toll bridge. It is our judgment that franchises are being granted without proper investigation or proper hearings as to the merits of these projects, and we believe that in the future the public will pay dearly to recover these franchises. If, after full investigation, the circumstances are such that Congress believes a franchise should be granted, this should certainly be only in the case of large structures. Then we believe there should be included in the franchise definite provisions as to items of cost that shall be included, as to the organization charges and as to the length of time that each franchise shall run.

Senator COUZENS. Do you think it would cover the ground if Congress should adopt a policy of requiring the application to come from the States interested rather than individuals? In other words, just take this particular case; if West Virginia should make this request of Congress, that that would be much better than to have it come from a private individual?

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me that would be highly desirable, because in that event the States would have to say, "We do not have the money to build this as a free bridge."

Senator COUZENS. In other words, they could state in their application that they wanted to do it themselves or whether they wanted it to be a matter of franchise.

Mr. MACDONALD. It seems to me so.

Senator BINGHAM. One more question. Would you believe that if Congress were to adopt the policy of getting the opinion of the States involved as to whether they desired to have such franchise granted and whether to themselves or to a corporation, that this could best be done by the Department of Agriculture by a communication from the Secretary to the governor of the State, or what method would you suggest?

Mr. MACDONALD. That might be handled by this committee through the Department of Agriculture or by this committee direct with the highway department of the States. I should say it would be a matter of reference to the highway department of the States, and as a matter of convenience it might go through the Department of Agriculture.

Senator BINGHAM. If you were requested by this committee before reporting on the bill to ascertain from the highway department of the State what attitude they took toward the bill, would that meet your objection?

Mr. MACDONALD. I think so. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that we came into this question of the bridge situation rather reluctantly. It was only after I had had a conference with the Chief of Engineers of the War Department, at that time General Beach, who told me that under their operations in connection with bridges of this character they were only concerned with the navigation features; that is, I asked if they would not go into the matter of tolls and the general traffic desirability of the bridge and assume rather more extended responsibility in dealing with matters of this character, and it was only with the assurance that they were only concerned with navigation features that we came into the situation at all. When we did so, however, there were protests against the granting of franchises for private toll bridges filed by certain State highway departments with us. Generally the State highway departments do not favor toll bridges.

Mr. BINGHAM. A reading of a portion of the statement which I asked to have printed in the Record will explain the misconception which arose over the language which I used on March 3. That language has given rise to a misunderstanding, particularly on the part of people in the city of Portland, Oreg., as to the necessity of procuring from the State highway commission approval of the plans for any bridge before a bill authorizing it could pass. The idea of the committee, as appears from the hearing, was merely to secure from the highway commissions of the States involved a statement as to whether they proposed to build a free public bridge at the particular point in the near future, and if so, whether they were opposing the granting of a private franchise.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the committee modified its policy with respect to requiring a report from the State highway department touching intrastate bills?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all, Mr. President. The committee request in each case the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Agriculture to ascertain from the highway commission of the State or States involved whether they are proposing to build a public bridge at the particular point and therefore do not desire any franchise to be given to private parties. The misunderstanding which arose was due to a very proper interpretation of the language I inadvertently employed, which led to a belief on the part of certain persons that it was necessary for the State highway commission to approve of the plans of the bridge before the permit should be granted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As I understand, all that is required in that connection is information from the State highway department that it does not itself propose to build a bridge at or near the same point?

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly. It is not the intention of the Senate to grant private franchises where the State itself proposes to build public bridges.

THE RAILROAD LABOR BILL

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, after the public buildings bill shall have been disposed of, the next legislation on the program, as arranged by the steering committee on this side of the Chamber, will be what is known as the railroad labor bill. Because of the present situation in the Senate, the inability to determine definitely when this measure can be taken up, and because of the further fact that a number of Senators expect to be away and others want to go away for a time, and all of them, as I am advised, want to be present when the bill shall be taken up, I wish to ask unanimous consent that the railway labor bill be made a special order of the Senate immediately after the morning hour on the 6th day of May.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not like to object, but I do not know how long the public buildings bill is going to take.

Mr. WATSON. Of course, if there is unfinished business before the Senate at that time, all I can do will be to take up the special order at the close of the morning hour on that day and again take it up as soon thereafter as possible; but there is no reason to believe, there is no justifiable ground to believe, as I now think, that the public buildings bill will run until the 6th of May.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I hope not.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I do not understand that the Senator is asking to fix a time to vote on this bill at all?

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He is simply asking to make it a special order for the 6th of May?

Mr. WATSON. For consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I myself will be absent for several days prior to the 6th of May, but I will not object to the request to make the bill a special order if other Senators are inclined to agree to the proposal.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire what is the intention of the steering committee with reference to agricultural legislation? Are we going to pass other foreign debt agreement bills now on the calendar that will give away billions of dollars of the money of the American taxpayers, pass the public buildings bill so that Mr. Mellon may do with it what he desires as to public buildings, then pass railroad labor legislation, and do nothing with reference to the agricultural situation?

Mr. WATSON. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The Senator is chairman, as I understand, of the steering committee.

Mr. WATSON. I am not even on the steering committee, I will say to my friend.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, the Senator is in the inner councils on his side of the Chamber.

Mr. WATSON. I will answer the Senator so far as my knowledge extends, which is, that agricultural legislation is on the program, and that—

Mr. HARRISON. Where does it come in on the program, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. WATSON. My understanding is that the railway labor bill has been on the agenda, if I may use that term, for some time as a part of the program, after that the McFadden banking bill, as I understand, is to be taken up, and then agricultural legislation is to be considered, so far as I am advised. As to that, however, I defer to my leader, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. But be that as it may, it is my understanding that agricultural legislation is to be considered before the Senate shall adjourn; and I will say to the Senator that, if I have anything to do with it, it will be considered or the Senate will not adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has told us that, first, the public buildings bill is to come up. It may keep us here until the 6th of June, and it will if it is adequately discussed—and I hope it will be fully discussed before we vote on it—then it is proposed, as I understand, to consider certain foreign debt settlement bills, which are going to give away a lot more money, then the bankers' bill comes up for consideration, and the Senator does not know for sure whether the agricultural bill is on the program. Until we do know I object to the request.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. At the time of the last meeting of the steering committee no agricultural measure had been reported from the committee and placed upon the calendar. Since that time such a bill has been reported. It is the practice of the steering committee, of course, not to put bills on the list of measures to be considered until they shall have been reported to the Senate; but I can assure the Senator that at the next meeting of the steering committee the bill for the relief of agriculture will be put on the program.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WATSON. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will yield until we can thrash this matter out.

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I was out of the Chamber at the time, and merely wanted to ask whether the Senator stated what items were on the steering committee's program.

Mr. CURTIS. I only referred to the one item, and said that a bill with regard to agricultural conditions had not been reported at the time of the last meeting of the steering committee, but at the next meeting several measures that are pending will be considered by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. When did the steering committee meet last, may I ask the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not the date in my mind, but it was before the bill having to do with agricultural conditions was reported.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, the Committee on Agriculture had agreed on a report some 10 days before the report was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. We did not know that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a matter of personal privilege?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in the debate yesterday afternoon in the Senate Chamber certain remarks were made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which led me to send for and put into the Record the yea-and-nay vote on the Warren nomination last spring. The Record as it appears in this morning's printed transcript did not accord with my recollection of what occurred, and therefore I ask unanimous consent now to read into the Record the reporter's notes of the remarks which were made and then the remarks as changed in lead pencil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON. Just a moment, Mr. President. Does the matter which the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to read relate to the remarks of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It does.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator pause until the Senator from Idaho can be present? I have just sent for him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think that only fair to him.

NATIONAL BANK BRANCHES

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me while we are waiting for the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he desires to have the railroad labor bill take precedence of the McFadden banking bill?

Mr. WATSON. I shall desire to have that done if I am here.

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to ask the Senator if that is in accordance with the plan prescribed by the steering committee?

Mr. WATSON. It is.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator wants that set down for a special order, does he?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. To be entirely frank about it, my primary in Indiana is on the 4th of May, and I want to be in Indiana three or four days before that happens; and I do not intend to leave here, if I can not make this kind of an arrangement, until I know what disposition is to be made of this railroad labor bill, because if I can not make this arrangement I shall stay here and bring it up at the first opportunity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator suggested the 6th of May. He might not feel like coming back so soon after the 4th of May.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, I feel perfectly satisfied about that, I will say to my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WATSON. I know it. I am trying to get my friend from Mississippi to withdraw it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that as soon as these other debt agreements are out of the way I will join with him in a motion to set aside the public buildings bill and take up his railroad proposition.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he can solve this whole matter, so far as the great national question to which he is alluding and in which we are all interested is to be settled in Indiana—

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. He can settle this question by simply announcing that he proposes to call up this bill on the 6th of May.

Mr. WATSON. I can settle it much more definitely if I have unanimous consent to make it a special order. Of course, I can move to make it a special order, but I would so much rather do it in a nice way and have all the Senators concur.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator would announce his intention to call it up at that time, then every Senator could make his plans accordingly.

Mr. McLEAN. Does the Senator assume that his special order will interfere with the unfinished business?

Mr. WATSON. I do not.

Mr. McLEAN. Then would it not be better to postpone the consideration of the labor bill until the Senator has been renominated?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That might be indefinitely.

Mr. WATSON. I think I can give my friend some assurance upon that proposition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have not any doubt that the Senator has it fixed.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator. If I can get the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, who seems inclined to insist on his objection, we will let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to that legislation. I am very much more in favor of that legislation than the unfinished business, the public buildings bill; and I told the Senator that I would join with him to-morrow or next day in a motion to set aside the public buildings bill and to take up this bill. If the Senator does not make such a motion, I shall make it and see whether or not the Senator will join with me in that effort.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator, then, still object to the unanimous-consent agreement that I have requested?

Mr. HARRISON. The 6th of May is quite a long time off. We may be able to pass the bill in the next four or five days.

ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. REED of Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America was passed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me now on a matter of personal privilege?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an instant, I asked him to defer his remarks for a brief period until I had an opportunity to summon the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I failed to reach him, and I do not wish to trespass further on the courtesy of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not wish to make any argument, Mr. President, but simply to read into the Record, as I now shall do, the Reporter's transcript and the changes that were made in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. President, the reporter reported the dialogue in this way:

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator did not feel that way last March when my motion to table was before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Pennsylvania may be assured, as the RECORD will show, that I have never sat silent when a motion to table has been made. I have always voted against the proposition to lay anything upon the table. It is a universal record of mine here, and the Senator can not challenge it.

Those remarks appear in the RECORD this morning as they have been changed in lead pencil to read as follows:

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Pennsylvania may be assured, as the RECORD will show, that I have repeatedly protested when a motion to table has been made. It has been my rule to vote against the proposition to lay anything on the table. My record here will show that I have all but universally protested and voted against the practice.

I think I owed that to myself, because without that in the RECORD the subsequent proceedings of yesterday were unintelligent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This is the old story that so often is repeated on the floor of the Senate. Men have a general policy which they think they have adhered to without change, yet it may appear under particular circumstances that they have apparently varied from the policy.

I recall an experience of my own in which some industrious Member dug up the fact that apparently I had voted for a rule of cloture in the Senate. At the time I was astounded by the condition of the RECORD. I did know then, and I do know now, that I have consistently disapproved and opposed every effort to impose cloture upon the Senate. Upon reflection regarding the RECORD, as nearly as I was able to figure out the matter, the situation was that a motion was about to be carried imposing cloture upon the Senate by a majority vote, and I was compelled to take my choice between cloture by a majority vote and cloture by a two-thirds vote. Therefore I voted in favor of cloture by a two-thirds vote as the lesser of the two evils. So I suppose I may say, in the absence of the Senator from Idaho—who generally needs no sponsor or defender, certainly never when he is present—that it may be that technically, upon the question of a reconsideration of the vote relative to Mr. Warren's confirmation, he voted in favor of a motion to table; but let me call attention to this fact:

The Senate had had before it for many days the question as to whether Mr. Warren would be confirmed or not confirmed. It was a simple question as to the fitness of a particular man for a particular place. After full debate, a vote was had, and my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, whose name I have the honor to bear, voted for Mr. Warren. He was an earnest advocate of Mr. Warren, and a good-faith advocate. Having ascertained that the vote was a tie, or that it was going to be announced as a tie, with the shrewdness which becomes the family name he changed his vote in order to move a reconsideration, not because he wanted Mr. Warren defeated, but because he wanted Mr. Warren confirmed, and he knew that if a John Gilpin alacrity could be injected into the sleeping form of the President of the Senate he might be projected to this body in time to cast the deciding vote. So, in order to get that vote, he changed his own vote from an attitude in favor of Mr. Warren to an attitude against Mr. Warren, in order that he might get a vote here in favor of Mr. Warren; and in that situation I believe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] voted against carrying out this device, scheme, and artifice, and said it could not be consummated in the Senate. The Senator from Idaho voted to table the motion.

That is a very different situation from the one now presented.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to my friend.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I have only started.

So, although opposed to the efforts to cut off full discussion and debate, possibly the Senator from Idaho conceived this not to be a matter of discussion or debate, but a matter of how fast an automobile could travel from the Hotel Willard to the Senate bearing the somnolent form of the President of the Senate. That does not affect the merits of the question, and I think does not reflect upon the good faith of the announcement made by the Senator from Idaho on yesterday on the floor of the Senate. But, Mr. President, let us contrast that with the question we had before us yesterday.

A debate had occurred relative to the Italian debt controversy. An insistence was made that a time should be fixed for voting. It was felt by some of the Members of the Senate that the question had not been fully discussed, and the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], agreed to fix the time two or three days in advance, which carried it to Wednesday.

The intervening period was taken up largely with discussions of other questions. The Senators who desired to discuss the Italian debt were in the major part compelled to attend to other duties; so that when we came to the discussion of the final matter of the Italian debt there remained certain questions which had not been discussed. Among others was the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL].

The Senator from Nebraska, proceeding under a limitation of time, found himself, as he approached the proposition involved in his amendment, ruled down by the gavel, which was properly applied, for his time had expired; and so the Senate failed to obtain from him the light that it might have obtained from his views. Under those conditions, because that question had not been discussed, I reserved or asserted the right to make a motion for reconsideration, which motion is now pending. It was upon that question, and under those circumstances, that the Senator from Idaho made his statement. He may have made it a little too broad.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania as disclosed in the RECORD at page 7905.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move a reconsideration of the vote just taken, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table, and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that both the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Montana asked for an immediate vote, and demanded the yeas and nays on that vote, and, of course, I imagine that my good friend from Pennsylvania was anxious to have the vote at that time on the motion to lay on the table, because it took a majority to carry it, and the Senate, as we all knew, was about equally divided. So that as a matter of fact it was purely a technical matter. The Senate desired to vote at that time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator understands that a call for the yeas and nays, even if granted, does not necessarily mean an immediate vote. There is opportunity for debate by any Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not necessarily; but of course this record discloses the fact that the Senate was ready to vote at that time, and it was only a question of how that vote should come. Evidently the Senator, and those who believed with him, thought that it had better come on a motion to lay on the table, because it took a majority.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think we need not deceive ourselves about it. The Senator from Pennsylvania was sparring for time enough to revive the man in his corner of the ring and get him here so that he could cast the deciding vote. The motion to table was intended, if I may pursue my somewhat improper analogy, to accelerate the count so that the vote would become final.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. So that the Vice President, to whom the Constitution gave the deciding vote, should not have an opportunity to cast it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; and that of course involved getting your man here and depriving the other side of the opportunity perhaps to get here some of their men who were absent.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator see any ethical difference between an effort to exclude debate, as was suggested yesterday, and an effort to exclude a vote, as was accomplished last March?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not see any ethical difference, but I see a very practical difference.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As a practical matter, then, will not the Senator agree that this tender conscience that was displayed yesterday is like a boarding-house beefsteak—it is only tender when it is beaten? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not want to enter into the ethical constituency of a boarding-house beefsteak, although the illustration is very humorous; and gazing at my friend's emaciated countenance, I can imagine his beefsteaks have not always been beaten. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is a family failing, is it not?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Not at all. I am well favored, so far as fat is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the pending question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. My motion to reconsider; and I hope the Senator from Arkansas is not going to try to hold us to a discussion of the question, because if he ever establishes that rule, he will be ruled off the floor perpetually.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, since no one seems to have any idea of what we are discussing, I thought perhaps the Chair would inform the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the question is upon a reconsideration of the vote whereby the Italian debt settlement bill was passed. The Senator from Nebraska had the floor, and the Senator from Nebraska stated that he yielded the floor to the Senator from Missouri. So the Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator from Arkansas has not understood what we are discussing, I am very sure nobody in the world has a brain acute enough to really catch the point.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am sure the Senator from Missouri does not know what he is talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, Mr. President, I should dislike very much to submit any question of logic to my friend from Arkansas, because I feel convinced he would be so prejudiced in the matter that he would render a verdict against me anyway.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I take pleasure in leaving it to my friend the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; the Senator is leaving it in safe hands.

Mr. President, after this diversion, there is this great difference between these two questions: In one case we lined up on either side against Mr. Warren or for him, and everybody got here the votes he could get, and we had it out. It was simply a question of the fitness of a man. In this case the question is whether there has been a matter of great legislative import, which ought to be discussed, that has really been overlooked because of the fixing of a definite time for voting. In perfect good faith, and with an absolute hope in my heart that the Senate might reverse its attitude, I stated that I would offer a motion to reconsider. Thereupon the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] said that he would offer such a motion presently, or immediately, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] said he would—and he did—present a motion to lay on the table, which would cut off all debate and all chance to even state the question to the Senate. We had a controversy about that, and it was finally agreed that the motion should be made to-day.

I see no real parallel between the two cases. But I take this occasion to say, although off the Record, I am not talking particularly to this question, that I have consistently urged in the Senate—and I will not say there has been no exception on any particular vote—the policy of keeping freedom of debate always a principle to be observed by the Senate. Any abandonment of that in the past has been a mistake. I think we would have had a different result on the World Court vote if we could have waited until the League of Nations' secretariat notified the other sovereign nations of the world that they should not treat with the United States as a sovereign Nation, but ought to assemble themselves under the aegis of the League of Nations and have it determine what their action should be in the negotiations with the United States of America. And I might give other illustrations.

Since the Senator from Nebraska has yielded to me, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bingham	Gerry	McMaster	Sheppard
Blaine	Gillett	McNary	Smith
Bruce	Hale	Mayfield	Smoot
Cameron	Harris	Neely	Swanson
Caraway	Harrison	Nye	Trammell
Copeland	Heflin	Oddie	Tyson
Curtis	Howell	Overman	Wadsworth
Deneen	Johnson	Phipps	Warren
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Pine	Watson
Edge	Kendrick	Ransdell	Weller
Ernst	King	Reed, Mo.	Wheeler
Fernald	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Ferris	McKellar	Robinson, Ark.
Fess	McKinley	Sackett

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Williams] are engaged in a meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending motion of the Senator from Missouri be voted upon not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I presume the Senator would include in that request the right, if the motion be reconsidered, then to consider my motion to reconsider the vote had upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if it is expected to bring any other business before the Senate in the meantime?

Mr. SMOOT. If consideration of the motion occupies all the time, nothing will be done until we vote at 4 o'clock. If Senators desire to discuss it, but if nobody desires to discuss the question, the Senator would not object to laying it aside temporarily.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we are to proceed to-morrow at 1 o'clock to organize the impeachment court, though that will take only a few minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there are two objections to the proposition. One is the condition we find here on the floor now. The Senator from Nebraska rose some two hours ago to make a speech and we obtained a quorum for him, and now the Senate Chamber is deserted. Senators to whom the speech of the Senator from Nebraska ought to appeal leave the Chamber and do not hear the argument upon which the motion to reconsider is based.

Secondly, when we fix a time certain to vote, then Senators are going to desert the Chamber and are not going to stay here. We saw an example of another reason yesterday. When the time was fixed to vote the Senator from Pennsylvania occupied the last 30 minutes. I had no objection to that. Just before that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] called for a quorum, which took about 10 minutes. Some Senator could have occupied the floor during that time. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] could not even present his views. Therefore, I object.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas did not call for a quorum yesterday until after the Senator from Pennsylvania was recognized and had the floor, and the Senator from Mississippi knows that to be true.

Mr. HARRISON. I had not any objection to it except that it took about 10 minutes to call the roll. If that 10 minutes had not been occupied in the roll call, there would have been 10 minutes more to discuss the proposition and someone could have made a reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist upon his objection. We can make an arrangement that suits the Senator from Missouri as to the apportionment of the time, or provide that no other business shall interfere; but if he does not agree to a time for a vote he forces us to move to table the motion, which is the last thing we want to do.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator wants to make a motion to table, let him do it. Why should we be in such a hurry to give away $1,500,000,000? If the Senator wants to take that course, let him take it, but for the present I object to any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think we can agree on this matter. So far as I am concerned, all I want in the world is a chance, when Senators are here, to have the Senator from Nebraska present his views. I would like to present my views, and of course I want the door to be wide open for any other Senator to present his views. I would like to have the question disposed of on its merits. I have no doubt that we can agree on some time to vote to-morrow, and conduct the matter so that everybody shall have a fair chance on each side to argue the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I would be perfectly willing to say that the supporters of the motion should have three-fourths of the time if they want it. It is not a question of time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, under the rule, to prevent any unnecessary delay, a motion to lay on the table is in order at any time. There is no need to have an agreement on a time to vote, because a motion to lay on the table can be made at any time. I see no occasion for an agreement to vote at a specific time. If there is any delay in the matter, the Senator can move to lay on the table, and that ends it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As long as the motion is before the Senate, I think it ought to be kept before the Senate. I know the Senator from Missouri agrees with me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I agree to that, but I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider Senate bill 2858.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. With the understanding that it shall not displace the pending motion as the business before the Senate?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is asking unanimous consent that we take up a bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; Order of Business No. 379.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous-consent request first?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN JUDGES

Mr. REED of Missouri. I renew my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2858) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following salaries shall be paid to the several judges hereinafter mentioned in lieu of the salaries now provided for by law, namely:

To the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States the sum of $21,500 per year and to each of the Associate Justices thereof the sum of $20,000 per year.

To each of the circuit judges the sum of $15,000 per year.

To each of the district judges the sum of $12,500 per year.

To the chief justice of the Court of Claims and to each of the other judges thereof the sum of $12,500 per year.

To the chief justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $13,500 per year.

To the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $12,500 per year.

To the presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs Appeals and to the judges thereof the sum of $13,500 per year.

To each member of the Board of General Appraisers, which board functions as the customs trial court, the sum of $12,500 per year.

That all of said salaries shall be paid in monthly installments.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect on the first day of the month next following its approval.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am in favor of making a reasonable increase to the judiciary, but I am not in favor of the increase proposed by the bill. I therefore object.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Missouri not to make that motion because it would displace the unfinished business. We can take his bill up to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, did I not understand the Chair to state that the motion of the Senator from Missouri prevailed?

Mr. SMOOT. No; because I was trying to get the attention of the Chair at the time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I submit a parliamentary inquiry. Was not unanimous consent given for the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then I make the point of order that, consent having been given at this time for the consideration of the bill, it is not in order for the Senator from Florida to object to its further consideration. I want to be heard on the point of order, if the Chair is in doubt about its correctness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thoroughly agree with the Senator in regard to the rule. I did not know, however, that unanimous consent had been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent had been given and the bill was under consideration when the Senator from Florida spoke. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I did not know that a bill of this importance was going to come up under what might be termed a suspension of the rule. I believe that a reasonable increase should be made in the salaries of the judiciary and I am willing for this bill to be amended so as to give an increase of $2,000 a year to the district judges, to the circuit judges, to the judges of the Supreme Court, and probably to some of the judiciary in the District of Columbia and the Customs Court of Appeals in New York. But the bill in general carries an increase of compensation of about $5,000 to $6,500 a year to each member of the judiciary. I have not had time, the bill having come up unexpectedly, to get all of the details of the proposed increases, but in general it means raising the salaries about 65 to 75 per cent over the present salaries.

In considering the salaries to be paid the judiciary and to those occupying high offices I always reflect upon and think of the policy of the Government in dealing with the average, ordinary everyday employee of the Government. Scattered throughout the country, here in the city of Washington and elsewhere, the Government has thousands and thousands of employees who are contributing all of their time to the Government's service, who are working for the pitiful salaries of $1,200, $1,500, and $1,800 per annum; but, as a rule, when an effort has been made in this body to increase the salaries of those poor clerks, who, as I say, are working for a pittance, with scarcely enough to exist upon, we find at least certain Senators getting up and opposing the proposition and saying that it is not in keeping with Government economy; that we can not increase such salaries. Throughout all my public career I have been in favor of giving reasonable and adequate compensation to those filling positions requiring technical or professional training, but I never have worked myself up to the idea of placing them upon a pinnacle and giving them any salary they might desire and ignoring the right and justice of paying fair compensation to the poor employees who are eking out an existence working for the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am making these comparisons because I think it proper to make them. I guarantee that a bill could not be brought before the Senate by the unanimous consent to give 10 per cent increase in salary to employees who are working for the Government and who get salaries of under $2,000 per annum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Florida goes into a discussion of this matter, I wish to say that I do not say I will vote against the bill myself—I am on the committee from which it was reported—but I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri, who was present at the meeting of the committee, that I think it hardly fair to Senators who are on the committee and who opposed this bill that it should now be considered. The Senator remembers very well that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is absent and can not be here, having been called out of the city to deliver an address, and also the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and perhaps other Senators opposed the bill in committee. So I wish the Senator from Missouri would let the matter go over until those Senators may return. I think they would feel very grateful if the Senator would do that. They desire to be heard on the subject. I believe the Senator from Missouri will agree with me, because he remembers what took place in the committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I know the bill encountered some opposition.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that I shall not conclude my speech on the subject this afternoon unless the Senate shall remain in session very late, so I do not think there can be much hope of getting a vote on the bill this afternoon. I am going to discuss the bill a little. I am going to let the RECORD contain some comparisons and I am going to discuss the question of policy as applied to poor Government employees who scarcely get sufficient salaries to live on even in cheap rooms and cheap boarding houses, and the contrary policy that seems to prevail, with some Senators at least, when it comes to giving an increase of salary to those who now have salaries providing them with every reasonable comfort in life.

Mr. BRUCE. May I interrupt the Senator from Florida for a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not yield the floor but I yield for a question, not for an argument.

Mr. BRUCE. I merely wish the Senator to yield for a question. Does the Senator from Florida propose when he makes up his table of comparisons to institute a comparison also between the salaries that the Members of Congress voted to themselves last year and these proposed judicial salaries?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; I do not object to even showing a comparison as to that.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, I believe, was one of the Members of Congress who voted for an increase in the salary of Members of Congress?

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; I did not vote for the increase. I think it is all right, however. I did not vote for it, though; I voted against it. I was not willing to vote to increase my own salary.

Mr. BRUCE. I was not aware of that.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Regardless of the merits of the proposition I did not vote for it. I refused to vote for it and voted against it.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator remembers that increase. It seems to have been approved by the country generally, because I have never heard any objection made to it in any responsible quarter; but does the Senator think that the present salary of a Congressman furnishes quite a fair standard of comparison for what a judge should receive?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If we make that comparison, I say the salaries should not be increased to the point proposed in the pending measure. I do not think that the judges of the court of appeals—

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator can go to Florida after the Senate shall adjourn and practice law for the rest of the year, but a judge has to give all of his time exclusively, of course, to the discharge of his official duties from one end of the year to the other. He is absolutely debarred from the privilege of practicing law, and for all practical purposes the making of any addition of any kind whatsoever to his income.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator from Maryland may practice law during the recess, but there are a great many of us who in the vacation are kept very busy with the work of our constituencies and the interests of our States and we do not have time to practice law when we get away from here.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator is going to proceed along that line, I desire to say that I have a great respect and regard for the judiciary of the country, but I very seldom have seen a judge of a United States court who did not take a good long vacation each year, regardless of the condition of the docket of his court.

Mr. BRUCE. Of course a judge has the ordinary summer vacation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The judges take long vacations each year. I have a great deal of respect for the United States Supreme Court, but Senators will notice that court adjourning and taking long vacations every year while their docket is two or three years behind.

Mr. BRUCE. I am glad they do so, because I think that otherwise they would physically be unable to discharge the very onerous duties of their position.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not criticizing that; I will say, though, in some instances I think the judges take too much time in vacations when they have congested dockets, for thereby litigation is delayed and litigants are deprived of their rights which are pending in the courts. That militates always against men of moderate means or without means who have to contend with long delays in the courts. I do not approve of too much vacation.

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will allow me, I would suggest to him also that when he makes up the table to which he has referred, he institute a comparison between the salaries that the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are proposed to be paid under this bill and the salaries received, for instance, by the English judges, the chief justice of England, the Lord Chancellor of England, and the other English judges of dignity and importance.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think that is entirely irrelevant. I will confine myself to America. I do not care to take my examples from England.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me ask the Senator whether he draws that line of discrimination when he comes to apply judicial decisions to cases in which he may happen to be interested? Does the Senator rule out the English decisions in chancery and at common law?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think, if the Senator please, that there are a good many of them, some of the very old common-law, musty precedents, that ought to have been ruled out, and our courts have been ruling them out and changing policies. We have changed them by statutory law in this country in instance after instance. One of the plagues, one of the curses in this country, so far as our court proceedings are concerned, has been following too much the old English common-law precedents, musty and hoary with age.

Mr. BRUCE. We all learn something if we live long enough. I had supposed that the common law was the glory not only of English but also of American jurisprudence.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am very glad that America is getting away from being guided too much by English jurisprudence.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator, of course, does not want to apply anything but Floridian law.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Nothing better could be used as a guide, I assure the Senator.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I should like to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland about judges having to work so hard as compared with Representatives and Senators, that it ought to be remembered that once a judge is appointed he holds his position for life.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I was going to bring that out.

Mr. DILL. He does not have to spend $10,000 to get re-elected every few years.

Mr. BRUCE. All I have to say is that if some ill-equipped Members of Congress were to undertake to discharge the onerous and responsible duties that a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States discharges he would soon suffer a mental and physical breakdown.

Mr. DILL. What about the district judges whose salaries are going to be increased to $12,000?

Mr. BRUCE. Why should they not be?

Mr. DILL. Because I do not think they are entitled to such an increase.

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, the Senator thinks he is entitled to $10,000 a year, although every other year he is in Washington only for three months, but a judge of the circuit court of the United States is not entitled to $15,000 a year.

Mr. DILL. We increased the salary of Senators $2,500, but it is proposed by this bill to raise the salaries of judges $5,000.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not want any misunderstanding; I have a very high regard for the judiciary, and I appreciate the fact that they are rendering a great service to their country and to their Government; but I balk when it comes to the question of the enormous increase proposed by this bill.

Of course, when it comes to comparisons, we can argue such matters here from many different angles; but take a Member of the House of Representatives or a Member of the Senate. They have the expenses of their campaigns and a great deal more expense than the average judge has. Since I have been here I have seen Members of this body retire in order to accept judgeships. I have known others who had an ambition and a desire to do so.

So far as the question of work is concerned, the average Senator has all of his time occupied in representing his people, whether the Senate is in actual session or whether it is having an adjournment. The judges also, as a rule, have their vacations, and, as a rule, they do not have any longer hours than has a Senator. I believe if it be put on that basis of comparison, there is no reason why the increase should be made that is sought by this bill, if we are going to apply that as the standard.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, there are some Members of the Senate, who happen to be lawyers and who probably in the course of a year after they leave the Senate make twice the amount of salary that they received from the Public Treasury, and, if rumor can be believed, in some instances three or four times as much.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is correct. I think a great many Senators here would make more money in private life, if we are going to make the dollar the standard, than they make as Members of the Senate.

Mr. BRUCE. A judge has not that opportunity at all. He is totally barred from practicing law and from the privilege of making any addition of any kind to his income.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Judges do not have their positions imposed upon them; they seek them; they are eager to obtain them. In the Senator's State and in my State and all over the Union lawyers have been eager to become judges at the present salaries. A lawyer feels when he receives a lifetime appointment in the honorable position of a judge, a position of distinction and importance, at a good reasonable salary, that he is, indeed, fortunate. Judgeships are sought after all over the country by the best lawyers of the country, as a rule.

Mr. BRUCE. That is unquestionably so. Of course, the judicial position is one that carries along with it the very highest degree of public distinction and honor, but, at the same time, the judge has his material necessities as well as the other members of the community.

At any rate, I wish to thank the Senator from Florida for stating that I do not have to court the favor of my constituents with quite the same degree of assiduity that he does. I wish I could think that were true.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know what the Senator means when he refers to courting the favor of constituents. I try to represent them; but I do not believe that the average American, either in Maryland or in Florida or in any other State of the Union, when he comes to consider the question and comes to consider the salary policy of this country, would approve of the enormous increase in salary to the judiciary as proposed by this bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Now, let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the President of the United States receives $75,000 per annum, does he not?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly; he receives that sum.

Mr. BRUCE. I believe that was the salary during the incumbency of Mr. Taft as President; while President he received $75,000 a year. Why should he not as Chief Justice, a position that is certainly of almost, if not equivalent, dignity, receive $21,000 a year?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not see any reason why he should be paid that salary out of the pockets of the American people. He is getting a salary now of $15,000 a year, which is about $1,250 a month. If the proposal should be made to increase by 10 per cent the salary of every Government clerk in this city and throughout the United States who is working to-day for $1,250 a year, we could not get a dozen Senators here who would favor taking such a bill up out of order.

Mr. BRUCE. Since the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States was fixed, of course, the cost of living has just about doubled, has it not, for the Chief Justice and everybody else?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It probably has about doubled.

Mr. BRUCE. It has about doubled. So that in point of purchasing power the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States at present is not $15,000 a year; it is $7,500 a year; and, if for no other reason, these additions ought to be made to the salaries of judges because of the tremendous enhancement that has taken place in the cost of living.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course if we consider that there has been an increase of 50 per cent in the cost of living, it depends a great deal upon the station of life and the amount of expenditure. That might represent an increase of only $2,000 a year to the average family, or $2,500 a year to the average family; and yet it is proposed here to increase the salary of the Chief Justice $6,000 a year.

Mr. BRUCE. The wages of every servant in the land have been increased since the World War, the wages of every railroad employee, the wages of every mechanic, of every artisan. A skilled bricklayer in the city of Baltimore is receiving at the present time $14 a day, upward of $4,000 a year. Now, as I say, why should all wages be increased and practically all salaries in industrial life be increased, and yet the salaries of the judges, including the Chief Justice of the United States and the members of the Supreme Court of the United States, not be increased?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If we were to take the comparison of salaries, we would have to consider the salary from which we started. Take labor in this country: In my opinion, 15 or 20 years ago labor in this country was not getting more than about one-half the salary that labor should have been paid at that time. The people who were engaged in the various vocations requiring hard manual labor were receiving such poor compensation that they could not provide reasonably comfortable, decent places in which their families could live; they could not provide reasonable educational opportunities for their children; they could not enjoy any of what the average of us would like to enjoy in the way of pleasure or of amusement, because their wages were so inadequate that they could not do it. But that can not be said in regard to the distinguished men of this country who are occupying places on the judiciary or occupying positions in Congress. They had sufficient at least to live in reasonable comfort, and to enjoy reasonable recreation and amusement and pleasure from their earnings; but the poor laboring man of this country did not have 15 or 20 or 25 years ago.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator and myself will never disagree about the workers of the country. I do not hesitate to say—and I am arriving at a stage of life now where it is not so easy to impugn the sincerity of any statement I make—that to me the happiest thing that has been brought to my attention in the whole course of my existence is the steady improvement, as respects increase of wages and everything else, that has taken place in the condition of the working classes of this country. That, to me—and I say it unaffectedly—is the thing that of all others has given me the most pleasure.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It has given me a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BRUCE. But at the same time, of course, when we come to deal with an employment we must ask ourselves in what scale of dignity and importance that employment is; because certainly one employment is not entitled to precisely the same measure of pecuniary compensation as respects salary as another.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I fully realize that.

Mr. BRUCE. What position in the world could be a position of more supreme dignity and importance than that position of a judge? Chief Justice Marshall said, in the Virginia Constitutional Convention of 1829-30—

The greatest curse that an angry Heaven can call down upon a sinning people is a corrupt or an ignorant or a dependent judiciary—

Or words to that effect.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with Chief Justice Marshall's reference to the judiciary, and the honored position they occupy; but on the present salaries paid in this country I do not know of any corrupt judiciary. I think we have a very honorable judiciary, and, generally speaking, a very capable lot of men occupying the bench. That is outside of the question, however. I am dealing purely with the question of salaries and the policy of the Government in dealing with salaries.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes.

Mr. DILL. This bill has been brought up here without the Senate generally knowing about it, and I think we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frazier	McKellar	Reed, Mo.
Blease	Gerry	McMaster	Reed, Pa.
Bruce	Harris	McNary	Robinson, Ark.
Cameron	Harrison	Mayfield	Sackett
Copeland	Heflin	Metcalf	Sheppard
Curtis	Howell	Neely	Smoot
Deneen	Johnson	Norbeck	Swanson
Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Nye	Trammell
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Wadsworth
Ferris	Kendrick	Overman	Warren
Fess	La Follette	Phipps	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

RECESS

Mr. SMOOT. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, I ask that the Senate take a recess at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 23, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, April 22, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

All merciful Father, for all the encouragements that make us hopeful we bless Thee; for all loving messages and glad surprises we thank Thee; for sincere friendships we praise Thee, and for all the little joys and sweet blessings that come to us through the hours of each day we are grateful to Thee. So bless and help us with Thy spirit that hate shall lose its sting and malice its guile. Teach us to work as hard and be as just as if the whole world were looking on. Give us each day little opportunities to do good and subdue evil. Continue, blessed Saviour, to make the whole earth glad with a new song, young with a new spring, and alive with a new hope. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair recognize me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning and matters on the Speaker's table are cleared up I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing of business on the Speaker's desk that he may address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, would the gentleman care to disclose on what subject?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am going to speak on the question of the President's economy program as outlined in what is known as the Mills bill. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I will withhold that for a moment.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I present five conference reports on bridge bills for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bills by title. The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8771. An act to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich.;

H. R. 8908. An act granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River;

H. R. 8190. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Calif.;

H. R. 8918. An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Louisiana, Mo.; and

H. R. 8950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Shakopee, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed.

The conference reports and statements are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8771) to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4, with an amendment as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the said American Transit Co., its successors or assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of the bridge constructed under the authority of this act file with the Secretary of War an itemized statement under oath showing the actual original cost of such bridge and its approaches and appurtenances, which statement shall include any expenditures actually made for engineering and legal services; and any fees, discounts, and other expenditures actually incurred in connection with the financing thereof. Such itemized statements of cost shall be investigated by the Secretary of War at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, and for that purpose the said American Transit Co., its successors or assigns, in such manner as may be deemed proper, shall make available and accessible all records connected with the construction and financing of such bridge, and the findings of the Secretary of War as to the actual cost of such bridge shall be made a part of the records of the War Department."

Change section 3 to section 2, section 4 to section 3, and section 5 to section 4, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8771) to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River within or near the city of Detroit, Mich., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: The original House bill was simply a short form bill extending the time for beginning and completing the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River, the consent of Congress for the construction of which had heretofore been granted and extended on two former occasions. Senate amendment No. 1 was a provision granting to the parties who are to construct the bridge the right to condemn property needed for the construction of a bridge. Such a provision is inserted in bills granting the consent of Congress for the construction of bridges over interstate navigable waterways of this country. But Congress has no right to authorize anyone to condemn property in a foreign country that may be needed for the construction of a bridge over an international waterway. Upon this amendment the Senate receded.

On No. 2: Senate amendment No. 2 was a provision which gave to the State of Michigan or any of its political subdivisions the right to take over and acquire the bridge at any time by condemnation, and after 20 years from its completion to take it over by condemnation under a limited measure of damages. This is a provision which is ordinarily inserted where Congress grants its consent for the construction of a toll bridge over interstate navigable waterways in this country. It is not within the power of Congress to grant to the State of Michigan or the city of Detroit or any other political subdivision thereof the right to condemn an international bridge, part of which is located in a foreign country. Moreover, such a provision might lead to complications in our friendly relations with the Canadian Government, and that provision was disapproved by the State Department. Therefore the Senate receded from its amendment No. 2.

On Nos. 3 and 4: The House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 and 4 and agreed to the same with an amendment. The substance of these amendments agreed to is that the company who constructs the bridge will be required within 90 days after its completion to file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement of the cost of the bridge, including expenditures actually made for engineering and legal services and fees, discounts, and other expenditures actually incurred in connection with the financing thereof. Such statement will be investigated by the Secretary of War and his findings with relation thereto shall be made a part of the records of the War Department. It was thought advisable to include a provision of this kind in order that there might be an official finding and record as to the cost of the bridge for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of tolls that may be charged for passing over it.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway or combined highway and railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation from a point in the vicinity of Dahlgren, in the northeastern end of King George County, in the State of Virginia, to a point south of Popes Creek, in the county of Charles, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

"SEC. 3. The said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Virginia, the State of Maryland, any political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property); and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"SEC. 5. The said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge, the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of its records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"SEC. 6. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge; in fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operation, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and the privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to the George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River near Dahlgren, King George County, Va., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: The Senate made one amendment to the House bill, which consisted in striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting in lieu thereof a new bill. The Senate amendment in substance was the same as the original House bill, with the exception of omitting certain provisions which the Senate would not approve. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agrees to the same with certain amendments which have been embodied in a new bill which is set out in full in the conference report in lieu of the Senate amendment. As finally agreed upon the bill now represents the agreement of the committees of the House and Senate with reference to the standard form that should be used in granting the consent of Congress for the construction of toll bridges over interstate navigable waterways of the United States. It grants to the States of Maryland and Virginia and their political subdivisions the right, either jointly or severally, to acquire and take over the bridge by condemnation at any time upon the payment of the full value thereof. It also provides that if this privilege of condemnation is not exercised until after 20 years from the completion of the bridge, the bridge can then be taken over and acquired for a limited measure of damages, the limitation consisting principally in a provision that in fixing the compensation to be paid there shall not be included any credit or allowance for good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits. The bill agreed upon also provides that if the bridge is taken over or acquired by the States or their political subdivisions, they in turn may operate it as a toll bridge, but they must so adjust the tolls as to provide a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge, and provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for the bridge within a period of not to exceed 30 years. After the amount paid for the bridge shall have been amortized from the tolls they must thereafter be reduced and adjusted so as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary to maintain, repair, and operate the bridge.

O. B. BURNES,
TILMAN PARKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8190) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Colo., having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Colorado River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near the city of Blythe, Calif., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"Sec. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes, or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

"Sec. 3. The said John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"Sec. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of California, the State of Arizona, any political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"Sec. 5. The said John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns shall make available to the Secretary of War all of his records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"Sec. 6. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge; in fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operation, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"Sec. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and the privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said John Lyle Harrington, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"Sec. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8190) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Colo., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying report:

On No. 1: The Senate made one amendment to the House bill which consisted in striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting an entirely new bill. The Senate amendment in substance was the same as the original House bill with the exception of omitting certain provisions which the Senate would not approve. The House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agrees to the same with certain amendments which have been embodied in a new bill which is set out in full in the conference report in lieu of the Senate amendment. As finally agreed upon the bill now represents the agreement of the committees of the House and Senate with reference to the standard form that should be used in granting the consent of Congress for the construction of toll bridges over interstate navigable waterways of the United States. It grants to the States of California and Colorado and their political subdivisions the right, either jointly or severally, to acquire and take over the bridge by condemnation at any time upon the payment of the full value thereof. It also provides that if this privilege of condemnation is not exercised until after 20 years from the completion of the bridge, the bridge can then be taken over and acquired for a limited measure of damages, the limitation consisting principally in a provision that in fixing the compensation to be paid there shall not be included any credit or allowance for good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits. The bill agreed upon also provides that if the bridge is taken over or acquired by the States or their political subdivisions, they in turn may operate it as a toll bridge, but they must so adjust the tolls as to provide a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for the bridge within a period of not to exceed 30 years. After the amount paid for the bridge shall have been amortized from the tolls they must thereafter be reduced and adjusted so as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary to maintain, repair, and operate the bridge.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8918) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Louisiana, Mo., having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, beginning at or near the city of Louisiana, Pike County, Mo., and extending to a point opposite, in Pike County, Ill., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"Sec. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the said Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, appropriate, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes, or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State or States in which such real estate and other property are located upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State or States, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State or States.

"Sec. 3. The said Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"Sec. 4. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Missouri, the State of Illinois, any political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditure for necessary improvements.

"Sec. 5. The said Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of their records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"Sec. 6. If such bridge shall be taken over and acquired by the States or political subdivisions thereof under the provisions of section 4 of this act, the same may thereafter be operated as a toll bridge; in fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide as far as possible a sufficient fund to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring such bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operation, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"Sec. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and the privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Charles G. Buffum, Andrew J. Murphy, Lloyd Stark, and W. J. Garner, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"Sec. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And agree to the same.

On No. 1: The Senate made one amendment to the House bill which struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted a new bill in lieu thereof. The House recedes from its disagreement to this Senate amendment and agrees to the same with certain changes which are set out in full in the conference report and which carry out very largely the provisions of the original House bill. As the bill passed the House it contained a provision authorizing the States of Missouri and Illinois or their political subdivision to jointly or severally acquire and take over the bridge at any time by condemnation under the laws of either State, upon the payment of the full value of the property. The bill also contained the further provision that if the bridge should not be taken over or condemned until after the expiration of 20 years from the date of completion, then the States or their political subdivisions could take it over by condemnation upon the payment of a limited measure of damages, the limitation consisting principally in a provision that in fixing the damages or compensation there should not be included any credit or allowance for good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits.

The House bill contained the further provision that if the bridge should be taken over or acquired by the States or their political subdivisions, it should be maintained free of tolls after five years from the date it was acquired.

The Senate amendment struck out this latter provision and would have allowed the States or their political subdivision after taking over the bridge by condemnation to operate it as a toll bridge indefinitely, or as long as they might desire to do so.

The agreement reached and now reported provides that if the bridge is taken over or acquired by condemnation or otherwise by the States of Illinois and Missouri or their political subdivisions jointly or severally, they may charge tolls for the use of the bridge, but they must so adjust the tolls as to provide a sufficient fund to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing and operating the bridge, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for it within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring it, and thereafter the bridge shall either be maintained free of tolls, or the tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary to maintain, repair, and operate the bridge.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8950) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Shakopee, Minn., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: The Senate amended the House bill by inserting a provision that the bridge should not be constructed or commenced until the plans and specifications shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers as being adequate from the standpoint of the volume and weight of traffic which will pass over it. Similar provisions have been inserted in other recent bridge bills. The Chief of Engineers has communicated with the committees of the House and Senate and advised them that if such provisions are inserted in other bridge bills it will make necessary the employment of additional help in his office and the appropriation of additional funds to pay the expenses thereof; that if such provisions are inserted in bridge bills it will make it necessary for the Chief of Engineers' office to provide inspectors at the construction of all bridges for the purpose of seeing that the plans and specifications are carried out in the construction of bridges. Moreover, the Chief of Engineers has pointed out to the two committees that if such provisions are inserted in bridge bills, requiring the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to approve the plans for bridges from the standpoint of their adequacy with reference to the weight and volume of traffic which will pass over it, that the United States would probably be liable in case a bridge should prove to be insufficient in strength to carry the weight of traffic which might pass over it. For these and other reasons the Chief of Engineers urged very strongly that this provision be omitted from bridge bill and his recommendations have received the approval of the two committees. Therefore the Senate has receded from its amendment to the House bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3559. An act to incorporate Strayer College.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1039) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and ordered that Mr. WALSH, Mr. DENEEN, and Mr. GOFF act as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10164. An act granting the consent of Congress to Cape Girardeau Chamber of Commerce (Inc.) to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8771. An act entitled "An act to extend the time for commencing the construction of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city of Detroit, Mich.;"

H. R. 8908. An act granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River;

H. R. 8190. An act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River near Blythe, Calif.;"

H. R. 8918. An act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Louisiana, Mo.;" and

H. R. 8950. An act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota to construct a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Shakopee, Minn."

SENATE BILL REFERRED

Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

H. R. 3559. An act to incorporate Strayer College; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6707, the Interior Department appropriation bill, and move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate remaining in dispute and agree to the conference and appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6707. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference and appoint the conferees. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 202

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise authorized by law, additional compensation per annum, payable monthly, to certain employees of the House, as follows:

To the clerk to the Speaker's table the sum of $400;
To the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means the sum of $600;
To the clerks of the following committees: Judiciary, Accounts, and Claims, each, the sum of $420;
To the superintendent of the House document room the sum of $450;
To Joel Grayson, special employee in the House document room, the sum of $560.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution. I do it for this reason: A law was passed by the House and Senate and signed by the President fixing the compensation of employees of the House and employees of the Senate, including clerks of the committees, and while it may well be true that those who are mentioned in this resolution are entitled to and ought to have an increased compensation, many of the other employees not mentioned in the resolution may have just as good a claim for increases as those who are mentioned in it, and if we are to have a revision of salaries I think we ought to have a committee to go over the whole subject and give every employee a chance to be heard. I am opposed to making fish of one and fowl of another. The Committee on Accounts brings in this resolution ostensibly to pay these increases out of the contingent fund of the House. But under a precedent that has heretofore been made, it has been held that this contingent resolution acts as authority of law for the Committee on Appropriations to make the increase permanent.

I do not think it is a sound parliamentary rule. We have a law enacted by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President fixing these salaries in definite amounts, and I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this resolution to pay this money out of the contingent fund of the House. If we can repeal this particular law fixing salaries by passing a simple resolution of the House, why can not we repeal other laws in the same manner?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to argue that proposition. It has already been decided.

The SPEAKER. This form of resolution has been the practice for a number of years.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, I think the circumstances were somewhat different. The precedents, as I now recall them, were cases where there was a resolution from the House creating a new position. But here in this instance we have got a law passed by the House and passed by the Senate and signed by the President, and while I am going to acknowledge with perfect frankness that those decisions would seem to hold that this is in order, yet I believe that under a sound parliamentary construction these former decisions were in error and ought to be overruled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that the Committee on Accounts would not undertake to add additional employees, but it certainly has been the practice for a great many years to increase salaries by resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Chair to one question. In the Sixty-fifth Congress I made the same point of order that my colleague has made against a similar resolution and Mr. Speaker Clark, in answering a parliamentary inquiry, held that the Committee on Accounts has authority to bring in such a resolution respecting any employee of the House, and that has been the rule ever since.

The SPEAKER. That is a precedent, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has a Member a right to offer an amendment to a pending resolution under these circumstances?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has an hour, which he can dispose of as he desires.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes; for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The amendment that I had proposed to offer is as follows—

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York did not yield to the gentleman from Washington for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I had thought to read it in the time granted to me, but as it can not be acted on under the parliamentary situation, I shall not read it.

Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution proposes that the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund, and so on, extra compensation to the clerk to the Speaker's table, $400; extra compensation to the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means several hundred dollars; and to the clerks of the following committees, Judiciary, Accounts, and Claims, each the sum of $420; to the superintendent of the document room $450, and to Joel Grayson $560.

Now, I had that to offer, to amend the resolution so as to authorize the Clerk of the House to pay to the clerk of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization extra compensation, the sum of $600. I have had recently to borrow clerks from the Department of Labor in order to partially carry on the work of the committee and to meet the demands made on the clerk of that committee by other Members of the House and their clerks.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Washington that if the chairmen of the various committees will restrain themselves until the Committee on Accounts has an opportunity to properly review these cases which have been brought to our attention by the chairmen of the House committees, we can determine what increase of compensation, if any, the clerks of these committees should have, and then we shall endeavor to satisfy the different chairmen, including the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I may say to the gentleman that I am now paying out of my personal income several hundreds of dollars in order to keep up the work of the committee. A Senator has offered the clerk of the committee of which I am chairman a fine salary—about $1,000 more than that expert clerk is paid—to become personal secretary to the Member of the other body. The clerk has decided to remain with the House committee, for he realizes that the committee's legislative program must be pressed very hard from now until adjournment in preparing legislation which the House is asking for. That is what we all call loyalty. It should be rewarded.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman can rest content with the assurance that his case will be considered with the others. Why not withhold until the others are taken into consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All Members know what the hitch is. There are a dozen committees of the House that are known as first-rank committees, those that formerly had appropriations under their jurisdiction. Most of them had and have clerks and assistant clerks at various rates of pay. Then the House has a number of so-called second-rank committees, which have a lot of work to do, with a clerk and a messenger or janitor assigned to each one of those. Many of the clerks who belong to these committees and who have been in their positions a sufficient time to become expert believe that they ought to have more pay. That is the case with the Committee on the Public Lands, and with the Committee on Immigration, the Committee on Accounts, and with others that I might mention where the routine work is really heavy. Now, the proposition is how to secure additional pay for the really overworked clerks, and that at once is met by the proposition that hereafter the clerks of all the committees shall be similarly taken care of. I wish the members of the Committee on Accounts would drop in at any hour, 8.30 to 5.30, and see the vast amount of public and congressional business that is carried on in the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, a large part of it of a personal nature for my colleagues. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR], and I shall not now read the amendment which I had in mind.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MRS. F. S. KOPETSCHINTZ

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, there is another resolution that I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 108

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mrs. F. S. Kopetschintz, daughter of Henry T. Duryea, late employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary of the position he held, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, the expenses of the last illness and funeral of the said Henry T. Duryea, not to exceed the sum of $250.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORT DEARBORN ADDITION TO CHICAGO

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 9964) releasing and granting to the city of Chicago any and all reversionary rights of the United States in and to the streets, alleys, and public grounds in Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago, with a Senate amendment, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9964 and moves to concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9964) releasing and granting to the city of Chicago any and all reversionary rights of the United States in and to the streets, alleys, and public grounds in Fort Dearborn addition to Chicago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his personal privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in the Washington Post appears in large headlines:

Colladay denies jail charge. Says BLANTON statement in House false.

I send that to the Speaker's desk. I claim privilege on that and then I have another one.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the gentleman's personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas claim privilege on the headlines?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; on that headline where it says my statement about Colladay was false. It also says it in the body of the article. The Speaker will notice where the charge is made that my statement, which I made here in the House of Representatives in my Representative capacity, was false. Then I call the Chair's attention to the following, which appeared in the Star—

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. That is not the same question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to take up the time of the House on two separate matters, hence am presenting them together.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in order to preserve my rights, I make a point of order against the first personal privilege presented by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. We will decide that now, then. It has been held by a uniform line of precedents that where a Member of the House is charged with making a false statement in his representative capacity that it is privileged, and I submit it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is sufficient. The Chair thinks the statement would have to go further than the mere statement that the charge made was false. The Chair thinks it would have to go to the extent of imputing some dishonorable motive or purpose on the part of the gentleman. The Chair does not see that in either the headlines or the body of the letter. The Chair finds this in the letter and thinks this is what the gentleman is referring to—

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair will read the headlines of the paper I sent to him, which is a different issue from the one the Chair has in his hand, he will see it is different.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is referring to the body of the letter. The Chair does not think that headlines should be considered by themselves.

Mr. BLANTON. But most of the people read only the headlines.

The SPEAKER. But that is not a definite statement. A headline statement does not mean the body of the statement itself. The gentleman is founding his question of privilege on this, I assume:

The statement that I was indicted is false, and the statement that I was in jail is equally false.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Colladay intimated that my statement about him was false. But predicated on what the Washington Star has said in its headlines, the Washington Star, which is one of the leading papers of the United States, has said in this headline that BLANTON's statement is false.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman means the Washington Post?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I mean the Washington Post, which is a national paper.

The SPEAKER. That headline is as follows:

Colladay denies jail or indictment charge. Republican committeeman says BLANTON statement in House false.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is something that goes out to the public all over the United States, and I am prepared to show that my statement is absolutely true in spirit and in letter, and I am prepared to show that that statement was given out to the press by one of our colleagues [Mr. FAIRCHILD] when he, the gentleman from New York, had been denied the right to put it in the RECORD, although I asked that he be given the time. He gave it out when he had been denied the right to insert it in the RECORD. As I say, I am prepared to show that my statement concerning Mr. Edward F. Colladay is absolutely true. I can prove it to the Chair and everyone in this House by the court records, which I hold in my hand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always inclined to give full latitude to questions of privilege where a Member shows it affects him in his representative capacity.

Mr. BLANTON. This does affect me in my representative capacity.

The SPEAKER. It appears in this article that the gentleman made a speech on the floor of the House wherein he charged that a certain individual had been indicted.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I did not charge that.

The SPEAKER. Or whatever it may have been.

Mr. BLANTON. I stated that he had been charged with forgery.

The SPEAKER. Now, the only thing that appears of record is that this gentleman says that the statement that he was indicted is false and the statement that he was in jail is equally false. That does not impute to the gentleman some dishonorable motive or purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the judgment of the court here in the District of Columbia to show that my statement was absolutely true in every particular.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, that is not the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact. The only question for the Chair to decide is whether this statement in the newspaper affected the gentleman in his capacity as a Member of the House or imputed motives to him which were improper. The Chair does not see that at all. It is a mere denial of the facts stated by the gentleman from Texas with no imputation of any improper motive. The Chair can not fail to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I have another one that is good, Mr. Speaker. Knowing the Chair as well as I do, I know he can not hold it is out of order. [Laughter.]

In the Washington Star of Tuesday, April 20, 1926, appears—

Citizens denounce attack on Fenning; northwest group brands accusers un-American and cowardly.

Then it says:

We deplore and denounce as un-American, unpatriotic, and opposed to all the laws of justice—

The impeachment I made of Mr. Fenning.

The SPEAKER. Does the article mention the gentleman by name?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but that is not necessary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the additional question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit it is not required that the article mention my name, but under the precedents of the House any statement which singles out some one without mentioning him, by innuendo or otherwise, which imputes motives that affect a person in his standing or affects his integrity is a question of privilege. It is well known to everyone in this House and to everyone in this city that I am the one who preferred impeachment charges in this matter, and this A. P. Siler resolution states that was un-American, unpatriotic, and cowardly.

Mr. SNELL. That is merely a general newspaper charge and the gentleman's name is not mentioned, if I remember correctly.

Mr. BLANTON. That does not make any difference. It imputes a wrong motive to the one who preferred impeachment charges against Mr. Fenning, and the gentleman certainly does not want a precedent established here that when a Member of Congress in his representative capacity—

Mr. SNELL. I am maintaining the precedents of the House as well as the dignity of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. When a Member in his representative capacity presents impeachment charges, he certainly can not be charged with being unpatriotic or with doing a cowardly act.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read what he thinks is the ground, if there is a ground, on which the gentleman bases his question of personal privilege. This is a part of a resolution adopted by the Northwestern Suburban Citizens' Association.

The resolution declares:

It has happened, not often, but too frequently for a broad-minded, dignified body of men who should be, or aim to be, an example for the intelligent people in all the world to follow, that men of honor and great repute who have climbed the ladder of success by faithful and dignified service, who have been respected by all right-thinking people who have known them, and are acceptably occupying an exalted position by the wish of the people whom they represent, have been shamelessly and in a cowardly, unpatriotic way maligned by those who so far forgot themselves as to insult the dignity of the House of Representatives, as well as to insult the entire citizenry of the United States, by squandering the time and patience of all fair-minded Americans, whose high ambition is for fair play and justice, and who are waiting for legislation that should be enacted, rather than listen to the rantings of a barn-storming political demagogue.

We deplore and denounce as un-American, unpatriotic, and opposed to all the laws of justice and equity this plan to defame, from the Halls of Congress, to the whole world the character and integrity of our highly esteemed and worthy honorable commissioner, Col. Frederick A. Fenning, whom certain ones are trying to immolate without a fair and just opportunity to be allowed a hearing, a persecution that is displeasing to all fair-minded Americans.

The Chair thinks that, while the gentleman from Texas is not mentioned specifically, it is the plain intention to charge that any Member of the House of Representatives who made these charges, whether they are true in fact or not, was unpatriotic and insulted the dignity of the House. The Chair thinks that founds a question of privilege. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if uninterrupted, I hope to take up much less of the time of the House than that to which I am entitled.

I have shown by evidence of probative conclusiveness that for 23 years continuously Dr. William A. White, who is the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane, has wrongfully confederated with Frederick A. Fenning and has named him committee in each and every petition he has filed, aggregating several hundred. While testifying under oath before our committee Doctor White was not able to name one other person whom he had ever named as committee or recommended as committee in any of his many petitions other than Mr. Fenning in 23 long years.

ADMITTED BY DR. WILLIAM A. WHITE

I showed from the official hearings that Doctor White testified under oath in 1906 that he had recommended Mr. Fenning in his petitions for appointment as committee, and that when Congressman Wallace asked the question:

For the purpose of preparing these petitions in lunacy, does Mr. Fenning have free access to the hospital records of these cases and their Army papers?—

That Doctor White replied:

I think so.

And I showed that as far back as 1906, 20 years ago, Mr. Frederick A. Fenning admitted that he was then guardian and committee for 69 inmates of St. Elizabeths, most of whom were veterans of wars.

CONCESSION GIVEN ONLY TO FREDERICK A. FENNING

I introduced before our committee and this House the sworn statement of Mrs. Ellen H. Finotti, who for the past eight years was the record clerk there in St. Elizabeths, who testified that Dr. William A. White ordered that Frederick A. Fenning "should have free access to such records and to correspondence concerning any cases that he should ask for," and that no other attorney enjoyed such privilege or concession.

CERTIFIED TO IN VETERANS' BUREAU

I showed that the control officer of the Veterans' Bureau, Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney, who was ordered by General Hines to investigate St. Elizabeths Hospital, certified in his official report which he filed with Director Hines on April 26, 1924, that he learned—that one Frederick A. Fenning, Esq., an attorney, whose office is in the Evans Building, appears to have certain privileges and concessions shown him in contacting claimants of the bureau at the hospital, and that he was then guardian of 100 bureau patients—

And Doctor Stickney further officially certified in his said report that Mr. Fenning—constantly opposes the transfer of his wards from St. Elizabeths, and that Superintendent White is very friendly to Mr. Fenning, and that he raises the question as to the propriety of allowing one attorney in the city to obtain guardianship of so many beneficiaries of the bureau.

CORROBORATED BY CHIEF CLERK OF ST. ELIZABETHS

Frank M. Finotti was employed in St. Elizabeths 42 years. He was chief clerk until July 1, 1925. Doctor White testified under oath before our committee that when Frank Finotti had been employed 40 years in St. Elizabeths and under the law was required to retire, he prevailed upon the Interior Department to issue an order permitting him to serve two years longer, and that he did serve two years after the law provided his retirement, thus serving 42 years in St. Elizabeths as a trusted employee.

I produced before this House and our committee the sworn statement of said Frank M. Finotti, wherein he testified under oath that Frederick A. Fenning—had free access to all records and correspondence, allowed him by Dr. William A. White, and I have seen him many times going through such records hunting up information concerning inmates who had money and property, or who were entitled to pensions or compensation.

And he further testified that he had seen several hundred petitions filed by Doctor White wherein Doctor White recommended that Frederick A. Fenning be appointed committee.

It is not conjecture that I have put before you gentlemen. It is admissions from Doctor White and Mr. Fenning themselves, official printed documents of this Congress, certified copies of court records, certified accounts and official certificates of court officials acceptable in any court proceeding, and the sworn evidence of credible witnesses who are unimpeachable, that I have placed before this Congress and which shows that for 23 long years Dr. William A. White and Frederick A. Fenning have been in wrongful collusion and have wrongly conspired, confederated, and acted together in unlawfully exploiting afflicted and helpless veterans of all wars, many of them being perfectly sane yet who were cruelly mistreated behind the barred windows and high-walled grounds of St. Elizabeths. It is evidence of probative force and effect. You can not wave it away by a motion of the hand. It calls for action. There must be definite, proper action to satisfy it.

COUNTLESS CASES NOT BEFORE AUDITOR

There are many, many cases in which Frederick A. Fenning has drawn fat commissions which have long since been disposed of and are not embraced in the ones enumerated in the report I have filed from Auditor Davis, of the Supreme Court of this District. Only the live, pending cases that were still before the court and which on May 1, 1925, Mr. Fenning was required under the law to file his annual report appear in the certified report of said auditor, Herbert L. Davis. I have not yet told you about the old cases disposed of during the past 23 years—and there are several hundred of them—in which Mr. Fenning has been paid thousands of dollars in commissions, but I have thus far brought to your attention only the live present pending cases, concerning which reports had to be made on May 1, 1925, and in which live, pending cases Auditor Davis certifies that Mr. Fenning had received $109,070.25 of his wards' money in fees and commissions and only about $14,000 of that was previous to the year 1920.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me get these facts before the House first, and then I will gladly yield to my friend from Mississippi.

I made Doctor White admit under oath that Mr. Fenning had told him that he owned a share of stock in Gawler's Undertaking Co. and that he was attorney for Gawler's Undertaking Co. This is the undertaking company that buries Mr. Fenning's wards.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the point in issue.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes I am. I am showing that my charges impeaching Frederick A. Fenning were not cowardly and were not unpatriotic, which is the charge that was made by A. J. Siler's resolution against me in the Star.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is undertaking to state something about Doctor White. Doctor White is not concerned in this matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; he most certainly is concerned; he is Mr. Fenning's collaborator and partner in some of these matters.

Mr. KING. Why does not the gentleman show he is not unpatriotic, and why does he not answer the charge in the Star?

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to reply to that statement before I get through.

Mr. KING. You are going to have an opportunity to be heard before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am going to answer this article first in this forum, and I will get through in a few minutes if the gentleman will not bother me.

I showed by Doctor White testifying under oath—

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a ruling on the question of whether Doctor White is involved in these charges against the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not undertake to answer that question, not knowing the facts. The Chair thinks the gentleman is proceeding in order.

Mr. KING. Has the membership no relief whatever from this thing, day after day?

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact.

Mr. BLANTON. You will never get any relief from it until you put Mr. Fenning out of office and you put Doctor White out of office [applause], because I am going to the people of the country on this matter if I have to. Both of them must be put out.

I made Doctor White admit under oath that Mr. Fenning had admitted to him that he owned a share of stock in the Laurel Sanitarium, which is presided over by a former doctor of St. Elizabeths, and that Mr. Fenning is general attorney for it.

I made Doctor White admit under oath that he and Mr. Fenning have had a joint account in the Washington Loan & Trust Co., of which Mr. Fenning was a director, and that they have bought notes together and have invested in financial matters together under facts that in law make them partners, and you can not escape that conclusion. For in the United States when two men contribute their money into a joint fund and a joint account, and use such joint funds in buying and selling real-estate notes and mortgages, dividing the profits between them, in the way Doctor White and Frederick A. Fenning have been carrying on a joint business, they are partners in the eyes of the law, no matter how much each may now deny it.

AND THEY REALIZED IT DID NOT LOOK GOOD

Both Doctor White and Mr. Fenning have realized that they could not afford to let these facts become public, for when I wrote a letter to Doctor White and asked him specific questions about these joint operations I made him admit that he refused to answer my letter and refused to give the information demanded. And when I had him brought before a committee and put under oath and asked the questions, he first refused to answer, and I had to compel him to answer before he would admit the facts.

AND FENNING CLOSED UP LIKE AN OYSTER

And you will remember that when I wrote a letter to Frederick A. Fenning and asked him to answer my questions about his commissions he replied that I would have to get the facts from the courts under such rules as were prescribed there. He did not believe that I would ever go to the trouble of getting all these facts from the courts, for it has taken extremely hard work for weeks, but I am getting the facts, and I am placing them before you and the country. Then I made Doctor White admit under oath that when Fenning ceased to be a director of the Washington Loan & Trust Co.—

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if there is not, we will have a call of the House, for I am going to finish this now. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

Mr. BLANTON. I made Doctor White admit under oath—

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield? Do not get us all into St. Elizabeths.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield; there is nothing but politics that makes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] do what he is doing now. [Applause.] I made Doctor White admit that when Frederick A. Fenning ceased to be a director of the Washington Loan & Trust Co. on February 8, 1922, to become director in the National Savings & Trust Co., that he and Mr. Fenning immediately transferred their partnership account to Fenning's new bank, the National Savings & Trust Co., where they have kept their joint partnership account ever since.

WHITE AND FENNING BORROW TOGETHER

And I made Dr. William A. White admit under oath that when he and Fenning needed any money for their joint operations they have borrowed same together, and that they borrowed money together from the Riggs National Bank in Washington in their joint operations and investments. It did not seem to occur to Doctor White that all of these facts placed him in an unenviable position, for after I had grilled him for about two hours Tuesday night, and I had to grill him and corkscrew him to get any facts out of him, as he tried at first to hide behind the criminal's old subterfuge of saying, "I don't remember." He stated in the press that I had treated him as one who was under accusations. I made it very plain to him last night that he was under accusations, and that I was accusing him, and that I was asking for his removal from St. Elizabeths as superintendent.

I have shown by the official certificate of Director Hines that Mr. Fenning has received from your United States Veterans' Bureau as funds of the World War veterans who are his wards the enormous sum of $733,855.87. He has put it in the National Loan & Trust Co., of which he is director for at least some time, and gotten the benefits from it in dividends on his stock.

I have shown that Fenning is a common barrator. He has written to people all over the country to employ him—people he had never met and never seen—and he succeeded in having them employ him to prosecute scores of claims against the Government. That is common barratry in every State in the Union. I have shown by good proof that Mr. Fenning is a common champertor.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. We can not hear very well over here; but is this the same fellow that they charge with robbing the disabled soldier boys?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and he has been doing it for 23 years in conspiracy with Doctor White?

Mr. HOWARD. You call him a barrator and champertor; why do you not call him the rest of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the main generalissimo of all the defenders of Fenning. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has assented to the use of the word "robber." On Monday I asked the gentleman this question: Has the gentleman any knowledge as to whether any charge of delinquency by the guardian in the District of Columbia has been laid before the officer—

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I can not yield. I assure the gentleman that the report of the investigator, Dr. Henry Ladd Stickney, of the Veterans' Bureau, made to General Hines, where he showed that Fenning was collaborating with Doctor White, and that Doctor White gave him these concessions, was not in the interest of the veterans of the country.

Mr. LUCE. After the gentleman so informed me I read the report cited by him and it contains no charge of delinquency.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I do not yield any further. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] rose to defend Fenning, and he prevented an investigation by the Veterans' Bureau Committee until the steering committee said, "You must go ahead." I will let the gentleman defend him before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Let me answer further the gentleman from Massachusetts for one minute. Let me tell the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] when the people in his district find out there are 900 World War veterans in St. Elizabeths, none of whom were ever lawfully committed there by a legal judgment of the court, they are going to have the gentleman so busy answering his defense in his district he will have no time to bother me when I try to get up and tell people something important. [Applause.] I can not yield further.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I saw one member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Affairs on the other side applaud the gentleman from Massachusetts, indicating that he evidently agrees with the contention of that sub rosa committee here in Washington, which denounces Congress as being unpatriotic for investigating these affairs. I desire to call attention to one item set out in the statement put in the record and certified to by the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. That is the case of Neils P. J. Erendjerg, a demented, disabled soldier of the World War. The record shows that this man Fenning was appointed as guardian, or committee, as he calls it. On June 1, 1920, he received his first commission of 10 per cent, $152.52. The next year $118.30. The next year he was allowed two commissions, one $148.65 and one of $150.90. On June 23, 1923, he was allowed a commission out of that poor boy's estate of 22 per cent, plus, which amounted to $500.

The next year he took $206.11. The next year he took $216.82, amounting in all to $1,493.39, for merely being the pallbearer of this boy's check between the Veterans' Bureau and his bank and what little went to the boy's support in St. Elizabeths Hospital. That is one of the charges made, for investigating which we are accused of being unpatriotic. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I want to relieve the rank and file of the Members on the same side of the aisle with the gentleman from Massachusetts, because the most of them are for this investigation and do not believe in this business.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want to know what the court is doing that makes such an allowance as this. It seems to me the judge of the court who sits in this case is entitled to about as much criticism as the man who charges such an unreasonable commission. My colleague is doing the House a valuable service in throwing the light of publicity on these transactions.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of them are perfunctorily signing orders whenever Mr. Fenning brings them there and sticks them under their noses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Unless it is something defensive, I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman wants to pursue this matter further, which I think is unnecessary, for I feel that the Members are with him, I want to suggest that the laws in this District with regard to the commitment of the insane are probably so faulty that anybody can be committed on the affidavit of two physicians. Many years ago it was that way, certainly. About 30 years ago in this District the Washington Post caused one of its own employees to walk around St. Elizabeths until he was picked up as insane and committed to the insane asylum on the affidavit of two physicians, who were not provided by the newspaper. It took the newspaper three months to get that man out. Mr. Fenning may have learned about the system from the great publicity given to that exposure.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to yield until later. I showed by the superintendent of insurance that Mr. Fenning has had himself issued a solicitor's license by two of the big bonding companies that issue his bonds, and that the court allows him to take out of the ward's money the annual bond premium every year, and on that, as solicitor of the insurance company, he makes 15 or 20 per cent, 15 in one and 20 in the other company. Are you going to stand for that?

I showed by Doctor White under oath last night that 2,500 of his patients now in St. Elizabeths had never been committed by order of court. Is not that astounding? Why do not the papers tell the country about it? But the Star and Post here are protecting Fenning. Two thousand two hundred of them are there by reason of the fact that some bureau chief has sent a letter to Doctor White directing him to take in this man, and he has kept them there, some of them, ever since. That is worse than being a murderer. When a murderer is convicted of murder, say, in the second degree, he is given 10 years. When the 10 years are out he gets out, but when a fellow in St. Elizabeths is sent there he is sent for life, and he has no escape at all.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield now—and because I tried to get justice for these soldiers, the war veterans, 900 of them; also Spanish War veterans are out there, and Civil War veterans; old soldiers from soldiers' homes are placed out there without a hearing, because the superintendent of the home may get mad at them and send them there by letter; 4,500 human beings in all incarcerated there—I am criticized by these papers. Do you know the superintendent of every soldiers' home can send them there by letter without a trial?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a few minutes I will. The Secretary of the Navy will tell you that there are a lot of Navy men sent there by letter without trial. They are sent there from the War Department by letter without trial. The Public Health Service has sent hundreds of them there, without trial, by letter.

Is not that an awful condition that exists in this country? And because I try to stop it a fellow named A. P. Siler got a few citizens to meet the other night, with only a few persons present—there were not many members of the association there—and he got a resolution through condemning me and condemning my action as "unpatriotic and cowardly." This fellow Siler is the father of one of Fenning's employees, and this attack on me was thus influenced by Fenning.

Oh, if you knew what a proposition I have had to run up against and the big combination here I am fighting, you would say I was not cowardly. I have been facing their whole gang for weeks. I do not have any police guards around my home at night either, as Mr. Fenning did Monday night. Do you know that he had policemen placed outside of his home the other night all night? He must have been afraid of a mob.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the information that the gentleman from Texas has furnished to this House ought to lead, and will lead at this session, to legislation that will prevent unjust and unfair charges, which seem to have been imposed in the past upon the funds of veterans, from being repeated in the future.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And when that legislation passes, no Member of this House can say that it is not solely due to the disclosures made by the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman very much.

This man Siler, the man that got this resolution through, saying I am "unpatriotic and cowardly," is the father of a boy named Siler, who is one of Fenning's employees in his traffic department, a part of his municipal government, and the attack was influenced by Commissioner Fenning, and was not the sentiment of the people in that citizens' association.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Is the gentleman not surprised at Members of Congress undertaking to block such an investigation?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am. I just simply can not understand them. Oh, it is just a few of them. The rank and file of these splendid men on the other side of the aisle are behind this proposition, and they are going to see that both Fenning and White are put out of office just as soon as we can force a vote on the question.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. What these two men have done is worse than the action of Daugherty or Forbes, because those men swindled soldiers who were not mentally infirm, and this man Fenning swindled war veterans who are not mentally capable.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Right in line with what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has said, I want to put the Members on guard by notifying them that an attempt will be made to cover up the District situation by undertaking to pass general guardian legislation as applied to States where such a situation has not existed. I do not think we should permit this condition to continue to be hidden behind a smoke screen under the plea of making the inquiry general.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is there no limit prescribed by the court here as to the amount of commissions a man can receive?

Mr. BLANTON. It is supposed to be not more than 10 per cent.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Do not the court rules cover it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. It is supposed to be not more than 10 per cent.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How did the auditor allow other rates of percentage?

Mr. BLANTON. It was by order of the court.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These percentages are based on the idea that a man is actually doing a man's business and not just clipping his commission from the check?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I know of an instance, the case of a man who is the constituent of our colleague [Mr. SCHAFER] from Wisconsin, where Commissioner Fenning has drawn $1,100 commissions out of his ward's estate, when that man has been in Wisconsin for five years, and Commissioner Fenning just sat here in Washington clipping the coupons.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would it not be possible to get from the files of the court these items of extra compensation?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I will see that they are gotten later and put in the Record. There is the recent account in the Robey case, where Judge McCoy directed the auditor to fix a fee at $213 for the past year. The auditor said he did not have to make an audit, because the court had already ordered the commission paid.

I asked Doctor White why he did not tell me about the fees he had been getting for testifying outside of this Leopold and Loeb case, in which he had received $250 per day for 14 days. I asked him to tell about the other cases, and he said he did not remember. Then I took a corkscrew and made him admit that in a case over in Baltimore he had received $500 for two days at $250 a day. Then there was the Shelley case over here in Virginia, where a man was trying to put his wife in an insane asylum on the ground that she was of unsound mind, and Judge Mackey, of Virginia, who for 12 years had been an attorney for the Commonwealth of Virginia, testified that William C. Shelley had Doctor White render an opinion declaring his wife insane, when the jury found she was sane, and that Mr. Shelley paid Doctor White $500, and the attorney for Mr. Shelley, afterwards Judge Thornton, over in Virginia, was trying a big will case later on, and Doctor White got on the stand and swore that the testator was insane when he made the will.

Judge Thornton said, "Are you not the same Doctor White who testified in the Shelley case?" Doctor White said, "Yes, sir." "And you testified then that she was insane when she was found to be sane?" Doctor White said, "Yes; I made a mistake in that case." And Judge Thornton said, "Doctor White, if you could make a mistake in that case you could make a mistake in this case and I will not believe your testimony." [Applause.] And Doctor White refused to admit it until Mr. Mackey testified. Yet you let Doctor White stay out here and handle millions of dollars. You will never know how much money he has squandered there. The various guardians pay him from $15 to $20—even have paid him $30 a month—to buy clothes and things for those wards out there. Do you know what becomes of that money? It is squandered. They charge them up with a $40 suit of clothes and get a $15 or a $20 suit down here at Eiseman's on Seventh Street. And do you know what they do? They get a 10 per cent discount for themselves. [Laughter.] You get Eiseman down here and make him swear to it, because it is true.

When one of these unfortunates asks for money to buy things down town, instead of giving him the money, do you know what Doctor White does? He issues a little piece of scrip, a Doctor White scrip; it is on a white sheet of paper and it says: "This will be good for $15"—or $20 or $25 or $50—"worth of goods or merchandise, and this will be redeemed by St. Elizabeths Hospital." And when the doctors or nurses take that to Eiseman, Eiseman gives them that much stuff and then he gives them a 10 per cent rebate to the St. Elizabeths representatives who buy the goods.

You let it go on and a few of you do not want me to tell you about this, and the papers do not want to tell the people of the country about it, because Mr. Fenning is so closely connected with big business in Washington, and whenever I get up here and try to put this thing before the people of the country in my representative capacity some of the papers here defending Fenning make fun of me and belittle me and try to make me look ridiculous. Look here what the Star did the other day. Look at the caricature they put in there about me the other day, trying to make me look like a roughneck. [Laughter.]

Now, when a reputable newspaper puts a picture of a Congressman in a paper they are supposed to get that picture from a reputable photographer. Tell me what photographer made that picture. There is no photographer's name on it. They fixed it up. [Laughter.] And they think I am going to stand for it. Trot them all out, and I will stand up against all of their bunch.

Let me show you this. In this Times the other day they had a ridiculous article written by Josephine Tighe exploiting this poor woman, Mrs. Eliza Lee, and her boy, exploiting him and her instead of helping them, and she said in this Washington Times that this poor woman told her that she was sorry she had ever brought her case to me. I ask unanimous consent to put her statement in the Record—no; I will read it, because somebody might object:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1926.

The Times:

Please correct a great injustice. Your published article yesterday by Josephine Tighe was unfair and unjust both to me and to Mr. BLANTON. I did not tell her that I was sorry I went to see Mr. BLANTON. When she came to my room near St. Elizabeths Friday night, I refused to give her a statement because her attitude was unfriendly toward Mr. BLANTON. She stated that he had refused to tell her about my case, and that she felt like slapping him because he wouldn't talk to her. She was mad about it. Later, at Mr. BLANTON's request, I signed a written statement for her, thinking she might help me, but instead of publishing my affidavit she attacked Mr. BLANTON because he had sent her away from his office twice without giving her a statement. Mr. BLANTON has been the truest friend I ever found, and has worked faithfully to have my boy returned to me.

MRS. ELIZA LEE.

And I want to tell you that I got an order from Director Hines yesterday morning that will return that boy to this good woman and let her take him home to Virginia. [Applause.]

I called your attention to a piece of barratry on the part of Fenning when he had that good woman, who was run over by a street car here in Washington and had two of her ribs broken—I called your attention to the fact that Mr. Fenning went to her and had her go to Paul V. Rogers, one of his assistants down there, with a door opening right between their offices. They claim to be separate but go down and look at their offices; ask people about them and you will find that they are connected there. He sent her to Paul V. Rogers, and because I called attention to it she got a letter yesterday from Paul V. Rogers saying that because she had brought her case to the attention of Mr. BLANTON and he had made an attack on Mr. Fenning, he would not have anything more to do with it. He just turned it back to her. I took that poor woman down to the Washington Railway & Electric Co.'s office yesterday and I put the facts before them. I said, "Gentlemen, what do you want to do about this?" They said, "The lady does not have to get an attorney; we will attend to this for you, good woman; we will see that you get justice and you do not have to pay out attorney's fees." [Applause.] So Rogers and Fenning did that poor woman a kindness when they sent that case back to her.

Suppose I were to turn this case over to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]? What do you suppose he would do with it? [Laughter.] Suppose I turned this case over to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who held my resolution in his committee for a month? What would he do with it? He would put it in the wastebasket.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOZIER. I hope there will be no politics injected into this case, because graft does not recognize any race or party.

Mr. BLANTON. There will not be any put in by me; and may I say that the splendid, fine gentleman you have over here, Judge Gibson, of Vermont—God bless him—has stood like the Rock of Gibraltar helping me to clean this thing up. [Applause.] There is not going to be any whitewashing with the gentleman from Vermont, Judge Gibson. I promise you that. He is going to the bottom of this thing, and lots of you gentlemen on the other side are going to help him. I know that.

Mr. LOZIER. May I finish my question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LOZIER. In view of the facts in this case, are we to understand there is any considerable number of the Members of this House, either Democrats or Republicans, who approve or want to indorse or defend this grafting?

Mr. BLANTON. No; there is only just a little handful, and I could name every one of them.

Mr. LOZIER. I hope no Member of this House will condone these grave abuses.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am not going to do that. I am going to yield the floor now, gentlemen. [Applause.] If I had that one gentleman's name who applauded I would put it in the Record, because he must be in with LUCE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. That was improper. I should have said the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. In return, will the gentleman now answer one question?

Mr. BLANTON. If you will make it brief and to the point and not make it defensive, I will.

Mr. LUCE. The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, I think, unanimously desires facts. You have not as yet brought to the attention of that committee one delinquency on the part of any guardian in this District. Does the gentleman know of any violation of law by any guardian in the District of Columbia; and if so, will the gentleman help the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation by informing it of that fact?

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. First, let me say this to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. If he has not yet been able to find any delinquency on the part of Mr. Fenning, I would just as soon try to convince one of the sphinxes of Egypt. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. But you have not pointed out to the committee a single case of delinquency by any guardian in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. What about Mr. Fenning?

Mr. LUCE. You have not pointed out as yet a violation of law by Mr. Fenning.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, if the gentleman will be seated, I will see if I can even convince him.

Mr. LUCE. I only want facts. I want to know when, where, and who, and such facts are not in any charge you have made here.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield to me long enough to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. In view of the disclosures and actual charges openly made on the floor of the House and in the press, does not the gentleman from Massachusetts feel that there is sufficient proof to warrant the House in taking action, and thus relieve the gentleman from Texas in carrying on this necessary work alone? [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield any further. I think that disposes of the obtuse gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BROWNING. Does not the gentleman know that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and others on the Veterans' Committee have deliberately blocked the gentleman from Texas and prevented him from coming before that committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] did that. I asked for 10 minutes, and he would not let me have it. And the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONTGOMERY] helped him.

Mr. BROWNING. And I will say to the gentleman that in the committee the chairman of the committee [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] has already expressed himself and stated that in his opinion the gentleman from Texas has not any facts that would throw any light on these questions at all.

Mr. BLANTON. These facts which I have produced, and which have convinced everybody but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], these facts may not be considered facts by them, but when I bring a certified auditor's report from Herbert L. Davis, auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, certified to in a way that would be accepted in any court in the United States as evidence, showing rates of interest or commission ranging from 10 per cent up to 94 per cent of his ward's estate, drawn by Frederick A. Fenning, God knows that ought to convince the gentleman, when Fenning has drawn from the Veterans' Bureau alone $733,855.87, funds due veterans of the World War now in insane asylums.

Mr. LUCE. But those are not delinquencies on the part of the guardian. They may be delinquencies on the part of the court but not the guardian.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman applauds Fenning for getting all he can. What about Mr. Fenning being attorney for the Gawler Undertaking Co. that goes out there and buries his wards when they die, and Mr. Fenning pays them twice as much as he would have to pay the undertaker for the Veterans' Bureau, Mr. Tabler?

Mr. LUCE. But you have pointed out no violation of law on the part of any guardian.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, my goodness! Well, I am going to show you two violations. The law prevents the Commissioner of the District of Columbia from prosecuting claims against any department of Government, and the law prevents attorneys from collecting more than $10 in any veteran's case.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I want to be fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation will be heard Mr. Fenning, the auditor of the court, and the clerk of the court, with all of the records, on Monday. Those gentlemen would have testified to-morrow but for the fact that objection was made that one witness had not finished his testimony. I assure the gentleman all the actual facts concerning the treatment of veterans of the World War, the sole part of which the Veterans' Committee has jurisdiction, will be brought to the attention of that committee and to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. And I want the gentleman not only to send for Mr. Davis, the auditor, but also the assistant auditor, and ask them about all the several hundred cases in which Mr. Fenning has been getting fees for the last 23 years that were dropped off the docket and finished before the last report which he has shown here in this report of May 1, 1925. He will find several hundred of them, and God only knows how much money Frederick A. Fenning has collected from the soldiers of the various wars in the last 23 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are three committees handling this Fenning matter. The Judiciary Committee, of course, has complete jurisdiction—

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there is one committee that is really handling it, and that is our Subcommittee on the District of Columbia; and we are getting the facts, because I am asking most of the questions.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The District Committee has jurisdiction to revise the general law with respect to incompetency and the Veterans Committee, which, I believe, within a short time will bring in a proposed law with respect to the handling of these cases of the World War veterans.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman let me ask him one question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. May we find out from the gentlemen on the Veterans Committee, who have been denying the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] the privilege of coming before that committee, if they will let him testify before the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; will the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] let me have 10 minutes before his committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that when these records are all before the committee I will be perfectly willing to give the gentleman that time; but the gentleman is so ably represented on that committee—

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I do not think I need to go, because I think my friends on the committee will take care of the situation.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Texas is no more ably represented on the Veterans' Affairs Committee than Mr. Fenning seems to be. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I wonder if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] knows, and do you know, that where a veteran dies in St. Elizabeths Hospital the doctors there cut him up? One died some time ago, the case I have in mind, where they split his head wide open, and the undertaker refused to accept him for embalming—said he could not embalm a body like that.

I have another case where they cut the body all to pieces, and when they turned the cut-up body over to the undertaker he said, "I won't receive that body; it is not fit for embalming." I got these facts from a real investigator. The man that gave me these facts is an honored employee of this Government to-day.

He knows all about affairs in St. Elizabeths and just how World War veterans are treated there. He was the one who gave me the facts concerning which Bill Franklin criticized me. Mr. Tabler is employed as an undertaker for the Veterans' Bureau. I am willing to pay $150 or $200 for the funeral of every veteran of the World War that dies and I will vote for a bill now to pay $150 or $200 for their funeral and give these boys a decent burial. These are the facts. Mr. Tabler went to Director Hines and said, "I know that by cutting down the profit I can give just as good a coffin, just as good an outside box, just as good embalming, and just as good a burial to World War veterans for $52 as the undertakers now charge $100 and $150 for. If you will turn all the cases over to me, I will bury them all for $52 each under a standardized, specified burial." Director Hines made the contract with him. Doctor White testified the other night that Tabler was now his undertaker under the same arrangement.

Now, there was a man drowned down here in the basin some time ago. It turned out that the Veteran's Bureau had jurisdiction over him, and the representative of the Veteran's Bureau phoned down to the coroner, the brother-in-law of Fenning, and said that the Federal Bureau demanded the body for burial. Nevitt, the coroner, said, "As soon as we can hold an autopsy and have a coroner's verdict we will turn the body over to you, and we will phone you." But there was no phone message. He would have been buried for $52 by the Veteran's Bureau. I do not say that that kind of a burial is good enough, but that is the rule of the department. But instead of turning that body over to the Veterans' Bureau, do you know what Coroner Nevitt did with it? Commissioner Fenning's right-hand man down here in the District Building, Bill Franklin, who is a member of the Costello Post, had Coroner Nevitt turn the body over to another undertaker, wholly without authority of law, and made the United States pay $108 for the funeral, and it was no better in any respect than the funeral Tabler would have given the Government for $52.

Because I had called attention to it Franklin had his Costello Post pass a resolution condemning me and intimating that I wanted to give a poor burial to these World War veterans, which was not the fact. At that meeting they passed a resolution and John Murphy said:

I was present at one of the $52 funerals of which BLANTON spoke. BLANTON was present also.

That is an absolute falsehood; I never was at such a burial; I never was at such a funeral. Why do they not tell the truth about me in the papers. He said:

The occasion was the funeral of a resident of Texas in the next congressional district to BLANTON's, and when the pallbearers went to lift the coffin the handles fell off, and that is the kind of a $52 funeral that they have.

You see that they attribute wrong motives to me, and it is not right.

Now, in the last minute I am going to use I am going to ascertain just how many of you are not backing me up in this undertaking, in trying to get justice for our war veterans. I wish you who are not backing me would stand up. If there is a man in this House who is not backing me, I want him to stand up. I pause, and no one stands. I am glad to see that I have the unanimous backing of Members. [Applause.]

SEVERAL VOICES. Put it the other way.

Mr. BLANTON. How many of you are backing me in a proper investigation of this matter? I would like to see all who are backing me stand up. I note that with the exception of about 20 men who have not arisen, I seem to have almost the unanimous backing of you Members. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor, thanking my colleagues.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to-morrow, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] and myself may have 15 minutes each to discuss the general subject of veterans' legislation—not the matters discussed to-day.

Mr. BROWNING. We do not want to be excluded from matters affecting general legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that instead of proceeding to-day the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] may have 15 minutes each to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] for 35 minutes. [Applause.]

TAXATION AND APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House [applause], I appreciate beyond expression your friendly applause at the commencement of my speech. It cheers my heart and makes me realize that I am not like one—

Who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted;
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed.

A nation is like a family. In its infancy it is noted for its simple manners, frugal habits, and honest intentions; but with success comes power, with power comes wealth, with wealth comes gigantic combinations, conspiracies, agreements in restraint of trade and other machinations by individual groups, all seeking to obtain control in the political, industrial, and financial affairs of the nation.

If you will take a retrospective view of past ages, you will find that no free government has ever been overcome by force; but all were overcome by internal dissensions, strife, extravagance, and corruption, resulting in decay and death. Let us profit by the verities of history. There is no surer light by which to guide our future than the light given by the lamp of experience.

The first 50 years of our Government's existence was characterized by our simple manners, frugal habits, and honest intentions; but with success came power, with power came wealth, with wealth came pernicious combinations and conspiracies—agreements in restraint of trade and every effort known to avaricious men to gain undue advantage in the political, industrial, and financial affairs of our Nation. Yes; the first 50 years of our Government constituted the age of pristine purity; men held office for honor then, not for profit; soldiers fought for glory, not for dollars; and statesmen, not politicians, guided the "Ship of state." During this early period of our history neither States nor individuals depended upon or requested the Federal Government to do those things for them, which, under every principle of States sovereignty and individual initiative, should be done by themselves. In those days the Federal Government was regarded as a trustee to carry out certain rights, powers, and duties expressly delegated to it in the Constitution of the United States by the sovereign States of this Union.

In this day and time the Federal Government has assumed the position of master to our once sovereign States, which are sinking to the grade of supplicants. As a result, the dominating iron hand of the Federal Government has been thrust into every State, directing and controlling not only many public activities of such States but in some instances the private enterprises of the individual citizen, and as a further result appropriations of the Federal Government have grown by leaps and bounds, until they have reached the enormous sum for the past four years under the operation of the Budget system of $16,000,000,000, or an average of $4,000,000,000 per year.

I am not fully informed on the internal organism of all foreign governments, but I venture the assertion that there is no government on the face of the earth where an individual citizen has to pay as many different kinds of taxes to as many different units of the Government and public-service taxing districts as citizens of the United States.

A gentleman who lived in a large city told me the other day that he had to pay 11 different kinds of taxes to 11 different governments and political subdivisions of government; that he conducted a small business, worked hard, practiced economy, and that in spite of all this he was unable to feed and clothe his family comfortably, educate his children, and pay these enormous taxes; that any road he selected for life's travel seemed to lead to the bankruptcy courts.

In my State, the individual citizen is generally compelled to pay six different kinds of taxes to six different Government and political subdivisions.

First, he must pay to the Federal Government, both direct and indirect tax, then he must pay State tax, then he must pay a county tax, then he must pay a city tax, then a good-roads tax, then a school-district tax, and in addition to this in many places, he must pay public improvement district taxes, such as levee, irrigation, drainage, and navigation tax.

If it were not for the fact that when God created our country, he endowed it with wonderful productivity, our citizenship could not stand the burden of taxation imposed. The sun in his majestic course does not look down upon a richer land or one more capable of administering to the wants and gratifying the luxurious taste of man.

When we realize that the citizens of this country are being taxed by the Federal Government for the administration of our Government alone, seven years after the great war, the enormous sum of $4,000,000,000, making an annual drain upon the productive forces of our country, the wayfaring man, though he be a fool, will clearly understand that the citizenship and industry can not long stand up under this fearful annual drain. The sole responsibility for our loose and inefficient appropriation system, rests solely upon Congress. It can not dodge this responsibility, nor hide behind the request of the Chief Executive for appropriations. The President, of course, is responsible to the people for extravagantly requesting Congress for extravagant appropriations; but Congress itself is alone responsible for granting such appropriations. Reduction of appropriations, reduction of public expenditures, reduction of taxation is the crying need of the hour, and it is up to Congress to rise above party expediency, and follow the real economists of the Senate and House, regardless of party affiliations. We should get together and devise a definite system of appropriating public funds that will reestablish our Government upon an efficient and economic basis.

I must admit that the history of appropriations for the four years' operation under the much-heralded Budget system is disappointing to me and falls far short of accomplishing the economic reforms I hoped for when I supported the legislation creating the Budget system. I admit, however, that it renders some real economical service. It is my purpose to-day to review the four years, 1923, 1924, 1925, and 1926, operation under the Budget system.

I find that the grand total estimated by the Budget and requested of Congress by the President for the ordinary expenses of the Government amount to $10,627,335,181.39; that the Appropriations Committee of the House, taking these Budget estimates as a basis, conducted thorough hearings to determine the amount actually necessary for the economical administration of the Government and reported bills to the House carrying a total appropriation of $9,994,658,781.53, which was a decrease of the amount estimated as necessary by the Budget, and requested of Congress by the President, of $632,676,400.06. Notwithstanding the fact that the Appropriations Committee of the House had conducted searching investigations into every item of the appropriations in determining the necessity therefor, and that the members of this committee have become specialists on the amount needed for the economical administration of the Government, the House increased this recommendation $65,304,024.30; and notwithstanding this increase by the House of the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee, this amount appropriated by the House was $567,172,375.76 less than the amount estimated as necessary by the Budget and requested of the Congress by the President. When these bills went to the Senate it increased the House Appropriations $336,668,591.97; and notwithstanding this enormous increase of the House appropriation bills by the Senate, this amount passed by the Senate was still $230,503,783.77 less than the amount estimated was necessary by the Budget and requested of Congress by the President.

These appropriation bills then went to conference committees. All of these conference committees are composed of Members selected from the Appropriations Committee of the House and Senate. In conference the House conferees succeeded in reducing the Senate's increase of appropriations $113,675,017.20, which resulted in a total amount being appropriated of $10,283,156,380.62, which is an increase of the amount appropriated in the original appropriation bills by the House of $222,993,574.97. This amount, thus finally enacted into law, is $344,178,800.97 less than the amount estimated as necessary by the Budget and requested of Congress by the President.

Thus it appears that the Appropriations Committee of the House is the most economical Government appropriation agency in our Government, to the extent of $632,676,400.06. That the House is more economical than the Senate to the extent of $336,668,591.97, and that the Senate and House combined as Congress, is more economical than the President by $344,178,800.97. [Applause.] It therefore follows that if the House and Senate had been as economical as the Appropriations Committee of the House, the taxpayers would have been saved $632,676,400.06; that if the Senate had been as economical as the House, the taxpayers would have been saved $336,668,591.97; that if the President and the Bureau of the Budget had been as economical as the House and Senate, the taxpayers would have been saved $344,178,800.97, and corresponding decrease of taxes would have resulted.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will my colleague yield for a brief observation. As I understand the situation, it is nearly always the custom of the Senate to increase the appropriations of the House, and the conferees of the House usually succeed in bringing about a very material reduction from the increases which are made in the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have tried to make this a complete review of the appropriations of the Budget system and to point out the most extravagant department of the Government, the second most extravagant department of the Government, and the third most extravagant department. As I have stated above, the Appropriations Committee of the House is the most economical governmental appropriating instrumentality within our governmental organism, and it is reasonably backed up by the House. The House conferees, appointed from the Appropriations Committee of the House, succeeded in cutting down the increased appropriations of the Senate $113,675,017.20. Answering the first part of my colleague's [Mr. BLACK] question, the Senate always needlessly increases the amount of every appropriation bill passed by the House. For instance, I have before me a tabulated statement of the appropriation bills as passed by the House and Senate for the year 1926, which I will place in the RECORD and which shows that the Senate increased every bill in various amounts from $30,060 to $33,994,457.21, such increases amounting to the aggregate of $45,276,998.72 for the fiscal year 1926 alone.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for another brief observation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think the country ought to know that while this service is usually of a rather inconspicuous kind, it is very valuable nevertheless. And I want to add this further observation for the consideration of the Members of the House, that this work of the conferees of the House is of the greatest importance to the sound economical administration of our Government. There is no more important work performed by any Members of the House than this.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is correct. The real service rendered to the people of the United States by Congress is not rendered on the floor of the House or Senate, but is rendered in the committee room, where an enormous amount of work is performed and which is entirely unknown to the public generally. [Applause.] So, concluding this branch of the discussion and basing conclusions upon the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget, as approved and requested of Congress by the President, the executive is the most extravagant branch of the Federal Government; the Senate is the second most extravagant branch of the Government; and the House is the most economical unit of the Federal Government in appropriating the taxpayer's money. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Has not that been true time out of mind, and yet the House rarely gets credit for doing this work?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Credit! The House never gets credit for any of its good work. It is derided throughout the country, and yet it is the one department of Government that protects the Treasury of the United States from numerous raids from many sources. I am glad the gentleman from Connecticut interrupted me. That recalls to mind an incident that happened two weeks ago; and lest any man think I do not hold this good Republican, Mr. TILSON, in high esteem, I want to say to you that I understand that years ago the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] was a barefoot boy roaming over the hills and valleys of Connecticut. At that time he had no fund to educate himself, and there was no one who was legally liable for his education, but he determined to make his mark in the world, and by his individual efforts he worked his way through preparatory schools and through Yale and continued that course after he graduated by instructing himself, by preserving himself, by living for his fellow man, that he might live for him; he gained steadfast footing at every step, mounting to eminence and distinction until he is one of the principal personalities directing the policy and guiding the destiny of this great Nation. [Applause.] But I will say to the majority leader that this deserved compliment to him does not mean that I approve of all his votes and actions in this House. I will now relate an incident of his that I do not approve, which happened about two weeks ago.

The gentleman from Connecticut had a conference at the White House, and evidently appropriations, extravagance, and economy were discussed in that conference; and the President of the United States requested the gentleman from Connecticut to carry a request to the House, with which he complied, to the effect that the President hoped that the House would not increase the appropriations. Now, had I been the majority leader and the President had been of my party, I would have said, "Oh, no, Mr. President; I will not carry that message to the House. Do you know, Mr. President, that the House during every Congress since the Budget system has been in operation consistently and persistently reduced the amount you requested of Congress in the enormous sum of $567,172,375.76? With all due respect to you and your high office, my carrying this message to the House would be too much like the devil sending a message by St. Peter to the Saviour to be good." [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I have served with the gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations for a number of years and am familiar with the great value of the services rendered by him in the preparation of the various appropriation bills and the paring down of the estimates submitted, and I unhesitatingly say that there is no Member of this House who by reason of his work, his ability, and his general knowledge of the subject of appropriations and the finances of our country is better qualified to speak on the subject of appropriations by Congress than the gentleman from Texas. He is one of the most hard-working and most influential members of the Committee on Appropriations, and has contributed in large measure to the economies and reductions to which he refers. There has not been a session of Congress that his effective work in behalf of governmental economy has not saved millions of dollars to the Treasury. I wanted to ask the gentleman this: With the exception, possibly, of one or two bills at this session, has there been during the entire history of the Budget a single bill carrying appropri-tions recommended or reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations in which the estimates of the Budget and the requests of the President were not greatly reduced?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not think there has been. In reply to the gentleman, I will say, further, that I have the figures, year by year, for each year since the operation of the Budget; and in answer to that question I will state: In 1923 the Appropriations Committee of the House reduced the Budget estimates and the amount requested by the President $509,855,659.33, in 1924 by $40,971,815.39, in 1925 by $29,328,642.65, in 1926 by $52,520,282.69, or a total in the four years of $632,676,400.06.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman's figures finally show how the bills, as prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, compare with the way they passed through the House and were finally enacted into law?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; to the cent.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They show, do they not, that the bills as they come from the Appropriations Committee are smaller than they ever are afterwards?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly. It shows this, in further reply to the gentleman, that they come from the Appropriations Committee, you might say, carrying moderate amounts. When they strike the House it is one continued fight, the Appropriations Committee battling to keep them down and Members of the House offering amendments to increase the amounts. Have you ever known of an amendment being offered on the floor of the House to decrease an appropriation?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Never; and, in turn, has the gentleman ever known a bill recommended by the Appropriations Committee to carry a less amount when it left the House than when it came to the House from the Appropriations Committee of the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely not. Then when these bills went to the Senate, every amendment offered in the Senate was to increase and none to decrease the appropriations.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But after all these stupendous efforts are made by the membership of the House and the membership of the Senate to increase the appropriations they are still less than the President says is necessary to run the Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely—$344,178,800.97 less.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And yet he is held out to the country as the economy President, is he not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. He is like the moon, only reflecting the light of the sun. The Appropriations Committee of the House, and the House, forces upon the President, the Budget, and the Senate such economies as we practice, and the President permits himself to be heralded abroad as the great economy President in violation of the sacred injunction: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's."

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Has the gentleman ever known the newspapers to carry the fact that the House is reducing the Budget every year?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have never known of it.

Mr. JONES. None of the big papers carry that information.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A very few of the small ones.

Mr. JONES. But frequently they carry the statement that the House is extravagant?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. Contrary to the facts.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Has the gentleman any figures showing how the appropriations prior to the operation of the Budget compare with the estimates submitted by the departments?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I could not get the time to handle that vast subject.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That would have been a very interesting subject.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It would have been a very interesting study, and at some later day I may be able to reach it. I want to further comment on the action of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. If those on the majority side of the House will stand up before the House and proclaim the economies it is forcing upon the President, the Budget, and Senate, and proclaim it from the house tops, and produce the figures and the facts, then, and only then, will we occupy the exalted position that our real services command in the eyes of the American people.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. While the Appropriations Committee—and the House backing up the Appropriations Committee—trims the Budget and trims what the Senate does, is it not a fact that all of the difficulty is not with the appropriations but it is with the authorizations, and sometimes the House is a little bit reckless in its authorizations, which the gentleman's committee has to make good?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true.

Mr. TILSON. And it is the authorizations we fear and not the committee. The committee has done very well, and no praise could be too high for what it has done.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I concede that. A great deal of the extravagance in this Government comes from authorizations which never ought to have been made, and I further contend that there are other extravagances which can be eliminated by the Congress. [Applause.] And let me tell you one thing: Just as long as we have the present appropriating system we will never have an economical Government. The Federal Government has branched out into numerous cooperative enterprises between the Federal Government and the States, each paying one-half the expense. This money thus appropriated by the Federal Government is spent in the different States, and every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate coming from such States conceives it to be his duty to try to increase that appropriation; and if he succeeds in increasing it, he receives the plaudits of his constituents for his great work and great accomplishments in Congress. And thus from year to year and from session to session the appropriations are piling higher and higher. Where will this end? What will 50 or 100 years from to-day unfold on the question of extravagance. The people and industrial enterprises will be ground to death under the iron heel of taxation. For illustration, compare the fiscal years 1925 and 1926 for the ordinary expenses of conducting the Government (not including the permanent annual appropriations which constitute the interest and sinking fund for our public debt, amounting to $1,400,000,000), the total appropriations for 1925 amounting to $2,329,042,585.50, while for 1926 these appropriations were increased to $2,751,624,741.67, which is an increase of governmental expenditures of 1926 over 1925 of $422,582,156.10. If these figures denote the enormous annual increase under our inefficient appropriation system, we may well look to the future with fear and apprehension. We must change our appropriating system that there may be guaranteed to the people of the United States a real economical Government.

I see my distinguished colleague, who made such an able speech on constitutional construction the other day in the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]. [Applause.]

The gentleman contended that Congress did not have the power under the Constitution to make these cooperative appropriations. He may or he may not be right, but I know that when Congress makes such appropriations there is no one vested with a legal right to test the constitutional right of Congress to make them. So whether the Congress has that right or not makes no difference. In view of my distinguished colleague's position, let me suggest to him that he could verify his views by proposing an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting Congress from making any appropriations other than those essential to carry into effect the powers expressly delegated in the Constitution to the Federal Government, and prohibiting Congress from making any appropriation under the general welfare clause of the Constitution of the United States. If that amendment was adopted—and I am not ready to commit myself to it without referring it to my constituents—we would have an economical Government so long as it was retained in the Constitution.

As the Constitution now stands, Congress can make appropriations for any purpose under the sun, and no one is vested with the right to legally question the legal right of Congress to make such appropriations. The only remedy is to refuse to reelect such Members of Congress who voted for such appropriations. A poor remedy. It is like locking the garage door after your automobile has been stolen. Congress, in my judgment, will not, of its own accord, submit to the people any amendment placing a limitation upon its unlimited appropriating powers. No government or department of government has ever been known to voluntarily surrender any of its rights and powers. So that if a limitation is to be placed upon the unlimited appropriating powers of Congress, it must be done by the States submitting such amendment of the Constitution to the States or people for ratification.

This suggested amendment is a drastic remedy and should be thoroughly and well considered, and the results of its adoption should be carefully weighed as against the evils that now exist.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In Texas our governor has the authority to veto any item of an appropriation bill without vetoing the whole bill. I wonder what my colleague thinks of the advisability, if it could be done, of conferring upon the President that power. I think it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; if you had an economical President at the time the bill went to him, if an item was not included in the Budget, it might do some good, but under present conditions, with the House and the Senate appropriating less than the Budget estimates and therefore less than requested of Congress by the President, how could you expect the President to veto any item he had theretofore requested Congress to appropriate?

Gentlemen, there are only two hopes of an economical Federal Government in the future. One of them is—and this is no reflection upon our present President because he is doing the best he knows how to conduct an economical administration—but one hope is the adoption of the amendment I have just suggested. The other hope is that there may arise from the American people a man who may be called to the White House possessing those qualities that equip him for leadership of men; possessing moral, physical, and political courage, and imbued with the real principles of economy; a man who can see the great problem confronting the future of this Nation as an extravagant and corrupt Government resulting in decay and ruin, and who regardless of party expediency or party success will exercise the veto power in the cause of economy. Such men do not often arise, but they have arisen in our country; men like the immortal George Washington; men like the immortal Andrew Jackson; men like the immortal Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson. [Applause.] These men, all of them, came not to pillage but to serve their country and have retired from her service through the portals of everlasting fame.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have seen some criticism in the papers that the Committee on Appropriations has been a little negligent in its appropriations for agriculture. Is it not the fact that they have in all instances taken care of the needs of agriculture in the appropriations they have made in recent years?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely.

Mr. HUDSPETH. From my observation I do not think that criticism is justified.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely not. I will say to my colleague from Texas, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which handles the agricultural appropriations, presided over by that able economist and agriculturist, Mr. MAGEE of New York, assisted by Mr. WASON, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and myself, have at heart a sincere desire to promote the agricultural interests of the Nation in every legitimate way, and we have done that. [Applause.] Even the Department of Agriculture has no complaint.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman in any way account for the fact that Congress gets no credit for being economical while the administration seems to be constantly praised for its economy program?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, yes; that explanation is plain. It only proceeds from the lips and pens of those who before the President "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning." Of course, the head of the Nation, with all its patronage at his command, must be praised. His every effort must be applauded by those who seek to profit by his patronage, and they are the busybodies who defame and slander the House and laud every act and word of the President. It has ever been thus and will probably continue so throughout unending time.

Gentlemen, in conclusion let me state to you that until our appropriating system has been revised and a new and effective one adopted the Committee on Appropriations of the House and the House must stand, as they have always stood, between the Treasury of the United States and the cohorts of extravagance. They must stand like Stonewall Jackson stood at Bull Run; yes, they must stand like a stone wall around the Treasury of the United States, a stone wall that vandals can not scale and loot the Treasury under the form of law. [Applause.]

That the Members of Congress may have an opportunity of studying this great question of economy versus extravagance and the people of the United States may rightly place the responsibility for extravagant appropriations, I insert here in the Record six correctly tabulated statements showing consecutively the amount requested of Congress by the President and the Budget, the action of the Appropriations Committee of the House thereon, the action of the House and the action of the Senate, and the action of the conference committees of the House and Senate during the existence of the Budget system, which covers the fiscal years 1923, 1924, 1925, and 1926. These statements do not include the permanent annual appropriations, which are approximately the same amount for each year:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ACKERMAN.) Under the special order the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is recognized for 35 minutes. [Applause.]

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service of the House, it seems necessary, in justice to the committee, to outline briefly the existing system of retirement for classified civil-service employees and the activities of the committee with respect to proposed legislation for the purpose of liberalizing the present system and correcting the more glaring of its defects.

By reason of stories recently appearing in the press, including purported interviews by those who have to do with controlling the legislative program for the remainder of this session, an impression may be created, both in the minds of the public and of the Members of this House, that failure to enact any retirement legislation at the present session would be due to the indolence, ignorance, and general incompetence of the committee in dealing with the subject. In fact, one might imagine that the existence of the problem itself, with its attendant difficulties, perplexities, and possible embarrassments, is solely the fault of the Committee on the Civil Service.

The committee does not relish the rôle of scapegoat, does not deserve it, and refuses to play it. The retirement system, with its vexatious problems, is here whether we like it or not and whether we legislate with respect to it or not. The retirement act was passed in the spring of 1920 by the overwhelming votes of both the Senate and the House of Representatives and became a law by the signature of President Wilson on May 22, 1920. It passed in the House of Representatives on April 30, 1920, and there were only 54 votes cast against it. Of these, there are Members of the present Congress 34, of whom only 2 are Republicans. Everybody who voted for the bill then knew, and ought to know now, that the payment of retirement annuities costs money, and that this money must be found somewhere, sometime.

The system has been in operation for six years, during which time substantial sums of money have been paid out in annuities that manifestly were not contributed by the beneficiaries. Yet, as far as I know, not one step has been taken or even a suggestion made to meet the situation, either by those charged with financing the activities of the Government or those preparing the appropriations for these purposes.

The Committee on the Civil Service has not been remiss in this respect. It is no part of the function of a legislative committee to draft or report methods of financing Government activities entered into by reason of its recommendations or to direct the making of specific appropriations therefor. The retirement law carries blanket authority for the making of any and all necessary appropriations to carry out such method of financing the system as may be adopted. Instead of being remiss in this respect the Civil Service Committee has exceeded its duties and responsibilities and has in its reports on bills in the last Congress repeatedly called attention to the financial obligations of the Government with respect to the system and to the fact that these obligations were increasing. In the last Congress, in a speech under date of March 4, 1925, I again called attention to these facts, pointing out the actuaries' estimate of the Government liability and specifically pointing out that the Government's actual indebtedness as of June, 1924, was about $12,000,000.

The law created a board of three actuaries, who annually report on the financial condition of the retirement fund. The fifth annual report of such actuaries was submitted to Congress on March 29, 1926, was promptly printed, and was available to all who are concerned or ought to be concerned about the Government's financial responsibilities to the retirement fund. This contained not only revised estimates of the cost of the existing system but also of various proposed modifications. Such estimates were carried in the three previous reports of the actuaries, equally available to all who care to be informed on the subject.

The one outstanding fact to be learned from a study of the actuaries' figures is that none of the estimates of the actuaries, standing by itself, reveals the cost to the Government of the retirement system either now or at any given time in the future. The actuaries have submitted only two kinds of estimates. The first is a valuation of the retirement system limited to what is termed the "membership" at the time the valuation is made. In their last estimate of the existing system this membership was limited to the 11,000 annuitants now on the roll and the active employees to the number of 388,000. The valuation includes the sum total of annuities payable and to become payable to this limited membership until the last one is gone. It estimates the amount of contribution to be paid by the existing membership until their retirement, together with the earnings of such contributions. It subtracts these contribution assets from the annuity liabilities and balances the valuation by inserting the difference as the sum total of appropriations to be made by the Government. Of course, in actuality new contributors are constantly entering, and these eventually will become new annuitants not embraced in such a valuation. This class of estimate has value and is necessary in determining a sound method of financing retirement, but manifestly standing alone it does not shed light on the specific amount to be appropriated next year or 10 years hence or 50 years hence.

The other class of estimates furnished by the actuaries consists of segregating the normal cost of the retirement system from the deficiency cost. In a retirement system such as ours, where the employee contributes a certain percentage of his salary to defray the cost of his annuity, the total amount of his contributions and their earnings during his active period of service can be estimated, the value of his annuity at the time of his retirement can be estimated, and consequently the extent to which such contributions will cover the cost of the annuity can be ascertained.

The difference, if any, is the cost of his annuity to the Government. The actuaries call "normal cost" when each annuitant has contributed throughout the entire period of his active service, and this state will arrive when all those who are beneficiaries of the system and who were in the service prior to 1920, when contributions first began, are gone. It is perfectly obvious that the Government in retiring those who have contributed not at all or only during a part of their service is assuming an added burden with respect to them. The difference between the full contribution the law contemplates an employee to make and the actual contribution made since 1920 by the retired employee is the measure of the increased burden on the Government and is called by the actuaries the deficiency cost.

This second class of estimates approximates the total lump sum of the deficiency cost, divides it into 30 annual payments, and figures what the percentage of the total pay roll such annual payments represent. The estimate also approximates the normal cost of the retirement of the existing membership and likewise divides it into 30-year periods, ascertaining the amount of each such annual payment and the percentage of the pay roll it represents. It is obvious that these annual payments and these percentages of the pay roll mean nothing at all unless it is determined to meet the deficiency cost and the normal cost of the present membership of the retirement system in the first 30 years of the system's existence. No one responsible for the finances of the Government or the appropriation of its money or who has any official interest in retirement has suggested such a course.

Mr. HUDSON. Is it not self-evident that when the Government established the retirement system that they must provide for this deficiency? And they should have done it before this time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman emphasizes the point which I made earlier in my speech.

From all this it is perfectly obvious that the figures of the actuaries do not reveal the cost to the Government year by year of either the existing system or any proposed modification. Consequently, additional reports from the actuaries may be called for from now until doomsday without receiving further light on the question of what appropriation should be made now or in any given year in the future. No answer to this question can be given until some one determines in what manner the cost of retirement is to be met. The question is not what must be paid, but how and when it shall be paid. This determination is most emphatically outside the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Civil Service, and unless and until it is answered your committee is utterly helpless to procure and present estimates of appropriations necessary from year to year to meet the cost to the Government of either the existing system or any modification thereof it may propose.

Mr. COLTON. I have followed the gentleman with a great deal of interest, but I can not see why your committee can not determine the amount.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The actuaries have guessed at it.

Mr. COLTON. Is it just a guess?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is more than a guess; it is based on figures that the committee believed are approximate but substantially inflated. There are certain elements of inflation we can demonstrate.

Mr. COLTON. What I can not see is why you can not determine the amount.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The total amount of deficiency?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That has been estimated and reported by the committee in its report and by the actuaries.

Mr. BOX. Perhaps the gentleman gave it, but I did not catch it. What would be the cost over and above the amount contributed by the employees, whether the bill the committee proposes will bring the normal sum within the sum contributed by the employees?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The committee is of that opinion.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. What do you mean by the normal cost?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The cost to the Government of the annuity of each individual, or the sum total of the annuities of all beneficiaries, when each such beneficiary has contributed throughout the active period of his service. In the generations to come it is not fair to charge the employees making full contributions for the expenditures incurred by the Government in paying deficiency costs to those who were retired without having made contributions.

In these circumstances, upbraiding the committee for the omissions of others beyond its control is grossly unfair. All this was set forth in the recent report of the committee, a copy of which was mailed to every Member of the House. Apparently the report found prompt lodgment in the waste baskets of the committee's detractors.

Furthermore, the committee has found the estimates of the actuaries to be substantially inflated, even beyond the point of the ordinary loading which cautious actuaries indulge in to protect the solvency of their companies. Thousands of people are carried in the estimates as retired employees drawing annuities when, in fact, they are active employees paying contributions.

After considering and analyzing available figures, the committee recently reported a bill. This bill is not a new proposition. It is substantially the bill reported in the last Congress and passed in the Senate. Neither in the last Congress nor in this was the committee made aware of any substantial objection to its provisions until recently. The committee believes this bill to be fair and reasonable and advantageous to the Government as well as to the employees. It believes that under its provisions the contributions of the employees will come pretty close to carrying the normal cost of retirement. Certainly the provisions of the bill can be so modified as to insure this result. We have expressed our willingness to consider all suggestions for such modifications as do not violate the fundamental principles underlying the system.

The bulk of the cost to the Government is the deficiency cost. The system is perpetual as long as the Government endures and has employees. Methods can be devised for spreading this cost over as long a space of time as may be desired, in order that no undue burden need fall on the Treasury in any one year or period of years. Such a method is indicated in the report of the committee.

The impressive totals found in the actuaries' tables do not frighten the committee. The salary of a $1,200 clerk entering at the average age and quitting the service at the average age will with its earnings exceed $100,000. Yet when it is proposed to employ an additional $1,200 clerk in a bureau nobody wrings his hands with despair at the $100,000 cost involved. The nations of Europe, sweating blood in an effort to make their budgets balance, generally maintain equitable systems of retirement for their civilian employees. It is fair to assume the United States can afford to do likewise. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. HUDSON. I recognize the gentleman is making a very fine connected statement and I do not want to interrupt him except to bring out further the question of the gentleman from Kansas as to the normal cost. Has the gentleman estimated what will be the normal basis for the retirement fund?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Anybody can determine that as readily as I can. It will be when the last person now in active service who was in such service prior to August, 1920, shall have retired and eventually died.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. WOODRUM. The chairman of the Civil Service Committee has made a very splendid speech, and I would like to make an observation asking him a question. Is it not true in the last Congress the Committee on Civil Service in the House reported out a bill which passed the Senate, and that committee made every effort to get a hearing on the floor of the House for the bill, but we were unable to do so. Is not that correct?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is a fact.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not further true that the committee has unanimously reported out a bill in the present Congress that does not call for the present appropriation of a single penny, nor does it contemplate calling for an appropriation for years to come, in order to allow an increase in annuities for these employees, the maximum being $720, and only a few getting the maximum. Is not that a correct statement?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In a modified way it is. I would like to say to the gentleman from Virginia that the report of the committee advocates and the gentleman personally advocates the payment of interest on the annual cash obligations of the Government to the retirement fund that have accumulated and that will accrue from year to year. In that way the Government liability will not be pyramided but remain the same through the years by the payment of interest. In other words, whatever is due at any given time will still be due in the future, but without accretions, and that is all that in the judgment of myself is necessary at the present time, or for a period running from 15 to 25 years from now. The payment of this interest, as Government expenditures go, is a trivial sum.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not true the committee has made every effort in the last Congress and this Congress to get retirement legislation and so far has been unable to get the steering committee of the House to allow us to bring the legislation on the floor of this House for consideration.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The chairman of the committee will state that he has made no formal demand as yet either upon the steering committee or the Committee on Rules for consideration of this legislation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is not the chairman of the committee aware of the fact that the distinguished leader of the majority has stated to the press that there would be no consideration of retirement legislation because the committee had brought the matter to the House in such a sloppy manner that they could not tell anything about it. Are not those the words he used, "sloppy manner"?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The leader of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut, has assured the gentleman from New Jersey that he was misquoted in that interview; that what he may have said was grossly exaggerated.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield? Can the chairman of the committee at this time give any hope for the consideration of this measure at this session?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The chairman, of course, can give hope, because he himself entertains hope. Hope springs eternal in the human breast. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNING. Does the gentleman have anything except his hope to base his expectation on?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Nothing definite, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee; the gentleman has nothing definite.

Mr. BROWNING. Of course, as a member of the committee and knowing how the chairman of this committee has worked faithfully for this legislation, I was in hope possibly the leadership of the House would relent from their present apparent position and allow us a chance to get the House to pass on whether they think this legislation is proper or not.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will permit, what is the extent of the gentleman's hope? The gentleman says he hopes to get the bill before the House. Will the gentleman tell us the extent of that hope? Does the gentleman say this is an eternal hope? Does the gentleman think we will have to wait eternally before this measure is brought in here?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is a hope that is limited by the last day of the present session of Congress.

Mr. BROWNING. I want to say that I am not questioning the sincerity of the chairman in getting this legislation before the House, but I was in hope the gentleman might have some message from the leadership on the other side that we might have consideration at this session.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; but the gentleman will answer the gentleman from Tennessee by stating generally that nothing has been done tending to estop the consideration of the legislation.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. Do I understand the gentleman to state that he has not asked the Committee on Rules for a rule or asked the steering committee for an opportunity to have this legislation considered at this session?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman, I believe, stated that he had made no formal application either to the steering committee or to the Committee on Rules as yet.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman make formal application in the near future?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman has been instructed by his committee to use all proper parliamentary means to secure consideration. Such means may vary from time to time, and therefore the gentleman can not state precisely what means he intends to employ at any given time.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the fact that this is a long session and the session does not expire at any definite time, the friends of this legislation could refuse to vote for an adjournment until the legislation was placed before the House, could they not?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is an interesting speculation.

Mr. WOODRUM. The distinguished gentleman, of course, could not make the statement which I want him to make, but I know it is true, and I want to say that if the distinguished chairman of his committee had had his way there would have been retirement legislation in the last Congress, because I can say with all sincerity—and I hope it will not embarrass the gentleman—that he has been conscientious and relentless in his efforts to secure legislation, but the gentleman is in an embarrassing situation.

The members of his Cabinet and of his party are standing out to the country as deploring the fact that there is not an increase in the annuities, and lambasting Congress on that account, and yet his President and the steering committee of his party in the House will not let him bring the bill out before the House, where it could pass unanimously if it had an opportunity to come on the floor.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman thinks that is a proper interpolation in my speech, well and good; but I have had no intimation, either from the President or any others, to the effect that the legislation will not be considered. On the other hand, I have received expressions from various sources showing that a sympathetic interest in such legislation is being entertained, and I believe that to be the fact.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield the floor. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left of the gentleman's 35 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ACKERMAN). It is a special order. The gentleman has yielded the floor.

Mr. BROWNE. How much time has he taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has consumed 27 minutes.

Mr. BROWNE. Out of the 35?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask unanimous consent that I may have the balance of that time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for eight minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I want to say that the balance of the afternoon has been set aside by unanimous consent of the House for the consideration of conservation and reforestation discussion. I hope that when the gentleman from Wisconsin finishes his eight minutes no further requests for time will be made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Civil Service, of which I am a member, began joint hearings on the retirement bills with the Senate committee soon after the convening of this Congress. The committee has had a great many witnesses before it—actuaries, experts, and others. It has considered this bill, H. R. 7, which it has reported favorably upon, very thoroughly. The Senate committee has reported a bill similar to the House bill. Both bills have been considered for over four months by the committees, and both committees were unanimous in reporting the bills for passage. In the last session the House and Senate, after full consideration, presented similar bills with unanimous reports. The Senate bill passed the Senate, but the committee of the House were not able to get a consideration of it in the House. Now, it is very doubtful if the House will have a chance to even vote on the bill that the committees have unanimously reported to the House at this session of Congress.

I hold in my hand here an interview printed by all the Washington papers which I have never seen contradicted, and I do not think it has been contradicted. The headings are:

[From the Washington Times, Saturday, April 17, 1926]

HOPE FOR ACTION IS LOST

"There is no possibility of any legislation liberalizing retirement for Federal employees in this session of Congress," Representative JOHN Q. TILSON, of Connecticut, Republican floor leader of the House, stated to-day after a conference with President Coolidge at the White House.

This statement was made on last Saturday, April 17, and has not been contradicted. The question arises whether, after a thorough consideration of an important measure of this kind by a committee and a favorable report, it is possible that one man or a set of men can prevent the House of Representatives from voting and putting itself on record as being for or against this legislation? If so, it is not only a peculiar but a humiliating situation. I do not think that there is a State in the Union or a single government in the world that pretends to have a democratic form of government where the parliament of that government or the legislature of that State would tolerate having the right to vote on legislation reported favorably by a committee taken away from it without having a chance to vote upon it. And yet the House of Representatives, the first of the three departments of government created by the Constitution, has reduced itself, if this rule is continued and this precedent established, to a mere debating society, where we can only go through the motions of legislating and consider matters of great importance by mere academic discussion. This legislation affects 188,000 faithful employees of the Government. They are very anxious about it.

My friend from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has said that they have a retirement system in practically all the nations of the world and in most of the large cities and most of the large corporations in the United States have such a system. Such a system is not only humane but helps in efficiency; and yet when a bill has been thoroughly worked out here and presented with a unanimous report from the committee composed of Republicans and Democrats, one man, a Member representing no more important constituency than any of the other 434 Members of the House of Representatives, can walk along the well-beaten path to the White House and afterwards to state to the press of this country that we shall not have any legislation on the subject!

Now there is other important legislation pending that has been reported favorably by committees, the Civil War veterans' bill, the bill affecting the World War veterans, and the truth-in-fabric bill, one of the early pieces of legislation reported out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Why can not the House have an opportunity to vote upon these important bills and say whether they want them or not? I object to the President vetoing legislation before it gets to him. [Applause.] When any department of government dictates what bills shall be considered by Congress and what bills shall not, that department of government is encroaching on the legislative branch of the Government, and I for one resent it.

In other words, when a committee has for weeks and weeks considered an important measure and has favorably reported it—a measure which affects as many people as this measure does—and there is other legislation which should be considered, like the pension bill for aged Civil War veterans and their widows that I referred to, which was passed almost unanimously in the last session, and the truth-in-fabric bill, which has been knocking at the doors of this House for five or six years, I do not see why this House, the great sovereign body it is, can not bring up this legislation before it and vote it up or down, and if a majority vote in favor of it, then the President can exercise his prerogative as the Executive and veto it, and we can have our recourse after that.

There is a movement all over the world to weaken the powers of the parliaments and usurp the power of the legislative branch of the government. Mussolini, the black-shirted dictator of Italy, has reduced the Parliament of Italy to a mere debating society. There are other countries, claiming to be democratic countries, whose parliaments are now under such dictatorships that the legislative branch of those countries has been reduced to a mere debating society. The Reichstag under the Kaiser was a mere debating society, going through the motions while the Kaiser was legislating, but the House of Representatives of America and the Parliament of England have heretofore stood up as great sovereign bodies and maintained their rights.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. For a question; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman does not think it necessary to adjourn on the 15th or 16th of May with this important legislation not considered, does he?

Mr. BROWNE. I certainly do not. I believe we could take up this legislation any afternoon, have two or three hours of general debate, and pass it almost unanimously.

The Constitution of the United States, Article I, section 1, provides that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States. . . .

The House of Representatives, the most important of the three coordinate branches of Government and created in the first article and first section of the Constitution, was supposed to legislate for the people without any interference or intimidation from either of the other departments of Government. Is the present Congress fulfilling the sovereign functions for which it was created? Did the framers of the Constitution contemplate that before any important legislation could be voted for by the Members of the House of Representatives that one or more of the Members of this body should go to the White House and consult the President; and if the President was not favorable to the legislation proposed, then prevent the Congress from considering and voting upon such legislation? Is it within the province of the President of the United States to tell Congress whether it can consider and pass upon certain bills before it or not? If on all important matters of legislation the President's approval or disapproval of the consideration and voting upon such legislation is necessary, then the President is legislating and not Congress.

The Sixty-eighth Congress was severely criticized by Mr. Gary, president of the United States Steel Corporation, and Orin Lester, president of the Bowers Savings Bank, because it manifested some independence and insisted in drafting a revenue bill instead of accepting the Mellon tax bill. Mr. Gary stated that—

The worst thing we have is our American Congress.

Mr. Lester said:

With such agencies at work in the country as Bolshevism and the present United States Congress we have some job on our hands to maintain the integrity of the Nation and the security of our institutions.

There is an effort from certain sources in the United States to undermine and belittle the American Congress and make it absolutely subservient to the dictates of the Executive. The present Congress has been eulogized and lauded by those people who condemned the Sixty-eighth Congress because it would not take orders from them.

The Members of this Congress are responsible to the people for legislation and not the President of the United States. If this Congress believed in letting the President legislate for it, then what is the use of taking up the time and holding committee meetings for the consideration of bills that will never be voted upon by Congress? [Applause.]

CONSERVATION OF FORESTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House adopted on April 20, 1926, it was ordered—

That debate on the general subject of conservation of forests be in order for three hours on Thursday, April 22, 1926, after completion of the address by Mr. LEHLBACH, time to be controlled by Mr. TILSON and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the privilege of yielding the control of the time allotted to me to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield the control of the time in my charge to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking upon the subject of conservation and reforestation this afternoon have five legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak upon the subject of conservation and reforestation have five legislative days in which to extend and revise their remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman, of course, means their own remarks?

Mr. WOODRUFF. If this general permission is granted, I intend to ask that I be allowed to print in connection with my speech a speech delivered by the Chief Forester of the United States at the annual meeting of the American Forestry Association, Richmond, Va., January 6, 1926.

Mr. JONES. I think that would be all right. I do not think leave should be granted to extend remarks on any subject other than this subject, and that the extension should include remarks made by the gentlemen themselves.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to have permission to include the speech to which I have referred.

Mr. JONES. With that understanding, that otherwise they will be the Member's own remarks, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to speak the opening word in this discussion on conservation, with special reference to the subject of forestry, for it is a subject in which I have always felt a deep and abiding interest. It is the desire of every right-thinking man to leave the world better than he found it. Upon this very laudable characteristic of mankind has been built much that is best in civilization. The principle involved can be most aptly applied to the question of the conservation and reproduction of our forests.

Man found the earth covered with vegetation, a large part of it being forests. When in the course of his development he reached the agricultural stage it was necessary for him to remove the forests in many places in order that he might dig his living from the earth. Quite naturally he came to regard the forest as one of his principal enemies rather than his best friend. He found that the forest not only occupied the ground and prevented his cultivation of it, but it also harbored wild beasts, and sometimes wilder men, who sought to destroy him. With such an environment it is but natural that he should ruthlessly devastate the forests, which, in fact, he did.

In many countries of the Old World, like China, the attitude and policy of hostility to the forest, without a thought of its beneficence, eventually produced its logical result in the immense denuded areas of those countries. At a later stage this same process went on in Europe, though not on such a scale as in Asia, but here, having learned something of the lesson taught by the experience of Asiatic countries, a wiser policy was evolved, so that in some countries of Europe forests of incalculable and increasing value have been maintained through many centuries.

In our own country the boundless expanse of forest, and the seemingly impossible task of seriously depleting it, caused an attitude on the part of Americans much like that of our earlier yellow brethren. With my own hands I have helped to fell the stately trees that grew in superabundance upon the farm where I grew up. I have helped roll these trees into immense heaps and burn them in order to plow and hoe the ground upon which they grew. We have ruthlessly and wastefully destroyed much of our forests, and even yet the process is one of destruction rather than rehabilitation. We have already sufficient data to foresee the inevitable result of the policy of destruction. Fortunately, our people are gradually realizing the seriousness of the situation, and have begun in a more or less effective way to undo what has been done, or at least to offset what is being done.

When we reflect that man not only found the earth covered with forests but that he found underneath the soil an abundance of oil, natural gas, and coal of all descriptions, all of which he is proceeding to use up at an incredibly fast rate, it is enough to cause us to stop and consider what the final result will be. We can not replace the oil, the gas, or the coal. These came from the vegetable growth of bygone ages. The surface of the earth, however, can be caused to produce new forests, and if we would have regard for the future, if we would really have the world be better for our having lived in it, and not materially worse, it is necessary that we enter not only upon a policy of conserving the forests that have been left but of restoring as far as possible the forests to the condition in which they should have been maintained through the years that have passed. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I think it is quite right that this House should devote a few hours to-day, during conservation week, to a discussion of the great subject of the conservation of national resources. We have seen in the last 30 years the whole development of the idea of the conservation of resources, beginning with proclamations issued by the several Presidents since that time, under which great areas of public domain in the West were covered into reserves to be held for posterity, and which we hope will be for the children of those now in the United States and not for those yet unborn in foreign countries. [Applause.]

It so happens that in the district which I have the honor to represent, the third district of Washington, are three large forest reserves. These reserves are in reality forests; they are not treeless forest reserves or grazing lands. The last great stands of timber in the United States are in the extreme Pacific Northwest.

I have always felt that the question of the proper conservation of our forest resources has been misunderstood by the people of the East. I have always resented a little the fact that so many people living in that part of the United States east of the Mississippi River, having discovered that the natural resources that the East once had were gone, were so determined to preserve the resources in our part of the country that they would do it without rhyme or reason, and have, as a fact, literally "preserved," and embalmed a lot of our resources. In fact, some of our greatest resources are becoming mummified, frozen, and valueless either to this generation or to posterity.

I have been surprised during all of these years I have been a Member of Congress that for such a long time the appropriations for the forest reserves came from the Committee on Agriculture, and it has been a rare Congress when we have had on the Committee on Agriculture anybody who really understood much about actual forests and actual forest conservation. Therefore, I am very glad to see the whole House beginning to carefully consider this subject.

The first year I was in Congress—at an extra session in 1913, I believe—I secured 40 minutes to address the House and did address the House. I had quite a large audience and close attention. I addressed the House on the subject of conservation at close range, telling something about the sad side of the forest-reserve system and how the national forests were thrown upon the old-time homesteaders, thus shutting him out of every opportunity, such as roads, schools, churches, and neighbors. Also I told how the Western States were deprived, cut out from the development of that from which they had expected to derive population, prosperity, and taxes.

I do not now desire to sound one discordant note. We have seen the States and the Forest Reserve Bureau come more into harmony and better understanding. The officials these days are highly efficient. I wish I had time to compliment them by name. Impossible rules and barbarous regulations have been abandoned. The squandering of public funds on trifling contests has ceased.

I have one idea to suggest for your consideration. When you begin to talk about reforestation out in these great cut-over areas of the Pacific Northwest, you must remember it is not quite fair to call upon the owner of the land, who harvested the possible one crop of his lifetime—which crop he may have been obliged to cut on account of high taxation by the State. That is to say, if he had held that timber any longer he never would have gotten his money back, because the taxes he would have been compelled to pay would have been more than he would have received. That forces liquidation. It forces premature cutting.

Then, when it is proposed to reforest, the State legislatures and conservation congresses always argue that the owners of the cut-over stump land must do the reforesting. They say: "Why should we put the good money that we have earned and now have into expensive reforestation for results 60, 80, or 100 years from now, to develop something from which our children and our grandchildren may derive some income when under the inheritance-tax system of State or Nation, or both, that income is to be snatched away from us?" You can see the problem. I need not develop it further, but I shall, under permission granted, find time, I hope, to extend my remarks on this most interesting subject. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCSWEENEY], who will read the proclamation of the President of the United States with reference to American forestry week, and concerning which he may have some comments of his own.

Mr. MCSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me that a gracious Providence has lavished upon America wonderful natural resources; and when I think of all the things lying beneath the surface of our earth and the wonderful vegetation on the earth, I wonder whether Christ's parable of the talent is not applicable to us. You remember that parable. I wonder as a citizen of America whether I am taking care of my talent, whether I am enhancing its value or whether I am allowing it to lose its value. Can we as Americans ever hand back the talent that was given to us and say, "Here is Thy talent"? I am afraid we can not. This gracious Providence wants us to utilize these wonderful resources, not waste them, but in many instances we have not utilized them but have wasted them. I only hope our conscience has been awakened in time for us in some way to preserve some of these resources and to give to the next generation a portion of that wonderful heritage that was left to you and to me. We can waste money, because money is made by man, although the component parts of it were made by that same gracious Providence; but we all know that God Almighty alone can make a tree. We can aid Him if we will by giving that tree a start, and then He will give it life and growth and allow it to beautify the earth, so that we may, as was so beautifully expressed by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], leave it a better place than we found.

We are awakening the public conscience; and this year, as in years past, the President of the United States has set aside this week for us to pay attention to this great question of reforestation, and I shall read the President's proclamation which he has issued with regard to forestry week:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A proclamation

In again proclaiming American forest week it is fitting that, while giving full weight to the evils resulting from impoverished forests and idle land, I should lay stress upon the outward spread of forestry in industrial practice and land usage. Too long have we, as a Nation, consumed our forest wealth without adequate provision for its wise utilization and renewal. But a gratifying change is taking place in the attitude of our industries, our landowners, and the American people toward our forests.

The wise use of land is one of the main foundations of sound national economy. It is the corner stone of national thrift. The waste or misuse of natural resources cuts away the groundwork on which national prosperity is built. If we are to flourish, as a people and as individuals, we must neither wastefully hoard nor wastefully exploit, but skillfully employ and renew the resources that nature has intrusted to us. America's forest problem essentially is a problem involving the wise use of land that can and should produce crops of timber.

Flourishing woodlands, however, mean more than timber crops, permanent industries, and an adequate supply of wood. They minister to our need for outdoor recreation; they preserve animal and bird life; they protect and beautify our hillsides and feed our streams; they preserve the inspiring natural environment which has contributed so much to American character.

Although our national progress in forestry has been well begun, much remains to be done through both concerted and individual effort. We must stamp out the forest fires which still annually sweep many wooded areas, destroying timber the Nation can ill afford to lose and killing young growth needed to constitute the forests of the future. Forest fires, caused largely by human indifference or carelessness, are the greatest single obstacle to reforestation and effective forest management.

We must encourage and extend methods of timber cutting which perpetuate the forest while harvesting its products. We must plant trees in abundance on idle land where they can profitably be grown. We must examine taxation practices that may form economic barriers to timber culture. We must encourage the extension of forest ownership on the part of municipalities, counties, States, and the Federal Government. And we must take common counsel in public meetings to the end that the forestry problems of each region may be well considered and adequately met.

Now, therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week of April 18-24, inclusive, 1926, as American Forest Week; and I recommend to the governors of the various States that they also designate the week of April 18-24 as American Forest Week and observe Arbor Day within that week wherever practicable and not in conflict with law or accepted custom. And I urge public officials, public and business organizations, industrial leaders, landowners, editors, educators, clergymen, and all patriotic citizens to unite in the common task of forest conservation and renewal.

The action of the Canadian Government in likewise proclaiming the week of April 18-24, inclusive, as a period when the utmost stress shall be laid upon the problems of forest conservation and renewal, thus unifying the respective efforts of Canada and the United States, is an added reason why our citizens should give careful thought to a matter so important to both countries.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 3d day of March, A. D. 1926, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fiftieth.

[SEAL.]

By the President:

FRANK B. KELLOGG,

Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

This is the President's attitude. We, as Representatives, are really coworkers with him, trying to do what we can for the welfare of our country. We should join hands and with a concerted effort move in one direction which will lead us to make our land more beautiful, more pleasant, and more prosperous for those who follow us. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to ask the Clerk to read in my time a little poem written by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia, Hon. J. ALFRED TAYLOR.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHEN A GREAT OAK FALLS

By J. ALFRED TAYLOR, M. C.

Deep rooted it stood in the mountain wood—

A lord of the forest—a giant oak;

The storm god tried, but never could Cause it to bend to his lowly yoke.

He tested its strength in a thousand ways—

With wind and the lightning, storm and rain;

But the oak stood staunch through the countless days,

Regarding these efforts with deep disdain.

But there came a day—as there comes to all

The trees of the forest, small or great,

When the oak, in answer to nature's call,

Went down in the wood of its own sheer weight.

That happened a thousand years ago;

Earth gathered the oak to mold and decay,

And ferns and wild flowers richer grow

Along a path where the great oak lay,

A stancher oak is towering high—

Sprung from the soil where the old oak stood.

The old oak lives, though it seemed to die

An age ago in the mountain wood.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT]. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the fact that the President of the United States has issued a proclamation setting aside this week for the consideration of the question which is before the House of Representatives at this time is in itself a sufficient proof of the importance of the question.

Of necessity we approach problems from the standpoint of our own experience, and I hope you will bear with me if I speak from time to time of personal experiences. For about 11 years my work was forestry, and during all of that period of time the foremost thought in my mind was the preservation of the Nation's forests.

We learn, as I have said, from our experience, and we approach these things from that angle. The thing that shocked me into an appreciation of the forestry problem that confronts the United States may be interesting. I was born and grew up in the woods of Michigan. Back at the beginning of my memory I recall almost unbroken forests. I went West as a young man, and was gone for nine years without returning to the place where I had been a boy. When I had left there had been a shingle mill cutting shingles from the cedar, a hoop and stave factory cutting elm and manufacturing it into barrel material, a band-saw mill and two circular-saw mills making lumber, and a hardwood woodenware factory making butter bowls and similar products from the maple. After that nine years nothing whatever was left except the band-saw mill running for a few days out of each year. The pay roll which had existed and which had formed the prosperity of one of the finest of villages had ceased to exist. The population of the town had shrunk to a half, and as time has gone by it has shrunk to a still smaller figure.

Meanwhile, however, I had gone into the forestry work and had had forced on me a study of the situation. I was shocked at this result of the lack of foresight, because I had learned meanwhile to know that if there had been wisdom used, if there had been set aside in that State the land best fitted for raising forests, better fitted for that than agriculture, there could still have been a great lumber industry not only then but for every year of the years to come. [Applause.]

It has been proven in Michigan that there are 10,000,000 acres, at least, better fitted for raising forests, valuable kinds of forest species, than for any other purpose.

In my own State of Montana there have been set aside great areas of national forests in common with other States. To-day over 18,000,000 acres are in national forests and have the supervision of the Federal Government. The State of Montana, still small in population but marvelous in natural resources because of this great foresight, has nothing to fear from a lumber famine. We have nothing to fear from the drying up of the heads of our streams. We know, because of the protection of our streams, that Montana can develop one-tenth of all the water power that can be developed in the United States, and that some time, with the growth of population, it will be used. In many other parts of the Nation that possibility has gone with the depletion of the forests and the destruction of the forest areas, because upon the existence of the forest cover depends the protection of the stream heads, the water for irrigation, and all those things which are benefited by the supply of water.

So in the new States of the West we are respecting the foresight of the great conservationists, the men who first established a real conservation program in this country.

What was the situation in our Nation at the beginning? That is of interest to us. We have a total acreage in the continental United States of something like 1,900,000,000 acres. It is estimated that 822,000,000 acres of that great area was forest land. It was necessary to remove much timber because much land was more valuable for agriculture, thus making way for the farms of the Nation. That was a legitimate process for the development of our country. But it is evident that even with that need considered there was a mistake in bringing about a condition so that now 81,000,000 acres in the United States has been cut over, and left without protection, to be burned over time and again until they are completely denuded, and will never produce agricultural crops nor forest crops until planted. That is the result on cut-over land burned by repeated forest fires and which have not been taken in hand by the Government or the State. We have confronting us to-day the problem of acquiring greater acreage of lands of forest value, and to protect from fire these lands that must again produce timber for the prosperity of our country. At the present time, with something like 2,200,000,000 feet of timber left in the country, we are consuming it at a rate of 60,000,000,000 feet a year.

That would not be so serious but for the fact that we are only replacing it by natural growth and by all the steps we are taking as a Nation at the rate of 15,000,000,000 feet a year. In other words, cutting into our reserve of timber at a rate four times as fast as it is produced to hold our own. I claim every Member of this House is interested. Some of us may be more interested than others—and those of us who are particularly interested are sometimes charged with being excited about this problem. That reminds me of the time of a forest fire in the mountains of Montana. One of the rangers rode into camp where I was in charge of a number of fire fighters, and I said to another near me, "This ranger in telling about the fire sweeping through the canyon is excited." He said, "No; he is not excited; he is simply anxious about the situation." That is how it is with us who are helping to present this matter here to-day. There are economic questions that should be considered as well as others. I will take up first what it is costing the people in the United States in added freight on lumber because we have denuded great timber areas of our country and made them unproductive. Go back to that time when this eastern part of the United States, from the Potomac River where we are to-day north through the New England States was the great timber-producing section of the United States. The average cost of lumber at wholesale here in the East was then about $10.50 a thousand feet, board measure.

The freight bill of 1,000 feet was only between $1 and $2 a thousand. That was from 1840 to 1860, down to the time of the beginning of the Civil War. Then with the depletion of the forests here in the East the great lumber center shifted to the Great Lakes States, and from 1860 to 1900 that section was supreme. Back here to the East there was then an average haul of a thousand miles by the railroads and the Lakes, and the cost per 1,000 feet of lumber at wholesale here in the East went up to $16 per 1,000, and the freight bill increased to from $3 to $7 per thousand. From 1900 to 1915 the industry shifted again, and instead of the Great Lakes States, that as a boy I thought had an inexhaustible supply of lumber, it went to the Southern States and from there was drawn the greater part of the lumber coming to the East. Some, of course, still came from the Lakes States. The cost per 1,000 feet now rose to an average of over $25. That added cost went into the building of our people's homes here in the eastern part of the country, and the freight cost went up again to from $6 to $12 per 1,000 feet. And what is it now here in the eastern part of the United States? Mr. Speaker, wholesale lumber for the building of the people's homes averages now about $55 a thousand, and the freight bill for 1,000 feet of lumber ranges at from $15 to $25 per 1,000, because the bulk now comes from the South and the Pacific Coast. What does all this mean to the Nation as a whole? What does it mean? I will give one or two specific illustrations.

I will take the great State of Illinois, for example, that in the days when I was a boy got most of its lumber from the woods of Michigan, shipped down the Lakes to Chicago and from there distributed through the State. At the present time the lumber for Illinois is coming largely from the Pacific coast and from the South; some of it still from Michigan, but a very small part. And in 1920 it was estimated that the freight bill alone on lumber coming into Illinois was $28,000,000.

In 1924 it had increased to $32,000,000. Thus, during four years' time the freight bill on lumber to the State of Illinois had increased $1,000,000 a year. Just one other thing in this connection, and that is in regard to the city of Cincinnati, from which the Speaker of the House [Mr. LONGWORTH] comes. Twenty years ago lumber could be purchased in Cincinnati at wholesale at about $24 a thousand. To-day it costs about $24 a thousand for freight alone on similar lumber, because it is now being shipped clear from the Pacific coast and from the pineries of the South. That means something important to this country.

In Michigan, between the years 1850 and 1910, there was about 1,000,000,000 feet of lumber shipped out of Michigan. In 1920 Michigan shipped in 1,000,000,000 feet of timber. The process now was exactly reversed. Note, too, from where Michigan is getting its timber at this time. From Michigan herself about 468,497,000 feet; from the other Lake States, 161,444,000. From the south pine region, 626,712,000, that being the greatest single source of supply; from the central hardwood region, 174,152,000 feet; from Washington and Oregon, clear cut on the Pacific coast, 148,775,000; from Idaho and Montana, including the western part of my own State, it being shipped across the entire great plains section, 87,397,000 feet of timber; and from other sources an added 50,875,000, making a grand total of lumber consumed in Michigan of 1,117,852,000 feet, and less than 500,000,000 feet of it now produced in Michigan itself.

What does that mean to Michigan in the way of freight? Michigan pays for the moving of its own timber from different parts of the State down to the great centers like Detroit and Grand Rapids $2,500,000 in freight. But that is only a small part of the $19,400,000 annual freight bill which the State is paying. What does that mean to you and to me when we buy furniture made in Grand Rapids? And what does it mean in the crowded centers of Michigan when they wish to buy lumber for their homes?

I must leave that and take up the question of forest fires. You will be surprised when I tell you that every year in the United States there are about 50,000 forest fires, averaging about 200 acres apiece, and most of them set by human agencies. That means a line of fire creeping through the forests along the ground and through the tops of the trees three-quarters of a mile deep and some 34,000 miles long. You can take that line of fire and run it from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast how many times? Once, twice, three times, four times, five times, six times, seven times, eight times, nine times, ten times! Can you imagine such a thing as that taking place in the United States every year and destroying timber of inestimable value?

Suppose that sort of damage was taking place because of the invasion of an enemy into this country! How long would it take the people of the United States to recognize that they were confronted with the necessity of rushing to the defense of their country and the protection of the resources of the land? There will be a response from the people to this danger some day that will help us to solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, that means that 10,000,000 acres of forest area, some virgin timber and some of second growth, but all of it capable of producing forests to the extent of 10,000,000 acres, has gone up in smoke.

Now, what has been done, and what is there to do? There are many phases of this problem that would be interesting. The history of it might briefly be touched upon. It was about 100 years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence that the Federal Government and the American people realized, except in the case of a few, that there should be some constructive steps taken for the preservation of the forests, and in the year 1876, $2,000 was appropriated by Congress to investigate the situation. Five years before that, in 1871, a bill of the same kind was introduced here in Congress and was defeated.

In 1886 there was a Division of Forestry created in the Department of Agriculture, but it was without scope or adequate power. In 1901 that division in the Department of Agriculture became the Bureau of Forestry. But the year 1894 is the historic year of the real beginning of the forestry movement. The act of March 3, 1891, gave authority to the President to create permanent forests for stream protection. That was the reason given. It was then beginning to be realized back in the older parts of the country that the stream flow depends on stream protection, and that something must be done to protect the woodlands and the sources of the streams. President Harrison created the first timber reserve, one that lies east and south of the Yellowstone National Park, on March 30, 1891.

In 1896 the President requested the National Academy of Sciences to draw up a national forest policy, and out of that report grew the present forestry policy. The title of the Bureau of Forestry was changed to the Forest Service in 1905, and then began the present real work of the national forests and the spread of the forestry doctrine.

President Harrison withdrew 13,416,710 acres of forest lands. During Cleveland's administration he became the outstanding champion of the conservation movement, and withdrew by proclamation 25,686,320 acres of forest lands on the public domain, and, Mr. Speaker, it was proposed here that he be impeached for doing that thing which we now realize was one of the most constructive things ever done by a President.

of the United States. How the national understanding has been clarified! He was followed by McKinley with 7,050,089 acres. Then came Roosevelt. I do not know whether any of the Members here to-day were Members at that time or not, but you will recall that some one started a bill through Congress providing that in certain Western States no further forest lands could be set aside by Executive proclamation, but that it could be done only by this Congress. Theodore Roosevelt had the Forest Service work night and day for three or four days preparing proclamations that he signed and sent down to the State Department for safe-keeping just as fast as they were prepared, with the result that the move was frustrated by that marvelous man while the bill was being passed. So we have to-day, with later eliminations of large areas not most valuable for that purpose, something like 155,000,000 acres of national forest lands.

That gives us something of the history up to the present time. Within the last few years Congress has been taking further steps. In 1911 there was the Weeks Act, the purpose of which was to allow the purchase of land upon which timber could be preserved at the head of streams in the White Mountains and the Appalachians. Then there was the Clarke-McNary Act, which we passed in the Sixty-eighth Congress. Most of us had a part in that, very much to our credit.

We ought now to take another forward step and make it possible to bring about, by appropriating sufficient funds for an extended 10-year program, the consummation of a statement made by Secretary Jardine on the 16th of April at Atlantic City. He said this:

The public forest acquisition program likewise represents a progressive policy. The Government has so far bought 2,690,000 acres of forest land, and during the next 10 years, according to present plans, hopes to buy 500,000 acres in the Northwest, 3,000,000 acres in the Appalachians, 2,500,000 acres in the South, and 2,500,000 acres in the Lake States. The McNary-Woodruff bill, which is now pending in Congress, will, if passed, make some such program possible.

That outlines the thing that is immediately necessary for this Congress to do.

Now, in closing I hope you will pardon me if I state this illustration from a personal standpoint—

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's statement about the fire proposition. I have before me a copy of the New York American which states that a large forest fire is raging in the lower part of Long Island, which bears out what the gentleman said.

Mr. LEAVITT. I thank the gentleman for bringing that up.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I know his qualifications for speaking upon this subject, and particularly concerning the forest reserves which are in the West. I think the gentleman will agree with me that for many years there was some considerable friction between the western people and those in charge of these reserves when they were primarily set apart, and the feeling, I think, has grown up in the country that the western people—the people who live contiguous to and in and about these forest reserves—are opposed to conservation. I would like to have the gentleman's view, he having had years of experience and living with these people, as to what their attitude is on this proposition.

Mr. LEAVITT. I will say to the gentleman and to the House that the people of the western country, who have had actual experience and contact with the national forests, are the most ardent upholders of the conservation idea. They have learned that their first fears were unfounded and that the location of these forests in the western country, handled in such a way that their forage and timber resources are made available to the local communities, and at the same time protecting the stream heads, making irrigation possible, making possible the development of power, and making certain that during the years to come there will always be a comparatively cheap supply of lumber and timber for the development of those great sections, has been of great value to them. They are the most ardent upholders of that program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I just want to ask the gentleman this: If it is not a fact that the people in the West originally opposed very vigorously the proposition of conservation and the setting aside of forest reserves.

Mr. LEAVITT. They did, because the majority of the people then misunderstood and got the wrong idea. They thought that the establishment of a national forest—and I say national forest, because that is the proper name of those great areas that were at first called forest reserves—meant that the areas would be locked up and reserved for some time in the future. But we know now that the existence of a forest policy makes it possible to use the timber now and next year and next year, just as long as we protect it and keep it under proper control, and that all the resources of the national forests are open for use.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want to ask the gentleman another question, because I know he has had the experience and knows. How long after a forest is denuded does it take to replenish it?

Mr. LEAVITT. That depends on the species of timber that is being considered. I talked down at the National Museum to somewhere between 800 and 1,000 small boys and girls yesterday, and I used this illustration. I said:

Take the room in which I am speaking and in which you are listening and we will say that it is an ideal area with 100 trees ranging in age from a year up to 100 years, of a species of timber which requires 100 years to reach its full merchantable growth. If we keep fire out of that area, and if we replace what we cut with plantings every year, not only this year but next year and every year as far into the future as you can see, you can cut one great tree off of that area and there is no end to it. But if it is a forest of that kind and we allow fire to run through it repeatedly and denude it, it would take to replace it, naturally, just as long as it would take for the particular species of timber to mature. In that particular case it would be 100 years. There are other kinds of timber that will mature in lesser periods of time, some 25 years, 30 years, 40 years, 50 years, and so on. In any event, the key to the problem is fire protection, and that means a knowledge of the real situation and the arousing of public sentiment and action here as well as elsewhere.

If we all become, as has been well stated, "forest minded," so that we are thinking not only from the standpoint of the present but of the future of our country, we would be able by merely keeping out fire and doing a reasonable amount of replanting to bring back into the State of Michigan, for example, 10,000,000 acres of productive forests; to bring as much back into the State of Pennsylvania; to bring as much back in other States, like New York, that at one time were great producers of timber and which lie very close to the great centers of population.

At the present time Michigan, for example, could be saving one-half the freight bill by getting her timber supply within her own territory. This would be a saving alone of $10,000,000 a year to that one State, a thing that can well be demonstrated. Reforesting everywhere lands are available will have similar results.

Just briefly, another matter that needs attention, and that is the experimental work. At Madison, Wis., there is a forest-products laboratory. Experiment stations are located in other parts of the United States. At Madison they are making studies of how there can be brought about a closer utilization of our forestry products to reduce the waste. Millions of feet of timber are lost through lack of close utilization. There has been a program brought before the Congress and partially provided for in the agricultural appropriation bill to get that work under way, but the well-founded plans justify far more money as a real investment.

This was of such importance that Secretary Wallace had taken steps before he died to call together a great conference here in Washington which I was fortunate to attend. It was addressed by President Coolidge, and it set in motion a commission to study this problem of utilization and to present to Congress a constructive plan reaching out into the future.

I am sure there will be further discussion by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], the author of the Woodruff-McNary bill, the necessity of our having a forward view with regard to acquiring of great areas of timber lands. If we allow them to be burned over and lose their possibility of being brought again into production, we shall have moved too slowly. We should move as rapidly as we can in conformity with the resources of the Government. Any other plan is not economy but waste.

I remember one time, in the days when I was a ranger in the western forests, riding my horse to the top of a peak of the mountains during the dangerous fire season. My duty at that time was to stand on the top of the mountain with field glasses and to scan the entire horizon. I remember how impressive it looked with the great forested slopes stretching out as far as I could see in every direction. And then when there appeared a rising cloud of smoke my duty was to get the word out, to get reinforcements started to the fire, and then to get my pack horse loaded with shovel and ax and mattock, with my bedding and my food, and to get to that fire just as quickly as I could, across country and by the best trails possible, and to try to hold it from spreading until the reinforcements came. I like to think that this forestry week means an arousing of that idea of watchfulness and of that spirit of action in the minds of all the American people. I like to think that we here in Congress, in recognition of this great occasion of American forest week, set aside by the President of the United States, are ourselves, on this Capitol Hill in Washington, like the look-outs on guard in our great national forests, on the watch against whatever, like the fires of the forest lands, may threaten the carrying out of this great constructive, conservation movement, so that the future of the Nation, so far as we are concerned, will be eternally secure. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

CONSERVATION OF LOUISIANA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the American people are coming to recognize that the conservation of our national resources is one of the most vital and pressing questions before the American people and the Congress.

The Congress has taken some steps, but the steps have been feeble and halting in comparison with the sentiment of the American people. A few days ago in the Committee on Agriculture the Bureau of the Budget, by the direction of the President, reduced the conservation program to $2,000,000 for two years, when a year ago the Bureau of the Budget recommended the complete program outlined in the Woodruff-McNary bill; that is, $3,000,000 a year for five years and $5,000,000 for the following five years.

The sentiment among the American people is far in advance of the activities of the Congress.

I wish to speak upon the conservation program in Louisiana. Louisiana has 2,200 acres of State forests. We have 60,000 acres of public shooting grounds and a game refuge or a game sanctuary of 300,000 acres supported and maintained by the State, protected by the State, feed provided for the migratory birds by the State, scientists and doctors provided by the State to treat the sick birds in that great sanctuary, and it might be well to note in passing that the Department of Agriculture reports that 75 per cent of all the migratory birds of Canada and of the United States spend their winters in Louisiana in our sanctuaries. [Applause.]

And the State of Louisiana takes care of that vast plan to improve and conserve the wild life of America. It is not a question only of preserving our wild life to benefit the shooters or the hunters, but the question is primarily before the Congress to conserve our national resources, including wild life, for the whole American people—3 per cent are killers, but 97 per cent of the people enjoy the benefits of conservation also.

I wish to call your attention to this fact. As has been stated by gentlemen who preceded me, great conventions have been called by the Presidents of the United States to talk about conservation, but that time is passed. The time now is to act. By no means is conservation the abstract impersonal subject of concern to far away theorists. It is a tremendous industrial movement of immediate and direct concern to the people of every community. The United States as a Nation has been able to reach its present stage of great development because it was originally blessed with an abundance of natural resources. Louisiana has had its full share of these natural treasures to which we owe a large share of our State wealth.

Natural resources of one kind or another may be classed into four classes: First, those which are inexhaustible and occur in unlimited quantities, such as light and air. Second, inexhaustible resources, but limited in quantity, such as land and water. Third, those which are exhaustible and not capable of replenishment, such as oil, gas, and sulphur. Fourth, exhaustible resources which can be renewed, such as fish, game, and forests.

The wild life comes under the class of renewable resources. I wish I might have time to present this great question as it seems to me is imperatively pressing upon the attention of this Congress, so that in the future our steps as a great legislative body shall not be feeble and light, but that Congress will make an effort to go at least as far in advance as public sentiment of the American people. [Applause.]

Each class presents a different problem and calls for different treatment. The essence of treatment, however, is wise use, with elimination of waste, managed for the greatest benefit to greatest number of people. In the case of renewable resources the use should be such that renewal is not made unduly difficult or impossible.

THE FORESTS AND FOREST INDUSTRIES OF LOUISIANA

The forests of Louisiana, included in the last class of our catalogue of resources, have been the industrial and social backbone of the State. These resources have been worth more to Louisiana than the gold found in California has been to that State. Moreover, our forests have been of greater value to the United States than that selfsame gold has been. Let me read you a few figures, which show the importance of our forest resources.

The forest industries of Louisiana now employ around 50,000 persons, or more than half of all industrial employees in the State. These workers were paid over $40,000,000 wages and salaries in 1924, and the forest products sold were worth more than $110,000,000. According to the State forester, more than $300,000,000 is now invested in lumbering and dependent industries. Our forest industries pay 17 per cent of our taxes, or more than all the farms.

The cut of sawed lumber alone in the last 25 years exceeded 80,000,000,000 board feet, worth close to $1,500,000,000, or more than all the gold that California has produced. This is more lumber than any State of the Union cut during the same period, with the single exception of Washington.

In Louisiana there are now upward of 13,000,000 acres of cut-over land and less than 4,000,000 acres of virgin timber, which is being cut off at the rate of 300,000 acres a year. At this rate the forest industries are facing an early end, unless the cut-over land is made to produce more timber. A large proportion of it is not doing so now, and mill after mill is cutting out and being dismantled, leaving behind thousands of acres of idle land and deserted villages. This means heavier taxes on the farmers remaining, as the whole burden of local government, schools, roads, and so forth, falls on them; heavier taxes on the cities and other parts of the State as total taxable wealth is diminished; fewer local markets for crops and fewer jobs to help out when crops are poor; higher costs of lumber for building; less freight for the railroads and the bankruptcy or abandonment of many lines.

During the eight years 1915 to 1922 the railroad mileage in Louisiana decreased by 12 per cent, or 664 miles, a greater decrease than has ever taken place in any other State during any period. This necessarily means less adequate transportation facilities and a handicap on settlement in the localities affected. In the 20 years from 1900 to 1920 at least 7,000,000 acres of timber were cut, while the area of improved farm land increased less than 1,000,000 acres; and during the 10 years 1910 to 1920 the rural population increased less than 1 per cent (10,000), while the total population of the State increased by 142,000, or 8.6 per cent.

TRENDS OF LUMBER PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION

During the development of the United States the drift of the population has been to the westward. With the people have gone the production and consumption of goods.

When the United States Government was first organized the center of the population was on the Atlantic coast near Baltimore, and the center of lumber production was, for all practical purposes, at the same place.

With the expansion of our Nation the center of population moved nearly straight west, and with it went the lumber production center. For many years the production center stayed in the North, on account of the heavy lumber cut in the Lake States. But in 1890 it started south and came toward Louisiana for 20 years as our southern forests took over more and more the task of supplying lumber.

But recently a change has occurred. The increasing lumber production in the Northwest is dragging the center of production faster and faster away from the South toward Oregon and Washington. Already it has gone 500 miles west of the center of population, and this increasing distance between the mills and the consumers means a greatly increased cost for lumber transportation. Lumber freights cost Americans upward of $350,000,000 in 1923, and the bill is growing at the rate of $25,000,000 a year.

Economists think that the center of population will finally come to rest near St. Louis, which is not far from the center of our forest land in the United States. The center of lumber production, however, never stops. It has marched far past St. Louis on its westward journey and will continue to go west with corresponding increases in the annual lumber freight bill until we of the East and the South take steps to draw it back to a more normal location. The only way in which this can be done is by increasing our share of the lumber cut, and the only way we can increase our share is by conservation of our forests to make them produce more lumber. [Applause.]

PERPETUATION OF FOREST INDUSTRIES

The perpetuation of our forest resources involves first stopping fires so that the cut-over land can restock. In recent years fires have burned over annually almost 1,000,000 acres of forest land in Louisiana, killing the seedlings, retarding the growth of the older trees, and gradually destroying the soil fertility.

The next step is growing more and better timber to the acre in less time than was required for the old growth stands. A farmer who is content to harvest self-sown wild crops that came up without cultivation of any sort would not be considered a successful farmer. Furthermore, in that way it would be impossible to raise enough food to keep us all alive.

TIMBER GROWING

The same is true with timber. By growing timber systematically as a crop we should be able to produce at least three to five times as much wood and at a lower unit cost. A few progressive and far-sighted lumbermen in Louisiana, led by State Senator Henry E. Hardtner, have made a good start in this direction, and their holdings are becoming models for the whole southern-pine region. In scientific timber growing only the surface has yet been scratched, and the possibility of speeding up yields and improving the quality of the material is good. The Southern Forest Experiment Station, with headquarters at New Orleans, is at work on the problem, and is sure to produce results of incalculable value to the forest industries of the State. We can never have conservation of the kind that pays dividends until we know all there is to know about the best ways to speed up timber growth. In this matter each region has special problems, though the main principles are the same for all.

But equally essential to growing the timber is the utilization of what is grown. It would be foolish to spend money and labor to produce larger quantities of timber only to throw away two-thirds of it in the various processes between the stump and the consumer, as is done now. To utilize the wood economically it will be necessary to build up all sorts of wood-using industries and by-products industries subsidiary to the sawmills, plants that can take the "waste" material near its point of origin without a high intervening transportation cost.

Such plants, by making it possible to market a larger proportion of the wood grown in the forest, will help to make timber growing profitable, will provide a ready local market for the wood cut by farmers, and will create many flourishing local communities, which, depending on several industries, will be on a more stable basis than the old sawmill towns whose prosperity fluctuated with every turn of the timber market.

THE PAPER INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTH

One of the best examples is the development of the pulp and paper industry in the South. Here a tremendous opportunity is awaiting.

The United States now consumes well over 8,000,000 tons of paper annually, fully 90 per cent of which is manufactured from wood. More than 9,000,000 cords of pulp wood are required to manufacture one year's supply of paper for the country as a whole. Over three-quarters of our pulp-wood requirements are centered in the spruce, fir, and hemlock forests of the Northeast and Lake States. Continual drain upon these forests for both lumber and pulp wood has reduced them to a point where they can not support our requirements. During recent years imports of pulp wood, wood pulp, and paper have increased until now over 51 per cent of our requirements for paper are imported.

Furthermore, the possibilities of using southern woods to replace the heavy demands upon spruce, fir, and hemlock are not remote. The Forest Service has developed in their laboratory a modification of one of the pulping processes whereby the southern pine and hardwoods may be pulped for use in newsprint paper. This modified process gives great promise for the South. [Applause.]

The pines of the South are well adapted to pulping by the sulphate process for wrapping paper and for paper boards. In 1922 more than 1,200,000 cords of wood were required to manufacture the paper made from sulphate wood pulp. Sixty-three per cent, or 770,000 cords, were imported in some form or another. There is ample pulp wood in the South to wipe out this difference between domestic production and consumption. And there is ample forest land to grow the material necessary for any expected demands of the future.

Recent experimental work has proven the feasibility of using the southern pines and gums in combination in the manufacture of book paper. Some commercial tests have borne out the laboratory results. Here again is a great opportunity. [Applause.]

MINOR WOOD-USING INDUSTRIES IN THE SOUTH

Other possibilities in this direction include the establishment of various hardwood industries, such as the manufacture of furniture, woodenware, and numerous other products for which Louisiana hardwoods are now being shipped out of the State in great quantities to factories in other parts of the country. The largest remaining supplies of old-growth hardwoods in the United States are in the region tributary to the lower Mississippi Valley, but the whole country is drawing on them, and large quantities are being sent abroad. The development of local hardwood-using industries would not only add to the prosperity of the State, but it would also tend to bring about closer utilization of the hardwood timber. Moreover, not only will the high-grade hardwoods of this region probably outlast those in other parts of the country, but Louisiana is closer to the tropical hardwood forests of Central America and northern South America, to which our furniture industry and others requiring high-grade timber will no doubt turn as our own supplies become depleted. New Orleans is already an important center for the importation of mahogany and other tropical American woods.

After all is said and done, the best brand of conservation is wise use. In the case of the forests this means perpetuation of timber supplies and forest industries and the establishment of coordinate groups of wood-using industries. We already have in our State an excellent example of coordinate or integrated wood-using industries. The Great Southern Lumber Co. has expanded on just such a systematic program, making lumber primarily and using the waste from the sawmill to manufacture pulp and paper. In this way waste is eliminated as far as possible, meaning more complete use, which should result in greater profits.

To support such industries the forests must be well managed and every aid given to nature in restocking and growing a new crop of timber when the first is cut off. Herein lies the prosperity of a large part of our State. There is no more patriotic work than this, in doing our best to replenish our timber supply for our future enjoyment and industrial betterment.

Never forget that we have in the forest soils of this great State an asset of incalculable value. Properly treated these soils will yield wealth to our children's children, and long after the last dollar has been extracted from the gold mines of other regions. Neglect and abuse them and the golden harvest of our greatest natural resource will dwindle to a pittance, just as has occurred in many other States. [Applause.]

In this matter we are partners with nature. Give nature a chance to do her beneficent work. Keep out the fires. Plant the trees. Use God's gift wisely. Give nature a chance to restore the forests on our devastated lands and the never ceasing, resistless energies of the soil, the air, and the sunlight will keep Louisiana what she has always been—a Golconda of forest wealth. [Applause.]

Arthur Newton Pack, author of "Our Vanishing Forests," says:

Prohibition is difficult to enforce because a considerable portion of the public does not want it. Only when the public wants forest-fire protection will it be thoroughly effective. The crux of the whole matter lies in education.

This necessity for education along these lines is reiterated by E. T. Allen:

I do not undertake to outline the complete program of dealing with the fire evil, most of which is as familiar to you as it is to me, but only to urge a campaign against its cause. Because this is belated and difficult, it calls for action more decisive and vigorous than any we have attempted, or, as far as I can see, is being contemplated. I would, in every budget in this land for forest protection, devote not less than 5 per cent—sometimes more—to education against the starting of fire.

[From Our Vanishing Forests]

Tobacco firm in Canada adopted a novel plan of making each package of cigarettes preach a sermon against carelessness. A slip was enclosed, reading: "Please don't throw away a lighted cigarette. See that it is dead out. Lighted tobacco and matches are especially destructive in the forests. Living forests mean liberal employment; dead forests employ nobody. Don't be responsible for a dead forest!"

Forests are the background of America. We turn to our woods for recreation. They are one of our great preservers. Feed our lakes and streams. Shelter and renew our wild life. Contribute to moral stamina and bodily vigor. (Colonel Greeley.)

[Idle lands and costly timber.—United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin 1417]

The United States leads the nations of the earth in the use of wood. We consume nearly half of the world's cut of lumber and two-fifths of all the forest products which it produces. The quantity, variety, and cheapness of our timber have led to its use in our home industries and commerce to a degree that is without parallel. Ninety-eight per cent of our rural dwellings and from 59 to 98 per cent of our urban dwellings, varying in the different States, are still built of wood. From 25,000,000,000 to 28,000,000,000 board feet of lumber are used annually in building and construction, the farmers being the largest consumers, and 9,000,000,000 shingles are laid annually in roofing these homes and other structures. Another 6,000,000,000 feet of lumber is manufactured yearly into crates and boxes to carry our commerce. Our railroads normally require from 100,000,000 to 125,000,000 wooden ties annually. Our mining industry could not live without timber and consumes nearly 300,000,000 cubic feet of stulls and lagging every year. A hundred million cords of fuel are cut annually from our forests and wood lots. To support a per capita consumption of paper which is double that of any other country we cut 5,000,000 cords of pulp wood from our forests every year, and still import from Canada and other foreign sources over half of our paper or paper-making materials. There are 53 categories of manufacturers which depend on wood. All told, we take nearly 22,500,000,000 cubic feet of wood from our forests annually, which is equivalent, roughly, to 53,000,000,000 board feet.

In a very important sense the forest problem of the United States is primarily a problem of education. We must as a people grow out of old habits of mind and practice regarding timber and land that will grow timber. We must become a people skilled in the craft of producing wood as a staple crop and in the art of using wood with intelligence and thrift. The facts necessary to guide and stimulate this evolution must be dug out and made common property. In the nature of the case this must be done to a large degree by public agencies, and its accomplishment should be an important aim of public policy.

Natural resources, including our wild life, must be developed and preserved for the benefits of the many and not merely for the profit of a few.

The outgrowth of conservation is national efficiency. National efficiency will be the deciding factor in the great commercial struggle between the nations of the earth.

Conservation stands for the same kind of practical, common-sense management of this country's resources that every business man stands for in the management of his own business.

Conservation is the most democratic movement this country has known for a generation.

There are over 350,000,000 acres of cut-over land in the United States from which valuable timber trees have been removed. Most of this area is east of the Rocky Mountains. Eighty per cent of the remaining forest land is privately owned.

Dr. W. T. Hornaday in Our Vanishing Wild Life says:

I have been shocked by the accumulation of evidence showing that all over our country and Canada fully nine-tenths of our protective laws have practically been dictated by the killers of the game, and that in all save a few instances the hunters have been exceedingly careful to provide "open seasons" for slaughter as long as game remains to kill!

And yet the game of North America does not belong wholly and exclusively to the men who kill! The other 97 per cent of the people have vested rights in it, far exceeding those of the 3 per cent. Posterity has claims upon it that no honest man can ignore. There is one State in America, and so far as I know only one, in which there is at this moment an old-time abundance of game and bird life. That is the State of Louisiana.

In Bulletin No. 21, Biological Survey, it is calculated that if in Virginia and North Carolina there are four bobwhites to every square mile and each bird consumes 1 ounce of seed per day the total destruction to weed seeds from September 1 to April 30 in those States alone would be 1,341 tons.

Over the world at large I think the active destroyers outnumber the active defenders of wild life at least in the ratio of 500 to 1, and the money available to destroyers is to the funds of the defenders as 500 to 1.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the problem of conservation is of as deep and far-reaching importance as any question that may present itself to the great American people. It is a problem that projects itself further into the future than most of the questions that agitate the official mind. This question of conservation is not merely a matter of future lumber supply, great and vitally serious as that is, but it is a matter that takes in the broad sweep of the great outdoors and the preservation of the basic natural wealth upon which the greatness and prosperity of America are founded.

Indeed, the question of conservation has in it even an appeal to the heart and soul of man, because God wove into the fabric of the forest a majestic loveliness and grandeur that are incomparable. No doubt there are men who can not think in terms of beauty, but there are vast numbers of people who see something more in conservation than the protection of the money wealth which comes from the things that God put here and which man has turned to his own advantage with a selfish and prodigal hand.

To express the thought of the nature-loving conservationist, I would like to repeat a moving story that I heard from the lips of one not long ago. His story was so full of romance and pathos and lofty sentiment that I want to give it to you as nearly as possible in his own words.

He said:

As I think back over the long struggle for conservation, in which I have played my little part, my memory stops abruptly as there flashes before my mind's eye a vision. It is a vision of a fateful day, not so many years ago, a day that will live with me always and serve as an inspiration for greater effort in this wonderful cause.

On that memorable day, to be exact, the 29th of October, in the year 1915, I found myself, while still merely a boy, kneeling by the side of a dying comrade in a little log hut some 200 miles from civilization on the south shore of the Hudson Bay country. As I knelt there by his side, gazing down through tear-dimmed eyes upon that poor body, racked as it was by scurvy, that dreadful disease feared throughout that entire north land, he opened his eyes and looked into mine.

Seeing my distress and apparently out of sheer consideration for my youth, he smiled, actually smiled, in his dying and suffering condition. Still smiling, he said in a hoarse broken whisper, "It is not time for grief, my boy. I am not going to die; and if I were, who could wish to die among more glorious surroundings or to the strains of more beautiful music?" I looked at him in amazement. I remember it as if it were yesterday. In a doubting voice I said to him, "Music, Mr. Black?" "Yes; music. Listen; don't you hear it?" And as I did so there came from without those dark and otherwise silent forests a wild, weird moaning of the wind through the fir tops. "That's music, Del," he continued, "the most glorious music in all this world. In future years I want you to remember this day. Remember it always, not in the spirit of sadness, not in the spirit of regret, but always in a spirit of deep love and admiration for trees."

It is impossible to overemphasize the importance of conservation in the matter of our future lumber supply, especially in view of the statement made by the United States Forest Service that we are using lumber four times as fast as we are growing it, and in view of the probability that the eastern half of the United States will be stripped bare of its timber, from a commercial standpoint, within the next 25 or 30 years, according to the present rate of consumption. When you add to this serious situation the estimate of the United States Forest Service that the tremendous supply in the Western States will probably be exhausted in 35 or 40 years and realize that America, the most richly blessed of any nation in the matter of forest wealth, has gone farther on the road of devastation than any nation in the history of the world and is approaching so rapidly to the exhaustion point, you may find ample cause for serious concern over the future of our lumber supply.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not my purpose to-day to discuss the question of lumber supply at great length. I want, so far as the power within me lies, to direct your attention to the broader phases of this question as they relate to the effects of forest devastation in other equally serious ways, perhaps more serious.

Let me call your attention to the fact that scientists have estimated that one average tree in a single growing season throws into the air through its leaves about 500 barrels of water by the process called transpiration.

Just as our breath is laden with moisture when it comes from our lungs, so there is breathed out through the leaves of trees great quantities of water in vapor form to remain in the air and be condensed and come back to the earth as rainfall, to be taken up again by the various forms of vegetation and again thrown out into the air in vapor form, to be condensed and come back once more as rainfall. And thus we see a very direct relation between the existence of trees and the rain that may come to bless the earth.

The moisture in the atmosphere comes from two sources, one from evaporation and the other from the leaves of vegetation. Naturally there is more evaporation from the ocean or large bodies of water along the coasts than there could possibly be inland, and yet even where there is the maximum amount from evaporation, that which is furnished through the leaves of vegetation is tremendously greater. It is obvious, therefore, that in all of the inland portions of the country the existence of vegetation and particularly trees is absolutely vital for the assurance of an adequate rainfall.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Certainly.

Mr. LOWREY. The gentleman made a most interesting statement; I wish him to repeat that statement concerning the amount of water given off by the leaves of large trees.

Mr. DAVEY. Scientists tell us that one tree during one growing season gives off through its leaves about 500 barrels of water.

Mr. LOWREY. That is very interesting and worth while, and I wanted to be sure to get it straight.

Mr. DAVEY. This problem of conservation is tied up inseparably with the question of water supply for all purposes. I am told that the city of Columbus, Ohio, several years ago came within three days of a water famine because the Scioto River, from which all the municipal water supply is secured, was almost dried up. The situation was so serious that the people held prayer meetings, calling upon the Almighty to save them from the threatened disaster. Whether these prayers were answered no one may know, but a providential rain did come in time to save a great city. Can you imagine anything more serious than a water famine affecting a community of several hundred thousand people? The very fact that they came so close to it is significant enough. Their difficulty lies in the fact that the forests have been cut away from the headwaters of the streams that make up the Scioto River, and so they have periods of floods and periods of comparative droughts. Many another city has been threatened in much the same way, and we shall see many repetitions of the same dangerous situation with greater frequency as the process of devastation goes on.

This matter of protecting the headwaters of the streams is of such vital importance that it can not be measured in words. It strikes at the very foundations of national life and prosperity. We can not ignore it without paying a price that is all too tragic to contemplate.

The erosion of soil is a tremendously serious problem that is inseparably interwoven with forest devastation. Some two years ago the Potomac River was on a rampage and a great flood was sweeping down past the city of Washington. As is always the case with floods the water was muddy, and I said to myself as I watched it, "What part of my country is making this terrible contribution of precious topsoil to the sea?" After the flood waters had subsided I went down to look at the results in Potomac Park, and there on the grass was an inch or two of soil—precious topsoil—deposited by the waters that had gone. It was only a tiny portion of the tremendous quantities that had been swept oceanward. Every great flood takes its tragic toll of the soil from the interior of America.

Is it possible that anyone would doubt the relation between forest devastation and floods? The more serious floods would not be possible if the forests remained to hold the water in check and let it seep out gradually as was intended by the laws of nature. A friend of mine told me of being on a fishing expedition up in the wilds of Canada where the profligate hand of man had not cut away the woods. He told me that it rained three days and three nights and that the water in the stream was raised only a little as a result. But more important than that, he told me that the water was scarcely discolored, which meant that the precious topsoil remained where it was intended to be.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DAVEY. Certainly.

Mr. COLE. The gentleman from Ohio has stressed the necessity of conservation. Everybody has been talking about it all over the country. Will not the gentleman give us a few ideas as to how to start on that?

Mr. DAVEY. How to start on conservation?

Mr. COLE. Yes. How can we restore these forests, and how can we increase them?

Mr. DAVEY. I will be glad to reply to my distinguished friend from Iowa. To do so I must be very frank and say that it was a tremendous disappointment to me that this House only two or three weeks ago, on the recommendation of its Committee on Agriculture, cut down the program of the original Woodruff-McNary bill from $40,000,000 in a 10-year period to only $4,000,000 in a 2-year period. We provided in the Clarke-McNary law two years ago a program of acquisition and of fire protection and forestry planting, and it was proposed in the original Woodruff-McNary bill to provide the funds by which that program could be carried out.

There are two phases to this question of conservation; in fact, you can not very well consider one without the other, if you are going to consider them properly. The first is conservation of the existing supply until we can grow more. As was ably brought out by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], it is not necessary to quit cutting timber, and so conservationist wants to stop proper and sensible timber cutting. You must prevent wasting it.

You must protect the half-grown and little trees so that they will grow into forest wealth to meet the future needs. The conservationist wants to keep out the fire which yearly takes a tragic toll. He wants also to make it a matter of legal requirement that the debris be cleaned up, that the branches and leaves and chips be taken away, so that the fire hazard may be greatly reduced. He insists that seed-bearing trees be left in their place so that nature itself can help take care of reforestation. In other words, the conservationist wants the forests of America to be treated as a crop, from which can be taken a regular annual yield, so that for all time the forests can provide for the needs of the American people, rather than to cut and slash everything and leave behind a worthless barren waste.

I am told that in the State of Michigan and in other States they are cutting everything, leaving the land bare, using the large trees for lumber and the small trees for wood alcohol and other by-products. It seems to me it is a crime against civilization, a crime against God Almighty, for any man to assume that because he has the ownership of a piece of forest land he can lay it waste and rob the people of America of their most priceless heritage.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not true that the States are just beginning to understand that they must adopt a different system of assessing and taxing forest land? In other words, whenever a tract of land is set aside for that purpose the individual is sure that for a certain number of years he will be assessed and taxed at a low rate for that purpose, and then, of course, when the trees are of such a size as to allow them to be used the assessment is raised and the tax is raised. Is not that a very important part of conservation in the States?

Mr. DAVEY. I think that is true.

Mr. LAZARO. Otherwise if you assess and tax too high, you make it so that the individual must cut all of his timber and use it.

Mr. DAVEY. Of course, I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana, that while I agree with him largely, yet I could not agree that it would ever be necessary to cut the land bare, even under the present conditions. But it seems to me the necessities would require that the States lift all taxes from the growing forest areas and assess all taxes on the lumber when it is cut. Probably they would get more revenue by that method than by the other way.

Mr. LAZARO. I will say to the gentleman that in my part of Louisiana they are encouraging the people to grow trees by assessing and taxing them low for a certain number of years, and then when the timber is ready to be used for commercial purposes, of course, the land is assessed and taxed at its full value.

Mr. DAVEY. That is fine.

Now, I would like to bring out one point that was given to me by my distinguished colleague from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] to this effect, that in his State there were originally about 17,000,000 acres of forest land; that about 13,000,000 acres of that has been laid bare by the wasteful processes of lumbering; that the present value of those 13,000,000 acres is so small that the tax return is almost negligible. In other words, from the standpoint of the taxable values the forests ought to be preserved, otherwise the States are robbing themselves of one of the great sources of revenue.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. It has occurred to me that the gentleman might say in that connection, the taxation question referred to, what the Federal Government should do in the revenue act by way of giving some depletion allowance, just as it does in connection with mining industries and so on. That was proposed, but I understand not fully accepted, this last year, and that is a vital problem for the Congress with regard to the taxation of timberland.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Does the gentleman remember, speaking about the value of land, in France near the Bordeaux section that was absolutely waste land and from which no tax return was received, and they planted trees in order to stop the shifting of the sand and to-day over 300,000 French people are living off of the naval stores derived from that land?

Mr. DAVEY. I did not know that and it is a very interesting point. I would like to emphasize in this connection, in further answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE], that the other important phase of the problem is reforestation. We have it on the authority of the United States Forest Service, as it was referred to by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], that there are 81,000,000 acres of land in this country so severely cut and burned as to become an unproductive waste. It is good for nothing else except growing trees; it is not good for agriculture; and while it was forest land, it has been burned over and over again until it is nothing but an unproductive waste.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. The gentleman is a past master of this subject and we are willing to be a school and let him teach us a little. The gentleman spoke about the leaves, the brush, the tops of trees, and so forth. In cutting down forests, where they cut for saw logs, there is an immense amount of the tree left, leaves and other waste matter. The gentleman hinted that something might be done about that. Is it the gentleman's idea that that should be burned or what should be done with it? Of course, that increases the fire danger if it is just left there. The gentleman started to say something about that but left it a while ago.

Mr. DAVEY. In that connection my thought is this: There are being devised now certain plans to make use of more of the lumber that has heretofore been thrown away, to utilize the small pieces. But in addition to that it seems to me perfectly obvious, in view of this tremendous danger from fire, that this waste material ought to be gathered up, under the force of legal requirement, and burned or disposed of otherwise, so as to remove the constant danger of uncontrolled fire.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. YATES. Just a question in regard to the depletion of the lumber supply. Could the gentleman make a statement with reference to the number of years in which there will be an entire exhaustion of the lumber supply?

Mr. DAVEY. As a result of studying the report of the United States Forest Service, which was issued in 1920, I made the statement that they predicted the eastern half of the United States will be stripped bare of its timber, from a commercial standpoint, within about 25 or 30 years, as we are now going, and that the seemingly inexhaustible supply in the far West will probably be exhausted in 35 or 40 years; 50 years at the outside.

Mr. YATES. That is a serious statement.

Mr. DAVEY. I know it is, and I was greatly impressed by it when I read it in the Government's document.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does that statement apply to pulp timber?

Mr. DAVEY. Presumably it applies to the whole supply, speaking broadly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the gentleman give us any information as to whether or not the manufacturers of pulp are devastating the forests to any degree?

Mr. DAVEY. Well, I could not undertake to answer that specifically except to say that my study of the question would indicate that is a part of the whole program of devastation which is now before us. Whether there is any cure for it I do not know, but this I do know: It is possible to grow trees for pulp wood in a tremendously shorter time than it is to grow trees for lumber; in other words, you can use smaller trees for pulp wood. I am told that one paper concern in Ohio 20 years ago planted some land for the purpose of growing pulp-wood trees and they are now beginning to gather the harvest from it.

There are miles and miles of desolate waste in the hilly portions of this country where the lands have been denuded. Where the forests exist, the rain comes down through the leaves and finds its way through the loose, porous soil into the subsoil, and it goes by underground channels to the springs, which feed the little streams, and they in turn feed the rivers. And thus is preserved the continuity of the water supply and the stream flow. And thus is also prevented the damaging floods. The great trees and other forms of vegetation that grow upon the hillsides act as nature's reservoir, and they are indispensable to America, wholly aside from the question of lumber.

It is said that it takes nature 10,000 years to make 1 inch of fertile top soil by the process of decaying vegetation. The millions and millions of acres of barren American hillsides, from which the precious topsoil has been swept away by the floods that have followed forest devastation, cry out as a constant warning against our national folly. If we continue on the present course of destruction the shame of the ages will be upon us who inherited a land more richly blessed in natural wealth than any people in the history of the world.

Where there is a desert there can be no trees, and where there are trees there can be no desert. There is a direct and vital relation between the great forest areas and the conditions which make a country livable.

America as a Nation is only 150 years old, and in that short time we have gone farther on the road of destruction and devastation and wastefulness and profligacy than any people that ever lived. In the last few years we have been reading about King Tut, who was supposed to have reigned in Egypt some 3,500 years ago. As we glance down through the long span of history intervening we see countless nations rise and fall. We see kingdoms and principalities and powers almost without number come and go, and it makes us wonder what may be the future of this, our America, only 150 years old. It makes us wonder especially when we realize how great a garden spot America was and how richly endowed with all the magnificent wealth that nature creates, the most favored land of which civilized man has any knowledge, and yet a land that has been despoiled and robbed and driven further on the road of devastation than any land heretofore known.

Now, I want to discuss one other phase of the great tree problem. While it does not come directly in line with the question of forest devastation, it is so closely akin to it that it seems to me quite proper. I want to refer to the terrible practice of butchering roadside trees on the part of the telephone and electric-light wiremen. [Applause.] I want to say in this connection that this practice is absolutely inexcusable. I have seen it everywhere. I have gone into the towns and cities and along the great highways of America, and have seen countless trees that have been absolutely ruined by the conscienceless linemen who represent the telephone and light companies.

Mr. MCSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. MCSWEENEY. Can not a proper trimming of the tree be done, so as to allow the wires to go through it without serious damage, and would not thoroughly trained and reliable tree men be able to do it?

Mr. DAVEY. I will be glad to answer that question. I would like to offer my own opinion that nearly every tree I have seen could be cleared for the wires without cutting any limbs much larger than your thumb. I have seen it done. I know it can be done. I know the telephone and electric-light wiremen cut from ten to fifty times as much out of the trees of America as they need to cut. The tragic part of it is they seem to go about it without any regard for the individual or the collective rights of the citizens.

Perhaps I may be pardoned for expressing the horror that I feel over this ruthless slaughter of millions of street and roadside trees by the telephone and electric-light linemen. I wonder sometimes whether men are entirely human who could continue to slaughter trees mercilessly and needlessly, as is done by the linemen in the employ of the telephone and electric-light companies all over the country. Not only is this true of countless beautiful trees in the towns and cities, but it is also true in a tragic sense along the highways.

Everywhere I go I see so many butchered and ruined trees that it gives me a sense of horror and shame and resentment. You can drive out in almost any direction from Washington and see so many roadside trees that have been needlessly slaughtered by the linemen that it makes you almost sick at heart.

The infamy of this practice is shown in the fact that it is the regular practice of telephone and electric-light linemen to cut out ten or twenty or fifty times as much as could be reasonably justified by the most liberal interpretation of necessity.

These linemen and at least their immediate superiors are guilty of an absolute disregard of the rights of the people and will stop at nothing to gain their terrible ends. They cut and slash their way through with an utter disregard of legal rights or moral responsibility. A lineman told me one time how they proceeded with the butchery of a magnificent maple tree in front of a farmer's house in Ohio. They waited until the farmer had gone to the other end of his fields and then the foreman told them to cut fast and cut plenty. Then the foreman went down the road so that he could not be located when the storm broke. The farmer came back, too late, because the damage was done. He was burning with rage and demanded the foreman, but the men did not know where the foreman had gone.

It is not alone the destruction of beauty that is involved in this terrible practice of butchering trees. Beheading a tree is the beginning of the end. It means premature death. It is never justifiable except where a tree is in advanced stages of decline, when it may be used with discretion to stimulate new growth temporarily.

When you cut the top out of a tree or cut off the end of a large limb you open up the cell structure to the certain inroads of fungous diseases. If you look at the cross section of a limb under a microscope, you will see that it somewhat resembles a sponge. The cells of a tree overlap each other and are hollow, with a tiny connection from one cell to another.

Various forms of fungous diseases live in decaying trees. In fact, that is what causes the decay. At certain times of the year they send out to the surface of the bark their fruiting bodies, which more or less resemble toadstools on the side of the trunk. Those fruiting bodies give off a myriad of microscopic spores or seeds which float through the air and most of which fall to the ground harmless. But some of those spores find lodgment in an open wound, and nothing could be more inviting than the top of a tree that has been beheaded. The spores of the fungi attach themselves to the open and exposed cell structure where the limb has been cut away, and they start to grow, sending out little threadlike tentacles called mycelium. It works somewhat like cancer, and the little threadlike mycelium travels from one cell to another, breaking them down and consuming them. They travel in all directions inside the stump of the limb or the trunk of the tree.

Fungus is a low form of vegetable life, a parasite by nature. It lives by tearing down some other form of life. There are various forms of fungus that attack trees, especially the cell structure in open wounds. They continue to travel from cell to cell until the whole inside of the tree is destroyed, and then the tree breaks to pieces from sheer weakness.

When a tree is beheaded or butchered, as is the common practice of telephone and electric-light linemen, that tree is ruined. Its open wounds are certain to be attacked by fungous disease, and the interior cell structure is certain to be destroyed by it. The result is what we call decay. The active cause is the fungous disease itself, and no butchered or beheaded tree ever escapes.

A Member of this House from the State of Florida told me of an experience that he had some two years ago that illustrates what is necessary sometimes to prevent the destruction of trees. I will relate the experience as nearly as I can in his own language. He said to me:

When our oldest son was born my mother suggested that we plant a magnolia tree. I was young and not altogether sympathetic with the idea, but she persisted, and she said that perhaps she might not live to see the tree in bloom, and perhaps I might not, but certainly the boy would, and then he would know that tree was planted for him. So, as a matter of consideration for her, we planted the magnolia. The first time it bloomed was when the boy was graduated from high school. The next time it bloomed was when his sister was graduated. Some years passed after that, and finally the boy went away to war, during which he contracted an incurable disease. He came home and lingered for a while and died. Last summer I heard that they were going to widen the street in front of my house, and I understood that they planned to cut that magnolia tree. So I went down to see the city engineer.

This Member of Congress from Florida is an old, white-haired gentleman, one of the most dignified, courtly men whom it has been my privilege to meet. I have never seen him excited nor have I ever seen him lose his poise, and yet he said to me—

I went down to see the city engineer, and I said to him, "Sir, I understand you are going to widen the street in front of my house," and he replied, "Yes; that is the plan." "Well, sir, I understand you plan to cut the magnolia tree in my front yard," and the city engineer answered, "Well, I am afraid we will have to." "Well, sir, I came to tell you that the man who cuts that tree I shall shoot him." "Do you mean it?" said the city engineer. "Yes, sir; I mean it! The man who cuts that tree, I shall shoot him and kill him." "Well," he said, "it won't be cut."

It is not my purpose to suggest that people take the law into their own hands, even though I realize that the temptation to do so is sometimes very strong. I know one determined man in a small community in Ohio who, single handed, defied the electric-light company and dared them to ruin the century-old trees in his community. That one determined man saved the trees that made the beauty of that little city. Unless the wire companies follow a more civilized course and stop this unpardonable and unnecessary practice of butchering America's trees, the only recourse is for organized society to provide adequate punishment for those who commit these acts against the collective and individual rights of the people.

Sometimes it seems to me that the wire companies are doing everything in their power to make America a treeless Nation as fast as their brutal hands will do it.

Think, friends, of that wonderful impulse which has prompted people to plant thousands upon thousands of memorial trees along the roadsides in honor of the war heroes! Think of those fine public-spirited citizens who plant other countless thousands of trees along the roads of America just for the sake of making our country more beautiful! And then think of those unselfish and far-seeing patriots of 50 or 100 years ago who planted trees by the roadsides of America to bless the generations that would follow them! What a horrible tragedy it is that this unselfish labor of love should be brought to naught by the army of telephone and electric-light linemen who everywhere challenge the rights and interests of organized society. When we consider the problem of conservation let us serve notice on these tree destroyers that we shall no longer tolerate their unpardonable crime against America.

There is one thing more I want to say in closing. We do not own America. We have this great land only on a life lease, even though the property stands in our names at the courthouses all over America. We have it only so long as the breath of life is in us, and then, according to the laws of nature, we must pass it on to another generation. This great land, the most favored in the history of the world, the most richly blessed in the matter of natural resources which we have spent with a lavish prodigal hand, this land that came to us with all its manifold and magnificent blessings, brought to us also a great and solemn and everlasting responsibility, to keep this our America as great and as wonderful and as worth while as it was when we received it. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KIEFNER]. [Applause.]

Mr. KIEFNER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it will be observed that President Coolidge in his proclamation, just read by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY], while giving full weight to the evils resulting from impoverished forests and idle lands, laid stress upon the increased attention being given to scientific forestry in industrial practice and land usage. "Too long," said the President, "have we as a Nation consumed our forest wealth without adequate provision for its wise utilization and renewal, but a gratifying change is taking place in the attitude of our American people toward our forests." In other words, we are commencing to appreciate in slight degree, at least, that conservation of our forests and reforestation is a great national question and with that thought in mind, to emphasize and broaden it, as well as to review what is being done to solve the question, American forestry week has been proclaimed by the President, and for the same purpose three hours of debate in this House are dedicated to-day.

Engaged personally in the distribution and sale of lumber and timber products for many years, the conclusion has long since been forced upon me that the question involving our rapidly vanishing timber supply constitutes a national problem that sooner or later the American people will have to face and solve or suffer dire consequences.

To-day in my limited time I intend to discuss the problem in what might be considered a business-like way. I intend to treat the subject as a business man would treat an account on his ledger, examining in detail the debits, credits, and the balance that remains. In order to do that it will be necessary to recite somewhat the history of our forests, a history both short and sad. For the facts and figures I shall use in this discussion I am indebted to Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree Association; Col. George P. Ahearn, of the Tropical Plant Research Foundation; and A. L. Hager, nationally known lumberman, of Lansing, Mich. Mr. Hager is also an officer in the lumbermen's fraternal organization, known as Hoo-Hoo, to which almost all prominent lumbermen in the country belong and whose activities are directed toward the restoration of our forests.

When our forefathers from Europe landed in America, bringing with them civilization, practically one-half of the land area of our country, or about 820,000,000 acres, was covered with virgin timber scattered fairly well over what is now the United States of America. This virgin timber is the chief item to be found on the credit side of our forestry account. For more than 200 years following the first settlement in America but little of this virgin-timber account was depleted. During that time the demand for timber supplies was limited, the cut being not much in excess of the growth of new timber. In addition to small consumption, conservation, even at that early date, also played a part in maintaining equality between supply and demand. It is of interest to-day to know that the first settlers in America were the original conservationists, having issued a decree to conserve timber as early as 1626, more than 300 years ago. The Massachusetts Historical Society recently caused to be published that decree in the quaint wording and spelling contained in the original, which reads as follows:

It was decided by the court, held on the 29th of March Anno Do 1626 That for the preventing of which inconveniences, as doe, and may befall the plantation by the want of timber, That no man of what condition so ever sell or transport any manner of works or frames for houses, planks, boards, shipping shalops, boats, canoes, or whatsoever may tende to the destruction of timber aforesaid; how little so ever the quantie be, without the consent, approbation & liking of the governor and counsell.

About the year 1850 the forests of the Nation commenced to decline. In that year the State of New York ranked first as a lumber-producing State. To-day it manufactures less than 30 feet per capita, while its requirements of lumber per capita amount to 300 feet.

In 1860 Pennsylvania took first place in lumber production; at the present time it does not produce lumber enough to supply the needs of one of its great city districts.

My own State, Missouri, 50 years ago ranked amongst the first in timber production, while to-day it ranks twenty-fifth.

The Lake States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan were the greatest producers of lumber in 1890, cutting about 9,000,000,000 feet, most of which was white pine, the best wood for all-round purposes ever grown. In 1892 Michigan produced 4,000,000,000 feet alone and ranked first among the lumber-producing States of the Union. In 1920 the State produced about 700,000,000 feet and ranked sixteenth in lumber production. It is stated on good authority that Michigan now imports approximately 80 per cent of her wood supply, paying a premium of $20,000,000 per year in freight.

The present forest area in the United States is 469,000,000 acres, or about one-half of what it was in the beginning. If this amount were all virgin timber, there would be no great cause for immediate alarm, but the sad fact is that only 138,000,000 acres of that amount represents virgin forests, and they are disappearing at the rate of 5,000,000 acres annually, the remainder of the 469,000,000 acres being cut-over land partially covered with growing timber. Seventy-five per cent of the remaining virgin forests in this country to-day is located in the Pacific Northwest, while the bulk of our population and the most of our industries are in the East, North, and Middle West.

The retail price of lumber has increased three times as fast as the average price of other staples in the last 75 years, because the source of production and the place of consumption are continually becoming farther apart. The average haul per car of lumber in 1924 was 658 miles. It is fair to assume that prices of lumber will continue to rise in future for the same reason as in the past unless the supply becomes greater. The virgin pine forests of the South Atlantic and Gulf States have shrunk from 650,000,000,000 to 100,000,000,000 feet; yellow-pine production is falling off rapidly, 20 mills of major capacity having cut out and closed down in the year 1925. These mills were producing daily 2,700,000 feet. At the present time only 20 States in the United States cut as much timber as is used within the State. The Southern Pine Association in its estimate for 1919 makes a statement that 99 per cent of the southern pine supply will be cut out in 15 years. If that estimate proves true, the year 1934 will see the finish of southern pine.

An economist in the United States Forest Service estimates that we had in 1920 hardwood supplies to last 30 to 45 years, but that old-growth hardwood would be gone in 1945, and that ash, yellow poplar, black walnut, red gum, hickory, and chestnut would not last that long. It takes on an average 30 to 60 years to grow softwood timber and from 100 to 150 years to grow hardwood.

Very often the remark is heard that substitutes for lumber are being used, such as steel and cement; therefore, why worry about timber supply? Substitutes are used to a certain extent, but in spite of them the need of lumber is greater now than at any time. In 1850, when our population was 40,000,000 people, the per capita use for lumber was 150 feet. In 1925, with a population of 110,000,000, the per capita use is 300 feet. Lumber is being put to new uses constantly as new industries spring up. There are now 1,500 uses for lumber, requiring about 23,000,000,000 cubic feet each year. This means that 250,000,000 trees of average size are cut down annually. The railroads use 130,000,000 new wood ties each year. Ties used by the Missouri Pacific Railroad system for renewal purposes in 14 years amounted to 57,000,000. They contained enough timber, had it been cut into lumber, to have constructed 150,000 frame residences of six rooms each. These houses would comfortably contain 800,000 people, about the number now living in St. Louis. Props used in the mining industry in the United States call on the forests for 260,000,000 cubic feet annually. To get coal we must have wood. Careful estimates place the consumption of wood pencils each year at 1,000,000,000. The automobile industry is comparatively new, yet in 1923, 800,000,000 feet of lumber was used in the construction of bodies alone. Newsprint is a forest product, being made from wood. It requires 16 acres of spruce trees to make the print for one Sunday edition of a metropolitan newspaper. Six or seven billion cubic feet of timber is required each year in the construction of homes in America. The normal annual increase in dwellings in the United States amounts to 400,000. At the beginning of 1925 this country was faced with a shortage of homes amounting to one-half million.

The items I have mentioned thus far are a few among those found on the debit side of the forest account. Now, let me turn to analyze briefly the credit side with a view toward striking a balance. We are reforesting in this country to-day at a rate of 35,000 acres annually. Economists claim we have 460,000,000 acres in the United States not needed for agricultural purposes, and that 181,000,000 acres of that amount is fit only for timber crops. This area would and could produce timber sufficient to guarantee future generations a future timber supply. Some of the States in the last few years have commenced reforestation in earnest. Michigan in the last five years has planted about 15,000 acres. Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kansas, and numerous other States have fallen into line. Great lumber corporations owning vast tracts of timberland have awakened to the fact that they owe a duty to posterity, and in compliance with that duty are commencing to take up the practice of tree planting on their lands, and appear to be well satisfied with the progress thus far made. At a recent meeting of the Southern Pine Association, at New Orleans, an association composed of many manufacturers of pine lumber in the South, they tried to make plain they would never permit the supply of timber to disappear.

Reforestation is no longer a beautiful dream—

Said John E. Kaul, a prominent member of the association.

It is on the high road to becoming an accomplished fact. There will always be a good supply of southern-pine lumber available—

Said he—because the development of reforestation will assure dealers and consumers the supply is not to be exhausted.

Other members of the association in addition to Mr. Kaul were determined on a reforestation policy, but asserted fire protection must be provided by the States and an equitable system of taxing cut-over lands provided.

The great lumber corporations of California and the Pacific Northwest are also committed to the policy of reforestation. In California it is already asserted that redwood timber will never become exhausted by reason of the adoption of that policy. In summing up, examination of both sides of the account seems to show a balance to the credit of our forests amounting to 138,000,000 acres of virgin timber, which is estimated to last for a period of 35 years at the rate at which it is now being cut, and in addition to that item random efforts are being made at reforestation on the part of State and National Governments as well as private individuals.

Thirty-five years is a short time in which to grow new forests with which to supply the demand for wood products of the generation to follow when we are gone. What will remedy the situation, you properly may ask, and I reply that not only must we conserve our virgin forest supply with a view toward making it last longer but we must engage in reforestation in greatly expanded projects undertaken by both Federal and State Governments. We must uphold the hands of the Government Forest Service, whose work is wonderful. Congress should pass the pending McNary-Woodruff bill which, if I understand it, will permit the National Government to greatly extend its purchases of land fit for reforestation. Secretary Jardine, a few days ago in a speech at Atlantic City, advocated its passage, and in the course of that speech took occasion to state also that the time had come for the States of the Union to join in the reforestation campaign. He said that the National Government has so far bought 2,890,000 acres of forest land, and should continue to buy much more. He also argued that large areas of cut-over lands are reverting to many States for delinquent taxes, and aside from that fact cut-over lands in many States could be bought very cheaply, and now was the time for States to act.

Waste must be eliminated in all possible ways. Forest fires must be reduced to the minimum, as they are the chief item of waste. In the year 1924, 92,000 forest fires occurred in the United States, at the rate of 250 each day. A large percentage of these were caused by carelessness of tourists and campers, which could have been avoided. Millions of dollars of annual loss is sustained from fires in cities and elsewhere. Wood to replace this loss in rebuilding operations constitutes a heavy demand upon our forest reserves. Fire preventions in cities and towns should become a burning question indeed. Waste in felling timber should be avoided. The use of short lengths should be encouraged. Standardization in the manufacture of wood products should become the rule. The exportation of lumber to foreign countries should be discouraged, while importation should be expanded. There are even those who think that Sunday newspapers might be cut down in size to 8 acres instead of 16.

The problem of perpetuating our timber supply is national, affecting all classes of our citizens. There is no substitute for wood. Nothing can take its place entirely. In the United States it is the poor man's building material. On the farm it is used almost exclusively for building operations. Anything affecting its price, causing it to become more costly, works a hardship upon the poor man, and particularly upon the American farmer, who already has sufficient burdens to bear.

I have the honor to represent a mid-western district in Missouri, where farming is one of the chief industries, and I know their condition is not what it should be. They are in debt and struggling to make both ends meet. I might say in passing that they are anxiously looking to this Congress for some consideration of their problems and for help in solving them.

I am one Congressman who is anxiously waiting an opportunity to vote for some honest-to-goodness relief legislation for the farmer, whether it is the Dickinson idea or the Haugen idea or the Tinscher plan. I feel certain that opportunity will soon be given and that this Congress will pass actual relief measures for the farmers before adjournment.

In conclusion, I submit the high price of lumber is an important factor in the present high cost of living which may eventually result in the National Government being compelled to take over our forests as foreign nations long since have done. Equitable taxation on cut-over and waste lands where reforestation is possible is also inevitable if private individuals are to restore our forests. Practical men will not invest money in growing trees until the investment is comparatively safe.

I furthermore submit the questions of conservation of our forest supply of timber and the reforestation of our forests are problems of vital concern and should be heeded by this Congress if possible and certainly by its successors, or else we should as public officials cause to be hung upon our breasts the placard "Please help the blind." [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I can not allow this occasion to pass without saying something about what the great State of Louisiana, which in part I have the honor to represent, is doing in conservation and reforestation work. We have a law in Louisiana which requires the timberman to leave one or more seed trees to the acre. Now, the result of that is that the cut-over lands are being reforested through natural process. As the big trees are cut away the little trees spring up and cover the ground. Thus it becomes a game of the survival of the fittest; they come up so thick that the weaker trees are usually smothered and the more vigorous trees hold their places, reaching up into the sun and developing into large trees. Leaving seed trees is considered a very important thing in the natural reforestation of cut-over land.

Another thing we do to encourage reforestation is to permit a low fixed assessment value during the period of timber growth. These are some of the things that the State of Louisiana does.

I want to state particularly what one lumber company in my district, the Great Southern Lumber Co. at Bogalusa, La., is doing under the able management of Col. W. H. Sullivan. It owns and operates the biggest sawmill in the world.

A few years ago when this company first began operations in that section they cut the pine lands clean. They never left a trace of a tree, with the result that no little pine trees came up after the big trees were cut away. Now, the company realizing the importance of growing trees on this land have started within the last few years a pine nursery to reforest these lands; they plant the seeds, and then after the seeds sprout and grow into little saplings they plant the trees or set them out. Last year they set out 7,000,000 of those trees. They are reforesting 76,000 acres of cut-over pine land at a cost of $4 an acre.

They are doing this because they realize that it is a good, sound business investment, and they expect to reforest the whole 76,000 acres. This great company cuts a million feet of timber a day; they cut on an average of 300 acres a day, or about a thousand acres a week. Imagine cutting over 1,000 acres of land every week in the year!

In the South the growth of timber is possibly more rapid than in any other section of the United States. An average acre of land will grow from 250 to 600 feet of pine timber a year. At the present price of pine timber that growth would be worth on an average of $4 an acre. These cut-over lands can be bought for an average of $5 an acre. Four per cent on that amount would be 20 cents; the taxes would be about 3 per cent, or 15 cents; the cost of supervising and keeping fires out of the land would be about 25 cents. These are not my figures but the figures of experts. So at a carrying cost of about 60 cents per acre a year this land could be reforested and produce a growth worth $4 a year.

Now, why does not everybody go into the reforestation business? The answer is simply that a man does not live long enough. Few are able or provident enough to spend the money necessary to buy land, to pay the taxes, and give the needed supervision in order to reap the harvest 50 years hence. The result is that few individuals and corporations engage in the work of reforestation. Growing timber would prove a profitable business to the United States Government and should be immediately undertaken upon an extensive scale. The question might suggest itself, Why do not the Southern States, where we have the ideal lands, where the timber growth is the fastest—why do not the States grow timber? The answer is that they have not the equipment, they have not the money, they need the land for revenue purposes.

These pine lands will produce a growth in 15 years of the high commercial value as paper wood. The great Southern Lumber Co. has in operation now in my district two very large paper mills, and they are buying these cut-over lands. They expect to utilize 250,000 acres of those lands for the purpose of growing pulp wood for these great paper mills. Now, it does seem to me that the matter of reforestation ought to appeal to the Federal Government. It is something that concerns every man, woman, and child in the United States. A hundred years ago we had a handful of people and a continent covered with timber. To-day we have a handful of timber and a continent covered with people, and the demand for timber for lumber and wood consumption to-day is greater than it has ever been in the history of the country.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEMP. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The gentleman is very familiar with this matter of timber and forestation, and I wondered if he had anything in his remarks in reference to the change in climate which has transpired since the broad belt of forests along the northern border of the United States has been so largely destroyed. It is my understanding that in such places as New York State and various other States there has been a great change.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. KEMP. I can only say this, in answer to the question: I understand from the Weather Bureau that there has been no change in climatic or weather conditions since the keeping of records. Weather goes in circles, but fundamentally it is about the same.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Maryland that some years ago I came from Panama with Colonel Sibert, who was assistant to General Goethals in the construction of the Panama Canal, and Colonel Sibert told me it was a popular fallacy to believe that forests produced rainfall; that forests were the effect and not the cause of rainfall, and that long before forests or vegetation there necessarily was the precipitation called rain. I must confess it was somewhat startling to me because, as a result of many declarations similar to the one made to me by Colonel Sibert as well as the number of articles in magazines and newspapers which conveyed to me according to Colonel Sibert misinformation, I had come to the well-fixed conclusion that forests tended greatly to produce rainfall. It was with considerable difficulty that I made the attempt to readjust myself to the information tendered to me by Colonel Sibert, who is a great engineer and a gallant gentleman, and who apparently is well intrenched with information on the subject that he discussed with me. I have not thoroughly abandoned even yet, however, the idea that forests had something to do with rainfall, as evidenced by the fact that I quickly responded to the statement made by the gentleman from Maryland and hope that my statement will contribute a little to the very fine address being made by my colleague from Louisiana.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I must take exception to what the gentleman stated in view of the statement of scientists, that every tree throws into the air every year about 500 barrels of water in vapor form and it remains there to be condensed and come back as rain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DAVEY. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. KEMP. I hope the gentleman will appreciate the fact that the last three minutes were not consumed by myself. I want to say just this. We are told by these scientific forestry experts that lands that formerly produced in a state of nature from eight to ten to fifteen thousand feet of lumber by the acre can be made to produce very easily 30,000 to 40,000 feet to the acre. That is true in the southern part of the United States and especially in Louisiana. At a very small expense we can restore our forests. There are 100,000,000 acres of land in the South to-day that do not need 15 cents worth of attention an acre a year to grow on it the finest forests in the world, even better than before, if we can but keep out fires. Fire prevention is a question of education. The public should be made to realize that every careless or intentional forest fire reflects an individual loss and works an injury to unborn millions. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BEGG). The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, while some of the finest hardwoods in the world are grown in the district I have the honor to represent, I prefer, in the short time allotted me by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] to speak not so much of the commercial side of forestry as of the influence of trees and of their friendliness.

First, a word as to the trees here in our Nation's Capital City. Who can think of Washington, the city beautiful, without trees, shrubs, and flowers? Not only are there thousands of trees of rare beauty, but among these are many rich in history and associations. The elm under which Washington is said frequently to have sat while watching the work on the Capitol still stands. Special care has been given to this tree, as to the Cameron elm on the other side of the grounds and believed to be between 110 and 115 years old. These trees are but two of the 835 found on the Capitol Grounds, the wooded park as it is to-day having had its beginning in a $30,000 appropriation made in 1853, following a fight by John C. Calhoun.

As new trees are planted on the Capitol Grounds to replace losses which necessarily occur despite the greatest care, Members of Congress stand as sponsors. For instance, we have the shellbark hickory of Thomas Marshall, the purple beech of James Sherman, the red oak of Representative Mann, and the sugar maple of Champ Clark. I can readily understand why Speaker Clark should have chosen the sugar maple, than which no more beautiful tree grows in Missouri. There it is found in abundance. This tree, supplying sweet sap for sirup and sugar in the early spring and dense shade in the heat of summer, becomes in the autumn season a magnificent bouquet of red and gold.

Just west of the National Capitol is the Botanic Garden, in which are many historic trees, these including the European hornbeam, planted by Lincoln; the cedars of Lebanon, by Senators Hoar and Everts; the slender bald cypresses, known as the actors' trees because they were planted by Forrest and Booth; and an oak which tradition tells sprang from an acorn dropped from a tree which shades the tomb of Confucius in Shantung, the acorn having been brought over by Dana, the editor. Mention should also be made of the Peace Tree, which, after it had attained full size, was successfully moved in order to make room for the Grant Memorial, $5,000 being paid when the tree was transplanted and continued to grow in another part of the garden.

Just here I would digress to suggest that it is a pity some of the Washington real estate dealers seem not to appreciate the beauty or value of trees, but continue needlessly to destroy the magnificent natural growths. With powerful machinery they tear out the trees and level the denuded hillsides, making ugly the places where for centuries nature had been building for beauty.

Missouri, my own State, is rich in the glory of her trees. Few farmsteads are there, even in the prairie places, without groves of trees. Early settlements were generally made in timber, sections, but even there such trees as the locust, with its rapid growth and in the springtime its beautiful and sweet-scented blossoms, were planted locust groves here and there now marking the spots near where pioneer homes once stood.

In short it might be said that the early expressed love of trees on the part of our people has but grown stronger as the generations have passed. This love finds expression in the trees carefully preserved in woodland pastures, where grows the world's best bluegrass; in groves about our rural homes, churches, and schoolhouses, and in the abundance of shade and ornamental trees along village, town, and city streets.

Trees, some of which may have served as landmarks or guideposts, have given names to towns, such as Pilot Grove or Lone Elm. In Missouri, too, where many farms are named, we find registered such names as "Ravenswood," "Eastwood," "Cedar Lawn," and "Locust Grove."

Not only are individuals becoming more interested in the conservation of forests and in the preservation of valuable trees, but patriotic and civic organizations everywhere are aiding, frequently planting trees in the names of individuals or associations. For instance, the Columbia (Mo.) Kiwanis Club, of which I am a member, some two years ago took over the beautification of the county hospital grounds, each member planting a tree and the club as a whole supplying flowers and shrubs.

All of us, and children especially, absorb environment. Fortunate the child that has tree friends—trees under which to play, trees to be climbed, and, perchance, trees from which bark whistles may be made. Happy the man whose memory is of trees of his childhood days when "stick horses" and homemade popguns were not unknown and when the gathering of fruit and nuts afforded wholesome fun. Most fortunate of all he who in age is permitted to see others enjoy the trees which in youth he planted. No more unselfish service is there than that represented in the planting of a tree which, as the years go, can not bear fruit or come into its best while the planter lives. Thus are good deeds done.

How useful are trees! When a tree which long has afforded shade in summer and stood as a protection against the storms of winter is cut down it still serves, perhaps as lumber to go into the building of a home or to afford warmth for the family.

But best of all is the friendship of trees. All of us can recall trees which were more than living things of roots and body, leaf and bark, but which seemed almost to have souls; and, I might add, sympathy and understanding. On the old home farm when I was a boy there were acres of beautiful trees, and many of these remain. One, though, that I loved best—maybe because it stood apart and alone—is gone, broken before the storms of years, and to-day there is a "lonesome place against the sky." It went nature's way, sharing a fate finer by far than that which befalls so many great trees needlessly destroyed by man. In our yard to-day stand beautiful trees. One of these, a great towering elm with wide-spreading branches, in which birds build their nests and squirrels make their homes, I like to think of it as my wireless tower. It receives the call of countless feathered friends as they pause on their long flights north or south, "chatting" and "broadcasting" songs while they stay. And how much more beautiful is this stately elm, which in cooperation with sun and moon weaves delicate and intricate shade patterns, than is any skeletonlike tower of steel! Fancy? Yes; but has the world no need for fairies and fancies such as played in trees and groves of old? Even now, sympathy and understanding as reflected in love of leaf and treasure of tree disclose in forest depths, and even in lone trees, naiads, nymphs, and queens unknown to the peoples whose lives are cast in treeless places. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not think there is any subject that is more vital to the general welfare of this Nation than the subject of the proper treatment of trees.

I want to speak very briefly on three aspects of that question. First, the general industrial value and utility of trees; second, let me say, the beautifying and cultural influence of trees, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON] has just spoken so ably and eloquently; and third, the effect of trees on the climate of this country. [Applause.]

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of the general subject of forestry. This is a subject that we too little consider in this Nation. We started out with such huge, comparatively inexhaustible forests that we have not yet come to the time when we seriously realize the need of conservation of forests which is so vital to us in every way.

I recollect very well in the summer of 1911, when, as a major in the National Guard, I was an observer on the part of the United States for the Eleventh German Army Corps maneuvers. These maneuvers took place in the Harz Mountain regions, and I recollect very well the impression made upon me by the village forests and by the forests maintained by the various principalities and duchies. I recollect especially the splendid forest in the Principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, where in the little "tree schools" (Baumenschulen) the trees were grown from the seeds to replace the annual cutting which yielded a regular income to Prince Günther. I recollect also with great interest my first experience with the German municipal forests, which furnished wood for fuel and building purposes precisely as we raise corn and potatoes.

In France during the recent war I had occasion to note the different types of French forests, communal and otherwise. For all sorts of reasons we should encourage forestation in this country.

First. There is the great industrial value in utility of our forests. At the present time the great lumber companies, such as the Weyerhaeuser interests, are cutting and replanting their forests in the most scientific manner with a view to forest conservation. We should greatly increase this sort of forest work throughout the country. The American Forestry Association is doing splendid work along these lines.

Second. When we consider the cultural influence of forests, I am particularly interested in the project for a national forest in Prince Georges and Ann Arundel Counties, connecting with the park system of Washington, and ultimately being hooked up with an extension of the parkways of Baltimore. This project has the unqualified indorsement of all the great technical societies, such as the American Institute of Architects, the American Federation of Art, the American Civic Association, and the American Society of Landscape Architects.

The presence of Camp Meade, which is now definitely to be retained as a mobilization center of the Third Corps Area, makes possible the development of a national forest between Baltimore and Washington. There is contained either on the Camp Meade reservation or near by part of an old grant known as Ridgely's Forest, which was located in the vicinity of what is now Savage and which happened to have been patented to one of my forebears, Col. Henry Ridgely, of Prince Georges County, a member of the governor's council, in the days when we did not have to be so careful about the conservation of forests, because we had not yet cut into the supply which nature had so lavishly poured upon us.

In reference to the project of a National Capital forest, Mr. William L. Ellcott, the distinguished Baltimore architect, has made the following observation:

The use of forests by the people becomes a habit which insures to the benefit of the whole population, adding to its vigor and zest of life.

Agricultural expansion in America has left certain areas unconquered because of their unfitness for cultivation, and in some of these rests the hope of future generations. One of these tracts, though sadly mutilated, has remained to our day a vast forest useful for no other purpose. Providentially also, it exists in a place which above all others should recommend it for protection and improvement to the people of the United States. It forms the background of the National Capital, beginning at the bounding line of the District of Columbia at Bladensburg and extending northeast nearly 20 miles until it crosses the Patuxent River, a tract of 41,000 acres, while separated from it by a narrow strip between Washington and Laurel there is another body of 16,000 acres. Beyond the Patuxent it swings eastward, touching the Severn and South Rivers and reaching the outskirts of Annapolis, the seat of the United States Naval Academy, and thereby adds another area of 43,000 acres.

Another forest district of vital importance to the Nation's Capital, containing some grand scenery which, though separated from the main bodies by the breadth of Montgomery County, should be included in the purchase, borders the banks of the Potomac River from the District line to a point beyond the Great Falls, an area of 10,000 acres. Conditions here are distressing in the extreme, as no effort has so far been made to care for it, and year by year injury to the landscape is done. Surely devotion to the public welfare should prompt Congress to protect this great possession.

The value of the lands in question is comparatively small, but as the pressure of population increases this will not continue, and it is not wise to defer provision for its purchase. Altogether these areas cover 110,000 acres. The Forest Service should ascertain the merits of the various districts for forest purposes and study the replanting of certain parts, and a commission should plan for the maximum of beauty and utility, which are lost for want of skillful and intelligent handling.

Watercourses should be improved, and artificial lakes could be made as beautiful as natural ones, and the attraction of the woods may be enhanced by the erection of suitable buildings properly located. A structure of the character of a small chateau to serve the traveling public as an inn or automobile club would not be out of keeping.

The matter of a great national forest between Baltimore and Washington was given careful consideration by the State forester of Maryland, Mr. F. W. Besley. After a careful study of the surveys, maps, and data in the Maryland forestry department, Mr. Besley reported as follows:

The area proposed for a national forest represents some of the oldest settled lands of the country. Since its occupation 250 years ago many changes have taken place. A considerable portion of the land under cultivation prior to the Civil War has since grown up in forest, not alone because of the scarcity of labor necessary for its continued cultivation but because much of it was found better suited to the growing of timber than for agricultural crops. These young forests of hardwood and pine, coming as a second growth, have attained considerable importance, and by proper management they can be molded into forests of great value. There are still to be found in small tracts some of the virgin forests, showing the magnificence of the original growth and further illustrating future forest possibilities. For the botanist and dendrologist this is one of the most interesting regions of the eastern United States. Here on the border of two great geographical divisions, the coastal plain and the Piedmont plateau the flora of the North mixes with that of the South and gives a variety of species difficult to find in any other area of equal size. As a natural arboretum this region is unsurpassed. There are over 65 tree species alone, to say nothing of a large number of arborescent shrubs. Most of the valuable commercial species of the entire eastern United States are represented here. The great diversity of soils and forest types offers exceptional advantages as a demonstration field for applied forestry.

A forest survey of the Maryland counties, partly included in the proposed national forest, was made by the writer in 1907-1910, and furnishes the forest data upon which this report and the accompanying map is based. In establishing a national forest such as is proposed it is very desirable to include as far as possible lands that are now largely wooded. The large wooded areas lying between Washington, Baltimore, and Annapolis afford a rare opportunity for carrying out such a plan. The area shown on the map, lying between Washington and the Patuxent River, to the west of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, covers approximately 18,000 acres, of which about 8,300 acres, or 50 per cent, is now wooded. For the purpose of the forest description any given area is considered wooded where there is a tree growth on the land at least 10 feet high and where the trees are close enough together to form a stand. The main body of forest lying east of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, including spurs extending along South River and the Severn River, covers approximately 84,000 acres, of which 50,200 acres, or 60 per cent, is wooded. The portion south of the Patuxent River is more largely wooded than the rest, amounting to 70 per cent. The portion to the northeast is 50 per cent wooded.

The effect of forests on the climate of this country is not adequately studied. I called this matter up a few moments ago in the questions which I asked during the course of discussion here on the floor of the House. I recall with much interest certain things that Mr. Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, told me last summer about the change in climate which has occurred in Fulton County, N. Y., in the past 40 years because of the destruction of the protective belt of forests on the northern borders of the United States, which kept out the cold winds from the extreme North.

Mr. Chambers, who is a keen observer of both flora and fauna, described to me the destruction of certain plants in the last years by winters which had become considerably colder than formerly. He also described to me the presence of certain birds in Fulton County which were formerly found only in the very cold far North. I myself at one time made a careful study of the subject of forestry in reference to water supply, and that particular phase of forestry is one of great importance to every resident of the United States. I think we do well to give most serious consideration to the question of forestation and to the whole question of conservation of forests.

While we are considering the conservation of forests I think it is a very appropriate occasion for me to call to your attention certain statistics in reference to the conservation of the future citizens of this Nation. In our country the family is the unit of civilization. Everything which affects adversely the family life means ultimately deterioration in the moral and physical fiber of the Nation. Everything that helps to keep together the family life with its old traditions of religious training and discipline operates as one of the most important sorts of American conservation. The increase of divorces in this Nation and the decrease of marriages in this Nation are a menace to family life. I am glad to say that the Department of Commerce has just announced that, according to the reports received in Maryland during the year 1925, there was an increase in marriage and a decrease in divorce. The figures given by the Department of Commerce are as follows:

There were 25,447 marriages performed in Maryland during the year 1925 as compared with 25,342 in 1924, representing an increase of 105, or 0.4 per cent. This increase, however, is slightly less than the estimated increase in the population.

During the year 1925 there were 1,614 divorces granted in the State, as compared with 1,664 in 1924, representing a decrease of 50, or 3 per cent.

The estimated population of the State of Maryland on July 1, 1925, was 1,500,230, and on July 1, 1924, 1,540,961. On the basis of these estimates the number of marriages per 1,000 of the population was 16.3 in 1925, as against 16.4 in 1924; and the number of divorces per 1,000 of the population was 1.03 in 1925, as against 1.08 in 1924.

The number of marriages performed and the number of divorces granted were furnished by the State department of health. The figures are preliminary and subject to correction:

American families are like the American forests. The strength of this Nation comes from the strength of its family life, just as the Nation depends on its forests and streams for beauty, protection, and general welfare.

We need conservation of forests and also conservation of those ideals of home and family and liberty that were the foundation of the life of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is good reason for us to pause during the sixth observance of American Forest Week, as proclaimed by the President of the United States, and to take stock of our forest situation. Three hundred years of growth and development in this country has seen a prodigal use and destruction of natural resources which should temper the conceit of every good American and set him to thinking soberly of the need for restoring and maintaining our natural wealth.

Probably no resource has contributed to our development in a greater variety of ways than the forests of the country. The United States has been blessed with the finest and most easily exploited forests of any country in the world, and when it comes to the question of timber consumption alone we have made unlimited use of this blessing. We are still the hungriest timber consumers in the world. We have come to demand 50 per cent of all the saw logs cut each year in the entire world. We consume 55 per cent of all the paper made in the world. We are a people dependent upon the products of the forest, and we shall not easily change our habits.

No one regrets the early destruction of forests to make way for productive farm lands and for the building of cities. The wilderness which met the colonists at Jamestown and along the New England coast was naturally looked upon as a thing to be cleared away. Great forests, as the gentleman of Connecticut has said, harbored wild beasts and wilder men, covered lands needed for food crops, and seemed to stand in the way of all development. It is probable that the destructive American practice of mining forests rather than cropping them has grown out of these early struggles.

But by whatever course we have come, we are beginning to feel the pinch of timber shortage. Fir from the Pacific coast is sold in New England, where native white pine and spruce should be filling local demand. Yellow pine from the Gulf coast is competing with far-western woods in building on Iowa farms. Canadian spruce feeds many of our paper mills, and our annual lumber bill contains an item of $3,400,000,000 for freight—an average of $11 for every thousand feet marketed.

This does not include reshipments or imports. It is a direct tax on the people of the Nation and is due in large measure to forest depletion. It represents twenty times the amount spent annually by all agencies, public and private, on forest replacement. Meanwhile, 80,000,000 acres of land of little use except for the growing of forests, lie idle—most of it east of the Great Plains.

We come to American forest week in 1926 with a record of 50,000 forest fires a year, on the average, most of which are set by careless citizens. The news of the last few days carries word of destructive fires in the forests of Massachusetts, Maryland, Montana, and other States. Insects and disease take a tremendous timber toll every year. Utilization of timber is more wasteful than necessary, due perhaps in part to economic conditions which force overproduction by sawmills. No thoughtful man can deceive himself into believing that our forestry situation is satisfactory.

We are cutting and consuming our forest five times as fast as timber is now being grown everywhere in the country. Every one of us has seen the price of forest products constantly increase during the last 25 years, due largely to the decreasing supply. The price must continue to advance for many years to come, or until such time as we can bring about a condition where the growth will approximate the consumption. A real reforestation program should have been undertaken by the Congress many years ago. Millions of now waste land should to-day be covered with new forests well on the way to maturity. This condition would not exist had former Congresses appreciated the condition we are so rapidly approaching. It requires on the average 50 long years to grow a crop of timber. We have made only a gesture toward renewing our supply. It is necessary for us now, if our children and theirs, are to be in a position to buy timber and timber products at a reasonable or near reasonable price, to engage in the work of reforestation with a big and a continuous program. It is estimated that the present mature timber stand will be completely exhausted in 35 years if the present rate of consumption continues. It takes 50 years to grow a new crop. What is the answer? Reforestation, reforestation, and more reforestation, of course. There can be no other answer.

Could the people of the country be brought to a realization of the conditions that exist there would be an instant and insistent demand that not only the Federal Government but the State and local governments as well engage in this very necessary work. The Federal Government can not hope to do it all. The States and the municipalities, together with private corporations and the farmers of the country, must do their share if the job is to be done. But the Federal Government can and must do the pioneering. It must point the way and demonstrate that a forest crop can be made as profitable as any other crop produced from the soil. There are cities in Europe which have for many years paid all the expenses of government from the profits derived from the municipal forests. This can be done in this country, and in these days of continuously mounting local taxes this would afford much needed tax relief to our people.

It has been pointed out by those who have studied the question that our highly developed transportation system, which can make available a supply of timber to all parts of the country so long as the forests last in any particular region, accounts for the fact that there is such a feeling of security with respect to our timber supply. So long as demand is filled, from whatever source, at prices which are not entirely prohibitive, it will be difficult to make people realize that timber shortage is imminent.

In this connection it is deplorable that greater knowledge of the forest history of other countries has not been brought to the attention of the American people. The United States is by no means the first country threatened with timber shortage. Western Europe approached this condition, but pulled through by heroic and costly effort.

China is an outstanding example of a country which failed to avert a threatened timber shortage and to-day this great, treeless country, cursed with devastating floods and utterly dependent on other parts of the world for its timber supply, presents a tragic spectacle. Asia Minor is another region which has suffered for centuries from timber famine. But there is something besides tragedy in the forest history of other countries which we as a Nation must consider, and that is the working out of the problem of timber supply, which has been so successfully done by European countries.

Sawmills in Germany, France, and the Scandinavian countries do not move from place to place after having skinned all the timber from a given locality. They are permanent institutions around which are built up thriving industrial communities and near which are grouped related industries, such as paper mills, wood distillation plants, and works for the production of naval stores. A continuous yield of raw material is made tributary to these industrial communities through careful management of timber stands.

Forest soil is not mined for timber in these countries as it has been so generally mined in America. The soil is cropped, as it should be. I recently heard of an interesting analogy between agricultural crops and forest crops. A prominent American forester has gleaned from the letters of Dr. C. A. Schenck, of Darmstadt, Germany, a forester well known in this country, the fact that even a single species of tree can not be grown rotation after rotation on mistreated soil without reducing the productive capacity of that soil.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. With pleasure.

Mr. LEAVITT. I think it would be of interest to state that Doctor Schenck is now connected with the Montana Forest School of the University of Montana, at Missoula.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

In the words of Doctor Schenck:

German forest soil is sick . . . German foresters have found that where the forest litter has been removed and where planted spruce has followed spruce the productive capacity of the soil has suffered.

I simply want to mention this to show that the business of maintaining timber supply is anything but automatic, even under the most thoughtful management, and to point out in passing the problems which face foresters even after belated legislation gives them the opportunity to undertake the job.

England has recently had this truth brought sharply to her attention. During the war the British Isles were practically cut off from the importation of forest products and it became necessary to draw upon the old forests on English estates. A large percentage of all the pit props used in the collieries of Wales and the midland counties of England were furnished by the estate forests of England and Scotland. Formerly these props had been imported from southern France as a return cargo in the coal ships, but the stern necessities of war brought home to England the gravity of timber shortage, and the country has entered upon a big program of land acquisition and forest planting. It is interesting to note that by act of Parliament three and a half million pounds sterling, which amounts to about $15,000,000 at normal rates of exchange, have been authorized to be expended during the decade from 1919 to 1929. It will be used primarily for the acquisition of nonagricultural land suited only to the production of trees and by planting these areas with commercially valuable species. A newly organized forest commission reported at the end of the first year that something like 48,000 acres had been acquired and almost 1,600 acres planted.

It is of interest to Americans that two trees common to our own Pacific coast are being used. These are the Douglas fir and Sitka spruce. But it is more significant to point out that English people and English statesmen have realized the necessity of a continuing fiscal program if this great constructive activity is to go forward economically and efficiently. And this has come about in a country so tax ridden that everyone feels the pinch of poverty. Let us hope that the United States will not have to reach this stage before the principle of a long-time fiscal program in the forestry activities will be admitted as good business practice.

Little Denmark proudly boasts, through the establishment of a forest school in 1784, that it was the first of the Scandinavian countries to get forestry practice under way. The Danish Government took an active stand in telling private owners what they should do. If a man purchased forest land after 1805, he had to secure the approval of a State forester before he could cut any timber within a period of 10 years. This law was enacted to prevent speculation and "land skinning," as we knew it in this country, and it has worked out well.

The French, with more than a thousand mountain streams subject to torrential action, have not only engaged in forestry as a means of controlling floods and protecting agricultural lands at the foot of mountains, but have had to expend vast sums in the building of check dams in the beds of these streams. We may also draw inspiration from the work of the French people in reclaiming the sandy lands of Gascony, known as The Landes, in the southern part of the west coast of France. Here for more than 150 miles a strip of flat land was subject to the formation of sand dunes. It is supposed that in ancient times much of this section was in forest, but with the beginning of the seventeenth century all growth was gone and sand dunes were piling up and traveling inland before the wind. They obliterated farms and threatened to bury villages. The danger became a matter of national concern. The problem was attacked in earnest, and through a combination of engineering works and tree planting much of the region has been reclaimed. To-day the forests of maritime pine in this region support thriving villages and produce great quantities of lumber and naval stores.

I want to say, gentlemen, that during my service in France in the recent war I was stationed with my regiment in the forest that I have just mentioned.

Poland, with its newly formed Government, even under pressure of war activity took care to enact and enforce laws assuring the replacement of all forests harvested.

I was in Warsaw, Poland, in the winter of 1919-20, and while there officials of the Government told me that Poland had recently enacted laws providing that whenever a man cut a tree in that country he had to plant one in place of it. To-day Poland has great resources and great supplies of timber extending all over the country, but the Poles are profiting by the experience of neighboring countries and they are conserving their forests.

European nations generally have learned their lesson. They know that their economic life is to a great extent contingent upon timber supply, and while conditions in the United States are different, we can learn much from other countries which plan and provide funds for a long way ahead to maintain their forest resources.

Much is expected in this country from the enactment of the Clarke-McNary forestry law in 1924, which was the result of the best thought of Federal, State, and private forestry and timber agencies and which declared for the solution of our broad forest problem through cooperative means. This law provides that the Federal Government may cooperate with States and private owners of timberlands in fire prevention and suppression, in the distribution of forest trees and seed for the reforesting of idle farm lands, and in the dissemination of advice on the most profitable methods of managing the vast acreage of farm woodlands on a crop basis. Another very important feature of this law was a restatement of the policy of purchasing lands to be managed as national forests on the watersheds of navigable streams. This important section and the cooperative fire-protection section of the act amounted to a strengthening of the Weeks Act of 1911, in which an appropriation of $2,000,000 a year for five years was actually made—not authorized, but appropriated—for land acquisition.

Short notice made it impossible for the department to organize a force to undertake this task, involving as it did a tremendous volume of field examination and legal work. Sufficient progress therefore was not made during the first two or three years to absorb the total amounts provided. About $9,000,000 was expended, however, in the five years and splendid value in land and timber was obtained. This first five-year program under the original Weeks law was never expected nor intended to finish the job of securing the land necessary to protect the navigability of eastern streams. On the other hand, it is significant that the most notable progress was made in these five years, due largely to the fact that there was a program, and that it was a definite fiscal program.

With the necessary curtailment of the purchase work during the war, appropriations dwindled and the Forest Service, charged with making the examinations and recommending the purchases, has been hard put to know how to plan its organization from year to year. Land which by all means should be a part of eastern national forests in order to block them out into units for the most economical administration, have been lost to competing buyers who had the funds at hand and who have no idea of properly managing their purchases.

Through all these 15 years, since the inception of the plan for acquiring national forests in the East, the lands purchased have proved a good investment. Testimony before the Committee on Agriculture when H. R. 271—a bill which I had the honor to introduce—was being considered, showed that something more than 2,600,000 acres have been purchased at a cost of $5.84 an acre, or a total of about $15,000,000. More than a million dollars of revenue from the sale of products and privileges have come into the Federal Treasury from these lands, which are scattered through 11 States, and they represent an accrued value of more than $4,000,000 above cost and administration expenses.

This showing would be vastly better if proposed purchases could have gone forward steadily so that compact units could reflect a lower administrative cost per acre. A fiscal program in adequate amount and covering a 10-year period, such as my bill proposed, would accomplish this. The job would be done, and done economically and efficiently as any great project deserves to be done.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. With pleasure.

Mr. DAVEY. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Michigan explain to the House why the 10-year program is necessary, and why the Agricultural Committee program of two years is wholly inadequate to meet the situation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes. As I have just outlined, it is utterly impossible for the Forest Service of this country to work efficiently on a hopscotch appropriation from year to year. Much investigation is necessary before lands can be purchased. Much investigation of legal titles to the land is necessary, and without a fiscal program it will be impossible in the Forest Service to get together an organization that can efficiently and economically gather these lands together and administer them thereafter.

Some appreciation of the magnitude of the task of forest replacement in this country may be gained from the fact that the Federal Government's share of the land which it is proposed to acquire in the area east of the Great Plains amounts to less than 5 per cent of the total forest area in this section.

Operating under the Clarke-McNary Act, which, as I have pointed out, strengthened and expanded the land-purchase provisions of the Weeks law, about three and a half million additional acres would be acquired in the White and Appalachian Mountains. Besides this, 2,500,000 acres would be purchased in the Lake States and a similar area in the cut-over pine lands of the South. Much of this land in the Lake States and the South is idle at present and an alarming portion of it reverting to the States for delinquency in the payment of taxes. It is strictly forest land, capable of growing timber if appropriations are made available to acquire and administer, and it is good for little else. If it were to be acquired in the next 10 years, as it could be under the $40,000,000 provision of my bill, without amendment, we should then get a late enough start. Ten years, gentlemen, to put before the investing public a demonstration that cheap, abandoned forest lands can be started to producing revenue and to exhibit something besides a desert complexion. And then 10, 20, 30 years more to get any appreciable proportion of the remaining 75,000,000 acres under State or private forest management. Strangely enough the other sections of the Clarke-McNary Act requiring expenditure of Federal funds all contain fiscal policy clauses. Fire-prevention cooperative work may be shared with the States and private holders each year by Federal expenditures up to $2,500,000. The largest amount so far appropriated is carried in the Agricultural Department supply bill for the fiscal year of 1927, and amounts to $710,000. Cooperative distribution of tree seed and forest planting stock in the same bill is given $75,000 out of an authorization limited to $100,000 annually. Farm forestry extension work gets $50,000 out of a $100,000 authorization, but when it comes to the acquisition of forest land, the biggest activity mentioned in the Clarke-McNary Act, $1,000,000, is appropriated in the face of no authorization. And this must be scattered over about 20 purchase units in 12 States.

The National Forest Reservation Commission, which purchases the land and which includes in its personnel three Cabinet officers and four Members of Congress, has put $3,000,000 a year as the minimum sum upon which this purchase business should be maintained in the interests of efficiency and economy. The Senate Select Committee on Reforestation, which made the exhaustive study resulting in the drafting of the Clarke-McNary Act, made a similar recommendation. The Bureau of the Budget, after having a year ago approved my bill in its entirety, agrees to the fiscal program idea, but cautiously confines it to two years at $2,000,000 a year. And the House of Representatives passes my bill on this basis.

Let me point out to you from testimony before the Committee on Agriculture in behalf of my bill that the value of lumber cut in Michigan is estimated at $2,500,000,000, an amount which exceeds the value of all farms in the 46 pine-producing counties. From the period 1865 to 1900 the value of Michigan's lumber output exceeded the value of the gold output for that period for the entire United States, including Alaska. The first purchase area for acquiring national-forest land under the Clarke-McNary Act in Michigan is on the Au Sable River, and down that river there has been floated to market and gone into fences and buildings to improve the farms for the prairie regions of the South and West over 4,000,000,000 feet of the finest white and Norway pine that was ever grown. Land that did this once can do it again, and beside the value of the timber itself the business of growing and harvesting it represents an opportunity for the employment of human labor to which coming generations are entitled just as much as our own generation and those which preceded us. This same condition exists in the South.

The time is not far distant when we shall know from one end of this country to the other that we are needing a new brand of economy. We shall struggle harder then to build up natural resources than to save funds. We shall measure our national wealth in trees, soil fertility, navigable waterways, and wild life, and I predict that when this time comes we shall be committed to the principle not only of lining out our big job of conservation but of providing the sinews to perform it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under the privilege granted to me by the unanimous consent of the House I will now insert in the Record the speech of the Hon. W. B. Greeley, Chief of the United States Forest Service, delivered at the annual meeting of the American Forestry Association, Richmond, Va., January 6, 1926, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

The matter referred to follows:

RICHMOND, VA., January 6, 1926.

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S POLICY FOR SOUTHERN NATIONAL FORESTS (By W. B. Greeley, Chief United States Forest Service. At the annual meeting of the American Forestry Association, Richmond, Va., January 6, 1926)

Looking back over the past 30 years the historian will point out three distinct steps in the creation of national forests. The first was the reservation of the timber-producing portions of the public domain, a striking phase of the national awakening to the need for conservation that will always be identified with the administration of President Roosevelt. The second step was marked by the passage of the Weeks Act in 1911, which launched a policy of forest purchases in the Eastern States primarily for protecting the headwaters of navigable streams. The third step followed in 1924, when the Clarke-McNary Act extended the field of forest purchases to include denuded and other lands whose acquisition is desirable for the growing of timber.

In the first two stages of national-forest development the United States was in a sense pioneering in forest conservation. It was blazing the trail. It was not attempting to draw complete plans for a national program of forestry that would extend to all of the timber-growing lands in the country. It was dealing rather with the most obvious and urgent things that had to be done at once.

The third step in the extension of national forests, on the other hand, was one part of a comprehensive program which looked ahead to the growing of timber on all of the four hundred and sixty-nine odd million acres of American soil that appears adapted primarily to this economic service. This program, in a word, sought to define the place for national forests in a general plan wherein industrial forestry and farm forestry were assigned the greater part in the common undertaking.

The committee which framed the Clarke-McNary Act set up as its goal "to increase as rapidly as possible the rate at which timber is produced on the lands suited to this form of use." The main lines of attack in attaining this goal were to be:

"(1) To extend public forest ownership in areas where special public interests or responsibilities are involved, like the protection of navigable rivers, and also where the natural difficulties, costs, and hazards attending reforestation render it impracticable or remote as a private undertaking.

"(2) To remove the risks and handicaps from private timber growing as far as practicable, in order to give the greatest possible incentive to commercial reforestation."

I would like to place the Federal policy of national forests before you in this light, not as something by itself but rather as part of an all-round plan of timber production in the South.

The 16 States comprising the Southern Forestry Congress contain about 227,000,000 acres of forest land, or 37 per cent of their total area. It is noteworthy that this region contains almost one-half of all of the forest land in the entire United States. When to this vast acreage is added the variety and value of forest products grown in the South, the rapid rate of growth in response to her favorable climate, and the proximity of these vast resources by rail and water to the largest consuming markets of the country, it is, I believe, obvious that forest culture is bound to become one of the great and permanent industries of this region. The steady trend of economic forces is making forest culture commercially profitable. The United States is gradually but inevitably shifting from the virgin forest to the timber crop for its source of wood. And as the depletion of our virgin forests continues and the timber crop in consequence commands a higher and higher value, the Southern States will, by reason of the natural advantages which I have cited, in my judgment, become the greatest forest-producing region of the entire Union.

And I believe further that just as far as possible this development should come about under State leadership and through private and industrial activities. I believe in vigorous action by the National Government in matters where the federated effort of all the people is necessary to do something that will not otherwise be done or to protect common interests that will otherwise be jeopardized. But I do not believe that, particularly in the realm of economic development where forestry belongs, the Federal Government should assume activities which can, with the right kind of leadership and cooperation, be equally or more effectively carried by local communities or private citizens.

I believe that the goal set up for the Clarke-McNary Act, of increasing as rapidly as possible the rate at which timber is produced on the lands suited to this form of use, will be accomplished mainly in the Southern States through industrial forestry and farm forestry. There are already striking gains in this direction. The Forest Service recently listed 18 large timber and landowning companies in the southern pine region who have adopted some definite scheme of timber growing on their holdings. There are many other landowners in the South, in the hardwood and pine regions alike, who are working out plans of forest-land management along the same lines. In many sections cut-over lands are no longer regarded as something to be junked and gotten rid of by the most expeditious process, but as a potential asset whose earning power is worth careful development. Certainly no policy of Federal land ownership should be spread on the map that will in anywise hold back or slow up the application of private capital and business brains to the industry of growing timber.

Let us rather adhere to the simple principle upon which the Clarke-McNary law was written, of extending public-forest ownership where special public responsibilities must be met or where natural difficulties or hazards place timber growing beyond the reach of private effort; and its corollary, to lessen the risks and handicaps of industrial forestry so that commercial timber growing may attain the greatest possible momentum. To this principle we might add the desirability of establishing national forests on rather limited areas in regions where they will render an important educational service in demonstrating the new order of forest-land management and stimulating the reforestation of the privately owned lands around them. State and municipal forests will accomplish exactly the same purpose, and wherever their establishment is practicable the Federal Government should leave this field to them.

This principle does give a definite place in the forest picture of the South to Federal ownership, although in relation to the vast areas of forest land in this great region its place will be a small one. Under the Weeks Act 17 forest purchase units have been established by the National Forest Reservation Commission in the South on the headwaters of a number of her most important rivers. In these units the Government has acquired to date a little over 1,934,000 acres. In lands acquired from all sources, including the public domain, the national forests of the South comprise approximately 3,163,000 acres. Within this total are 156,000 acres forming portions of eight military reservations in the South which have been made national forests under a wise provision of the Clarke-McNary Act, which establishes the principle that any and all lands retained by the Federal Government for whatever purpose should be protected and utilized as fully as practicable for the production of timber.

The extension of national forests in the South along the principles already established should go on. Approximately 43 per cent of the purchase units thus far selected for the protection of important navigable streams has been acquired. These national forests should be completed, and additional purchase units should be established in a few localities where the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and particularly interstate streams, requires action by the National Government, with the growing of timber, of course, a purpose scarcely secondary in importance. The mountains of eastern Kentucky, the headwaters of the Current and St. Francis Rivers in Missouri, and the Ozark section of Oklahoma are regions where this further application of the policy set forth in the Weeks law is probably needed.

The Federal Government should also move aggressively under the Clarke-McNary Act in acquiring additional national forests in the South, where they will be of the greatest aid in reclaiming lands now denuded and in promoting local reforestation through their educational or demonstration value. This applies particularly to the southern pine belt with its thirty-odd million acres of seriously denuded land whose restoration to productive forests will necessarily be slow and expensive and will not in many cases be assumed by private owners. But this program of Federal purchases should be correlated with the forest policy and development of the States concerned in order that it may not replace but will rather supplement and aid local effort. I have in mind a few national forest units of from 50,000 to 300,000 acres, located in such areas as the Sabine watershed in Texas and Louisiana, the Oakmulgee Hills in Alabama, and the Biloxi pines in Mississippi.

The general program which I have outlined in carrying out the purposes of the Weeks Act and the Clarke-McNary Act would result in the Federal Government buying from five to six million acres more forest land in the Southern States. What I have said should not be taken as belittling the importance of this phase of southern forestry. It is a necessary and urgent application of a national policy, formulated through years of study and experience in dealing with practical situations; it is the share of constructive forest-land management in the Southern States which the Nation should assume; and the Federal Government should address itself to discharging this responsibility much more aggressively than it has done in recent years.

It has been my desire simply to throw the picture on the screen with a proper perspective. Out of the 227,000,000 acres of forest land in the Southern States, it is not to be expected that the National Government will assume responsibility of ownership for more than 4 or 5 per cent. For the remaining vast acreage we must look to State forests, municipal forests, and mainly to industrial and farm forestry, aided under the cooperative principle written into the Clarke-McNary law for removing the risks and handicaps from private timber growing.

Once the fire hazard to southern forests can be reduced to an insurable risk and moderate taxation of growing timber crops is guaranteed, I am satisfied that the future of southern forestry is assured. To bring these conditions about so that industrial forestry may be given free play in the South is the great cooperative undertaking in which the interests of the States, the Federal Government, the timberland owners, and the general public should all be enlisted. And it is in this field as well that immediate progress is most urgent.

Only 8 of the 16 Southern States now have forest protective systems, although it is encouraging to record that forest protection is about to be organized in four additional States of the South. Less than 22 per cent of the forest land in this region is now receiving some degree of protection, while on over three-fourths of it protection is entirely lacking. An average of 2½ cents per acre yearly, or a total of about $5,000,000, would probably give all of the forest lands of the South adequate protection from fire; but the present expenditures of the States, the counties and private owners, and the Federal Government combined are only about one-tenth of this amount. With the fundamental factor of safety from fire still so inadequately provided by public agencies, it is indeed encouraging that commercial forestry has already made such strides in the South. And by the same token I believe it a safe prediction that just so fast as the public gives the forest owner in this region reasonable security from fire and unwarranted tax burdens, industrial timber growing will extend.

The Southern States and the Federal Government are just entering an enormous field for cooperative achievement in providing reasonable security for the forest owner. On the part of the Federal Government we need much larger resources to give full effect to the cooperative principle of the Clarke-McNary Act. On the part of the States there is need for a vigorous development of State forest policies, including the protection of forest lands with adequate financial backing, the growing and distributing of forest-planting material, and a campaign of education in timber growing by farmers and other landowners. The aim of this campaign should be nothing less than to get the people of the South to think, speak, and act in terms of timber crops.

It is probable that the main course of our national forestry policy for a good many years to come has been charted by the Clarke-McNary Act. It is built squarely on the principle of cooperation. It anticipates a constant outward spread of the forestry idea, reaching the industrial practice and land sense of the American people, and growing not as a Federal activity, but as a matter of everyday business and usage of the soil. The South is the most promising field in the United States for making that policy completely successful. As it is carried out, there will be a definite place for a limited number of national forests at the critical points or key areas where this form of ownership is necessary to put the job over. The States and municipalities should share with the National Government in providing public ownership for the kinds of forest land that need it. But for every acre of publicly owned forest land there will be 20 or 25 acres in farm forestry and industrial forestry, in whose encouragement lies the greatest opportunity for the South to forge ahead rapidly in permanent timber production on a large scale.

I doubt if any group of people at any time have had before them so great an opportunity or so alluring a vision of creating an enduring basis of economic prosperity and social strength for a great and fruitful region as that which we have before us to-day in picturing the future of southern forestry. We have put our hands to the plow, and we are going to finish the furrow.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, this has been a most interesting and most informing discussion, and at points it has been to me a thrilling discussion. I have been sitting here all the afternoon regretting that the whole membership of the House were not here to get the benefit of it. I believe it one of the most important subjects upon which we are to legislate and one of the most important subjects upon which we can educate our people at home, our State legislatures, and our local organizations.

When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] made a speech on this subject recently I secured from him, I believe, 200 copies and sent them to the principals of schools and to the people I thought could do something to interest the public in that subject in my own district and in my State.

Three of the Representatives from the State of Louisiana have spoken on this question this afternoon, and mine is the first voice from Mississippi. I was not willing to let it go that way, and it was an indignity that I was not willing to submit to. First, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] gave us a very interesting speech on the work in Louisiana along the lines of conservation generally, and he talked about the conservation of bird life, of wild fowls, and their great arrangement for attracting, I believe, 90 per cent of the migratory fowls of America to that country, and that they had arranged for doctors to treat sick birds, and so forth. I suppose the purpose of the great State of Louisiana was to bid for a kind of copartnership arrangement with the powers in Washington to take care of the lame ducks next winter. [Laughter.] Then the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KEMP] gave us a very interesting discussion about the financial opportunity there is in purchasing these cut-over lands and reforesting them as an investment for the future, and, by the way, it was a very impressive statement he made.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I am planting trees at home on my farm, and I find that the enhanced value, due to the early growth, really cares for the investment.

Mr. LOWREY. I wish that could be impressed upon our people generally, and I wish more men of capital would consider the matter of purchasing large tracts of land to be reforested for what it would mean in the way of increasing their fortunes in the coming year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Speaker, this little incident occurred to me as I sat and listened. I think it was 17 years ago this spring that I was visiting the Agriculture and Mechanic College of my State and talking with the professor of forestry. Here is a matter he discussed with me, the planting of black locust trees for fence posts, telegraph and telephone posts, and so forth, and the rapidity with which the black locust tree would grow from the seed into the tree and become valuable as a post, the number of trees that would grow on an acre of land, and so forth. If you know the black locust, you know it is one of the most durable post trees that grows, and one of the most valuable if it is grown in the right way. I went home and talked with some of my neighbors. Some of us sent for and got some black locust seed. We sowed the seeds in rows in a garden and then took the sprouts and planted them. Two years ago—and remember this is within 15 years' time—I was back there and saw some of these men making posts out of the trees; some of them were tall enough to make what was considered a very good telegraph or telephone post, and those trees had grown in 15 years.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It would be interesting to know how much each acre planted to the black locust under those conditions and at that time yielded.

Mr. LOWREY. I have no idea about that. But the thing that attracted my attention was the fact that some of those trees were planted in land that was simply in red gullies, and the planting of those trees stopped the gullies and saved the land and made it of real value when it was going to absolute waste. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, that concludes the program, except that I want to express a very profound appreciation on the part of those in the House who are devout conservationists to the Republican leader, the Democratic leader, and the membership of the House for the privilege of presenting the cause of conservation here this afternoon. [Applause.]

BUREAUCRATIC GOVERNMENT

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio speech delivered by me last night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

Alexander Hamilton stood for a centralized, aristocratic, all-powerful Federal Government. He believed that government is most stable when a group or class of influential citizens have a financial interest in the government through special privileges granted by law.

Thomas Jefferson stood for a government guaranteeing exact justice to all, with no advantage through governmental favors or special privileges to any, and that no one should be unduly hampered by governmental burdens. He stood for a government always close to the people through local control.

The Jefferson theories won in the establishment of the Republic and the adoption of the Constitution, but the Hamilton theories did not die, for they have repeatedly gained temporary control. They are in control now under Republican rule.

The conflict between these two theories of government or schools of thought is as keen and bitter to-day as it was in the days of Hamilton and Jefferson. The Hamilton theory of government is represented now by the Republican Party, the Jefferson theory by the Democratic Party. With bureaucratic government growing now by leaps and bounds at Washington, the battle is on and will continue until the American people themselves rise in their might and destroy bureaucracy and plutocracy to restore the Government to the people, where our fathers planned that it should always remain, as expressed by Jefferson.

Centralization of Federal power is necessary in time of war to mobilize and commandeer the industry, the wealth, and the man power of the Republic in self-defense, but in time of peace the trend of authority and responsibility should move back to the people, back to local control. Since the war this adjustment of authority and responsibility between the Federal and local Governments has not taken place. On the contrary, more and more has centralized authority at Washington been increased and magnified. So ominous is the tendency to centralize authority in Washington that a Republican President in a recent message to the Congress found it necessary to warn his party against it, but without effect. The leaders of the Republican Party madly rushing on, daily robbing the States and the local communities of their rights to control, creating numerous bureaus and commissions at Washington, are sending out armies of irresponsible governors in the form of Federal agents and inspectors who rule the American people. Practically every major legislative measure enacted by the present Congress has in it, hidden away somewhere, new bureaucratic authority and new taxes. The President subserviently signs the bills, and madly on the Republicans rush in making very real the Hamilton theory of government, so that groups of influential citizens may enjoy financial profit from the Government at the expense of the great plain people.

The result is obvious. The Federal Government is becoming inefficient and irresponsible to the public needs. The 115,000,000 people reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Alaska to the Canal Zone, covering the islands of the sea, and to the Philippines on the other side of the earth, are being governed by Federal agents, inefficient but autocratic. The Government is day by day being more and more removed from the people and, of course, they are day by day growing less interested in voting in the national elections.

The statutes creating these agents are all similar. They provide that the law shall be administered under the rules and regulations adopted by bureaus or commissions, which means that the law is written, interpreted, and executed by a single personnel responsible directly to no elected officer representing the American people. There are now 97 Federal bureaus and commissions in Washington, and there are nearly 600,000 Federal agents and employees on the Federal pay roll, with several measures now pending creating more commissions and bureaus.

For example: The pending game refuge bill now on the House Calendar, supported by the administration, would create a new commission of seven members, Federal agents unnumbered, and a new form of Federal tax. It proposes to clothe Federal game wardens with new authority to arrest the hunter found without a Federal license and seize his gun and ammunition as collateral for a fine.

President Coolidge said in a recent message to the Congress, "Governmental control of agriculture means political control of agriculture."

The administration farm relief measure reported Saturday creates a farm council of 36 members to travel at Government expense, with $25 per diem, and a governmental farm board means a political farm board with a salary for each of $12,000 per annum, with unlimited Federal agents and expenses, and with powers heretofore not given in time of peace to any board in the history of the Republic. It is proposed to turn over to this Federal political board $1,000,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, to be used at its will. When this board is once set up all that Congress will do is to criticize it, investigate it, and threaten to impeach it. It will have too much political power to be impeached or abolished. The new Haugen bill is no better, for it proposes governmental control, which is political control, of agriculture. I give these merely as examples of the insane desire of the Republican administration more and more to centralize authority at Washington and, through Federal agents, to rule the industries, activities, and conduct of the people down through the States to the smallest community, including agriculture. The reaction against these political outrages is certain to come. It is time for the American people to take an accounting of the situation at Washington.

Three points of danger confront us:

(1) The central Government at Washington is top-heavy, overloaded with authority and responsibility, and, therefore, growing more and more inefficient. In the history of all civilized countries, unchecked bureaucratic government has inevitably lead to monarchy and decay. Bureaucratic government must be destroyed!

(2) Popular surrender by the States of authority and responsibility weakens their governmental capacity and means loss of dignity and vigor as sovereign units of government, thus destroying their political vitality and integrity as highly important political units. Bureaucratic government must be destroyed!

(3) The weakening of the private citizen by taking from him the necessity of a direct grapple with problems of government in his community, destroying his individual personality, and ignoring his individual needs and views. The stability and the perpetuity of American institutions depend and must always depend upon the governmental capacity of the private citizen and not upon a feeling of dependence upon a great central government. If you would have American institutions cherished and loved with a passionate love, the private citizen must have authority and responsibility in supporting and governing them. This is a truism not needing amplification. Bureaucratic government must be destroyed!

It was my privilege recently to travel and study in many countries of Europe. As I witnessed the turmoil, bitterness, suffering, and despair among the peoples of Europe, I was impressed with the idea that the difference between those countries and our own is found in the difference between their institutions and ours. Their institutions are under centralized control far removed from the people; they are unstable, autocratic, and not loved by the average citizen. Ours have been built from the local community, where the people have learned to cherish them, have faith in them, and love them, thus guaranteeing their stability and perpetuity.

I am not afraid of the future of our Government, for the people themselves will take control when they fully awake to existing conditions. The time has come to return the control of American institutions to the community that loves and sustains them. The two theories of government are still in conflict—the Hamilton theory follows closely the lines of European governments; the Jefferson theory, always typically American, is contrary to the ideals of the Europeans. The Republican Party stands for the Hamilton theory, the Democratic Party for the Jefferson theory, and although delayed the ultimate triumph of the Jefferson principles will be the heritage of the Republic.

We as Democrats stand for a free government as against paternal government, for human welfare as against the selfish dollar, for the masses as against the classes, for the sovereignty of the States as against the autocracy of centralization, for justice as against might, for the destruction of bureaucratic government.

These principles are immortal. They can not be destroyed. Through them and by them American institutions, wrested from the control of a Federal oligarchy in a bureaucratic government, will live forever.

The spirit of Jefferson still lives. It is his spirit that vitalizes and gives hope and courage to the average citizen of the Republic to-day, that sustains his faith in his Government and makes him unafraid.

Long live the principles and ideals of Jefferson, revealed in the spirit and purpose of America to remain American, for Americans to uplift and lead the world to finer and better things.

Bureaucratic government must be destroyed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITHWICK, for 10 days, on account of important business.

BRIDGE ACROSS SANDUSKY BAY, OHIO

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9688) granting consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Sandusky Bay at or near Baybridge, Ohio, for printing under the rules.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9688) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Sandusky Bay at or near Baybridge, Ohio, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to G. S. Beckwith, of Cleveland, Ohio, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Sandusky Bay, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Baybridge, in the county of Erie, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"SEC. 2. The said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in such act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 3. After the date of completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Ohio, any political subdivision thereof within which any part of such bridge is located, or two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and approaches, and interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase, or by condemnation in accordance with the law of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 15 years after the completion of such bridge it is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in respect of such bridge and approaches, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion costs (not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of construction of such bridge and approaches and the acquisition of such interests in real property), and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Ohio under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept, and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 5. The said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and approaches, including the actual cost of acquiring interests in real property and actual financing and promotion costs. Within three years after the completion of such bridge, the Secretary of War may investigate the actual cost of such bridge, and for such purpose the said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, shall make available to the Secretary of War all of his or their records in connection with the financing and construction thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to such actual original cost shall be conclusive, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"Sec. 6. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said G. S. Beckwith, his heirs, legal representatives and assigns, and any corporation to which such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or which shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation.

"Sec. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And agree to the same.

E. E. DENISON,
O. B. BURTNESS,
TILMAN PARKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9688) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across Sandusky Bay at or near Bay Bridge, Ohio, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 1: The Senate made one amendment to the original House bill, which struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted a new bill in lieu thereof. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment of the Senate and agrees to the same with certain amendments which are embodied in a new bill which appears in the report. The matters agreed upon represent substantially the original provisions of the House bill. Section 3 of the original House bill contained a provision giving to the State of Ohio or any political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, within or adjoining which the bridge might be located, the right to recapture the bridge by condemnation or otherwise at any time after 15 years from the completion thereof upon the payment of a limited measure of damages, the limitation consisting in a provision that in determining the compensation to be paid there should not be included any credit or allowance for good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits. The House bill also contained the further provision that if the bridge should be recaptured by the State or its political subdivisions, as provided in the act, the bridge should be operated as a free bridge after five years from the date when the same was acquired. The Senate bill struck out entirely the provision that the bridge should be operated as a free bridge by the State or its political subdivision after five years from the date of acquiring the same. The agreement of the two Houses authorizes the recapture of the bridge as provided in the House bill, and then provides that if the bridge should be recaptured by any municipality or other political subdivision of the State of Ohio it could thereafter be operated as a toll bridge, but the rates of tolls must be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for the bridge as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the date of acquiring the same. And after a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge shall have been provided the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount required for the care, maintenance, and operation of the bridge.

This bill provides for an intrastate bridge, and the agreement of the two Houses carries the provisions that have been agreed upon by the committees of the two Houses, which will hereafter be recommended for all intrastate toll bridges. Such bills will authorize the recapture of toll bridges wholly within the States after a definite number of years, at a limited measure of damages; but if such bridges are recaptured under such conditions, they can not be permanently operated thereafter as toll bridges, but they must apply the tolls to the payment of necessary expenditures and the amortization of the cost of the bridge and thereafter make them free, or substantially so, all of which is in furtherance of the policy of securing free bridges on American highways as early as practicable.

E. E. DENISON,
O. B. BURTNESS,
TILMAN PARKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the council of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the passage of the so-called Stanfield-Lehlbach civil service employees' retirement bill, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram which I have received from a commendable organization.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., April 7, 1926.

CHARLES L. McNARY,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Oregon Indian Welfare Association protests Hayden bill, 9133, amended by committee without hearing, validating 420 illegal Fall applications. Enter this protest in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to committee. Advise members Oregon delegation of our opposition not only to action committee but to bill itself.

MILLER R. TRUMBULL.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3738) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the United States marine hospital reservation and improvements thereon at Detroit, Mich., and to acquire a suitable site in the same locality and to erect thereon a modern hospital for the treatment of the beneficiaries of the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes," approved June 7, 1924, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 651) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5006) to detach Hickman County from the Nashville division of the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee and attach the same to the Columbia division of the middle judicial district of said State, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4061) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN PARKS

Mr. SWANSON. In behalf of my colleague [Mr. GLASS], the two Senators from North Carolina, and the two Senators from Tennessee, and for myself, I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The bill (S. 4073) to provide for the establishment of the Shenandoah National Park in the State of Virginia and the Great Smoky Mountain National Park in the States of North Carolina and Tennessee, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION LAW

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6238) to amend the immigration act of 1924, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NORTHERN CHEYENNE RESERVATION LANDS, MONT.

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9558) to provide for allotting in severalty agricultural lands within the Tongue River or Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation in Montana, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 6774.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it was understood yesterday that on this morning we would take up the motion which was entered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] for a reconsideration of the vote by which the Italian debt settlement bill was passed. I ask now that that motion may be considered by the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I said to the Senator from Utah yesterday that I would be prepared to take up the matter to-day. I did not understand that I had agreed to take it up the very first moment the Senate convened. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who is more interested than I am in the matter, is not in the Chamber at the moment. I have sent for him and just as soon as he comes I will call up the motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I did desire that the motion might be disposed of before taking up the settlement of the Belgian indebtedness.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I was wondering at this moment, when the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Missouri, who have charge of this matter, are both on the floor, whether we could not have some understanding as to what the program is to be for to-morrow. Some of us are compelled to be absent from the Chamber to-morrow. I, for one, should like to know what the program is to be for to-morrow's session. Can either the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Missouri give the Senate any information on that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood that there was a tacit agreement that we should dispose of the amendment to-day, which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] submitted, and which was rejected. Just as soon as the amendment shall have been disposed of on a motion to reconsider I desire to have the Senate take up the Belgian debt settlement bill, and that bill no doubt will be before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Missouri think, if I may propound the inquiry, that that tacit arrangement can be carried out?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I am obliged to differ from my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in one respect. There is no "tacit agreement" that the motion to reconsider will be disposed of to-day. I have no right to make such an agreement; but I say now that I think if the amendment shall be brought on for debate it will be disposed of to-day. I have no desire to delay the Senate beyond the point where the matter may be discussed. As soon as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] comes in I shall be prepared, if it shall then be convenient to the Senate, to take the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that that course is entirely agreeable if we can have a vote on the matter to-day. If not, I should like to have some arrangement made so that we could vote on it on Monday. I should be sorry to miss the vote on the question, but there are some Senators who are compelled to be absent from the Chamber to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I feel confident that we shall get a vote to-day.

INTERNATIONAL MAP OF THE WORLD

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I occupy a moment while the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is coming to the Chamber by asking unanimous consent to consider two joint resolutions? If no Senator desires to take up the intervening time, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 604 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let the title of the joint resolution be stated from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 149) to provide for membership of the United States in the Central Bureau of the International Map of the World.

Mr. BORAH. This joint resolution proposes to authorize an appropriation of $30 to enable us to have a part in the making of a geological map.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask has the joint resolution the approval of the Budget Bureau? [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. I presume so, for the joint resolution came over from the House of Representatives.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator from Idaho state that the joint resolution would involve the expenditure of 30 cents or $30?

Mr. BORAH. The joint resolution involves an expenditure of either $20 or $30, but I think it is $30.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that to enable the United States to become a member of the Central Bureau of the International Map of the World there shall be appropriated $30 for the payment of a contribution by the United States toward the expenses of the bureau for the calendar year 1926.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CENTENNIAL OF 1826 PAN AMERICAN CONGRESS

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 605, which is of a little more consequence than the joint resolution which has just been passed.

Mr. KING. Let the title of the joint resolution be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the joint resolution.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 150) to provide for the participation of the United States in a congress to be held in the city of Panama June, 1926, in commemoration of the centennial of the Pan American Congress which was held in the city of Panama in 1826.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it will be recalled that there was a Pan American Congress held in 1826 which was of some considerable moment at that time and was regarded as of great importance as affecting the United States and South American and Central American countries. This joint resolution is simply an authorization for us to participate in the centennial of the meeting of the congress of 1826.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to authorize the President of the United States to appoint delegates to enable the United States to participate in the Pan American Congress to be held in the city of Panama in June, 1926, in commemoration of the centennial of the Pan American Congress which met in that city in June, 1826, and to appropriate for the expenses of the United States in participating in such conference, including the travel and subsistence expenses of such delegates (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), and such miscellaneous and other expenses as the President shall deem proper, the sum of $1,500.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question in reference to the joint resolution. Did the Government of the United States not decline to participate in the Pan American Congress of 1826?

Mr. BORAH. My recollection is that we did not decline to do so, but there was an extended debate in the Senate and in the House of Representatives over whether or not we should participate. Mr. Clay, I know, took an active part in the discussion, but my remembrance is that we finally consented to participate. However, whether we did so or not, we should now participate 100 years afterwards.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will yield to me, I desire to suggest that my recollection is that a delegate to the congress on behalf of the United States was appointed, but that the congress adjourned before his arrival.

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED FRENCH DEBT SETTLEMENT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, while the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Italian debt settlement bill was passed is being discussed and before we shall take up the Belgian debt settlement and the debt settlements with the other smaller countries, it seems to me, in view of what has been printed in the newspapers this morning, it might be very appropriate if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would inform the Senate of some of the terms of the settlement which it is proposed that we shall make with France.

As I read the newspapers this morning they carry the statement that the United States and France have virtually agreed upon terms of the settlement of the debt due by France to the United States, and it may be that some Senators would desire to compare those terms with the terms of other foreign debt settlements.

I recall that when the American commission met with the French delegates on the first occasion, when they failed to agree, it was thought by some that the matter would be put off indefinitely and that nothing could be done. Indeed, it has been argued in the course of the debate on the Italian debt settlement that if the Senate did not ratify it we should get nothing from Italy, that one could not "get blood out of a turnip." It seems to me from the terms printed in the newspapers as to the proposed debt settlement with France that we are to get a little more out of France than we should have received had the debt settlement as formerly proposed gone through and been agreed to. Therefore, will not the Senator from Utah at this very appropriate time inform the Senate, as the newspapers seem to have informed the country, touching the terms of the settlement of the French debt to the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the first meeting in reference to the French debt settlement was held this morning at 9:30 o'clock. That was the first time the French ambassador or any representative of France appeared before the Debt Commission since the Caillaux mission was here. I wish to say to the Senator and to the country that any information which has been published in the press in reference to the matter has come from other sources than the members of the Debt Commission. I think it has come through France.

The Debt Commission met for a short time this morning. There was a Cabinet meeting also this morning, and the Secretary of the Treasury had to attend that meeting. We were in session for only about 20 minutes. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that the French ambassador presented a proposition on behalf of France, but, to tell the truth, I have not even read it; I do not know what it contains. I have not had time to read it.

I will also say to the Senator from Mississippi that the Debt Commission will meet to-morrow morning again for the purpose of taking under consideration the proposition made by the French ambassador on behalf of France.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, if I understand the Senator from Utah, if there is any tentative agreement, it has been made without the cooperation and advice and counsel of the Senator from Utah, but in large degree by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to that, I wish to say that there has been no tentative arrangement made with France, as there was not in the case of other countries sending commissions over here, which presented propositions for the funding of their debts to the commission. As I have read day by day what the newspapers have had to say as to the form the settlement would assume, I knew that there was no true basis for the statements.

I have no doubt that the press was informed, perhaps through French sources, that certain rates were going to be agreed upon, but there has not been a member of the commission who has said that there is a tentative agreement or that there has been any meeting at all for the purpose of discussing whether a proposal from France would or would not be accepted; in fact, the commission did not know until this morning what the proposal from France would be.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator does not know anything about the terms of this proposed agreement?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the proposition at my office, but I have not had time to read it, and I can not tell the Senator what its terms are.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, perhaps, saw the New York Herald of this morning, containing an article which is headed:

French debt pact taken up to-day. Both sides are virtually agreed.

I am just wondering if that is the way the Italian debt settlement was put over; that one commissioner agreed to it and that the other commissioners, who have been praised in the course of this debate, some of whom have been described as Democrats—and appeals have been made to this side because Democrats helped to negotiate the settlement, then gave their consent. I am wondering if the same method was employed in securing the agreement which we have here.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statement in the press is not true. There has been no "virtual agreement"; there has been no agreement whatever; in fact, there has not been a word said by the commission that would lead to an agreement. The only thing that has been done by the commission is, as I have already said, they met to-day; they received the proposition from the French ambassador, but I have not had time even to read it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is aware that practically every news service of the country has carried substantially the same article that is carried in substance by the New York Herald.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that for the last week or 10 days statements to that effect have been published, but there is no basis whatever for them, I will say to the Senator. If France had made up her mind as to what she was going to offer and undertaken to start a propaganda, I can not say that that is the fact; I do not know as to that. The newspapers seem to have obtained the information from some source, but they did not obtain it from the members of the commission.

Mr. HARRISON. And not from the Treasury Department?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator read only yesterday what the Secretary of the Treasury said. He said at that time, following the statement almost exactly that is in the morning newspapers, that the commission had not met; that no proposition had been made, and that the commission had not given consideration to any proposal. I can not say but what there has been some talk; I do not know as to that; but I want to say to the Senator that the commission will decide the question of the settlement.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert the article from the New York Herald which is headed "French debt pact taken up to-day." I wish to see if the New York Herald has it about right when the pact shall come here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRENCH DEBT PACT TAKEN UP TO-DAY—BOTH SIDES ARE VIRTUALLY AGREED—PAYMENTS BEGIN AT $25,000,000, LATER REACHING $100,000,000—HOPE ULTIMATELY TO CANCEL OBLIGATION—OPponents TO SAY NATION NEVER EXPECTS TO PAY—ITALIAN AGREEMENT SAFE

By Carter Field

WASHINGTON, April 22.—With the Italian debt settlement assured of final approval within a day or two the American Debt Commission will meet to-morrow in its second attempt to reach an agreement for the settlement of the French debt. A clear-cut majority of 19 in the Senate in favor of the Italian settlement stood to-day unswerving, while Senator REED of Missouri and Senator HOWELL, of Nebraska, urged reconsideration of the vote by which yesterday the Upper House voiced its approval of the terms granted Italy.

So confident is official Washington that the American Debt Commission will reach an agreement with Ambassador Berenger as to terms of the settlement of the French debt that no surprise would be occasioned if the negotiations should be concluded within a few days. The preliminary negotiations, it is understood here, have gone so far that little in dispute remains to be settled.

EXPECT CANCELLATION LATER

It is known that the terms on which the French ambassador has agreed with individual members of the debt commission contemplates payments beginning at $25,000,000 annually and gradually extending up to $100,000,000 annually. It is known also that the willingness of the French to agree to such heavy payments later on is based to a considerable extent on the belief that these payments will never have to be made. They are confident that this country will have a change of heart which will result in a forgiving of the debt long before the payments have reached their peak.

So generally is this understood that it is fairly certain that when the agreement comes up for debate in the House and Senate, following the course of the Italian settlement still under discussion, it will be frankly attacked on this phase.

The first meeting will be held just prior to the meeting to-morrow of the Cabinet. This, it is understood, is to permit a formal report to the President by the debt commission. Mr. Coolidge, of course, is perfectly advised as to what has been going on, but this will be the official presentation of the terms of the offer which Mr. Berenger will make in the morning. It is expected another meeting of the Debt Commission will be held in the afternoon.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question in reference to the article in the New York Herald which bears the headline:

French debt pact taken up to-day. Both sides are virtually agreed. Payments begin at $25,000,000, later reaching $100,000,000. Hope ultimately to cancel obligation.

I understand the Senator to say that the information in the article may have been given out by the French?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but I do not say that positively. That, however, is the only source from which it could come, in my opinion. I may say that I also should like to have the article go into the RECORD, and then let the debt settlement as finally arrived at, if we can reach a settlement—and I do not know that we can; but if we can reach a settlement—let us see whether the information is correct or not.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, assuming that it came from French sources, does not the Senator think, in view of past experience, that the newspapers are warranted in drawing the conclusion that that will be the settlement?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is, we were going to take whatever we were offered?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; that has not been the case in any settlement which we have made. The newspapers never knew what the settlements were until the settlements were announced by both countries involved. I wish to say—and the press will bear me out in that—that we gave no news out until the final settlement, and when the final settlement was made, America and the country with which America settled were informed at the same time of the exact terms. There has been more published before ever the commission met in regard to the French debt settlement than in regard to all the other settlements combined.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, Mr. President, while the Senator from Nebraska is not here—and I understand he is on the way—

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will yield to me, out of order I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a table which I have prepared which shows the manner in which the $100,000,000 authorized by the public buildings bill will be apportioned, based on the 1920 census, as proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The table referred to is as follows:

DUPLICATE CHECK FOR STATE TREASURER OF OHIO

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Ohio has asked me to yield to him.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 634, Senate bill 2741, for the relief of the State of Ohio. If it leads to any debate, I will withdraw it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. FESS. The basis of the bill is that a check was issued—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the disbursing clerk of the Department of Agriculture is authorized and directed to issue, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, a duplicate of original check numbered 966745, drawn October 1, 1923, in favor of "State treasurer of Ohio" for $29,812.78, and lost, stolen, or miscarried in the mails.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not fond of this practice in any event. This evidently is taking out of the Treasury, through the Department of Agriculture, a sum of money to be paid over to the State of Ohio.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. McNARY. At all events, it is a matter of great importance, and I do not think it ought to be taken up in this way. I desire to look into it.

Mr. FESS. I withdraw it, then, Mr. President.

CHARLES M. RODEFER

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Some time ago the Senate passed a bill in the case of Charles M. Rodefer, of Ohio, who had lost a bond. Subsequently the House passed a similar bill. The bills crossed each other on the way. The House bill is now on the calendar as Order of Business No. 650. Inasmuch as the Senate has already passed an identical bill, I ask that this bill be taken up now. It is House bill 2009.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the bill contains the usual provision for indemnification.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I will say to the Senator that it does. It is identical with the bill that we passed.

Mr. KING. What is the amount involved?

Mr. WILLIS. I think it is $20,000—double the amount of the principal and accrued interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The secretary will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 2009) for the relief of Charles M. Rodefer, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of Charles M. Rodefer United States Treasury certificate of indebtedness No. 11227 in the denomination of $10,000, dated September 15, 1919, matured September 15, 1920, series T-10, with interest from March 15, 1920, to September 15, 1920, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, without presentation of the said certificate or the coupon representing interest thereon from March 15, 1920, to September 15, 1920, the certificate having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That said certificate of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented and paid, and that payment shall not be made hereunder for any coupon which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That said Charles M. Rodefer shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the said certificate of indebtedness and the interest which had accrued when the principal became due and payable in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificate of indebtedness and coupon hereinbefore described.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator from Missouri.

ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. REED of Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America was passed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] having arrived, I merely want to state one point with relation to the motion to reconsider. I have forgotten whether or not I entered the motion to reconsider on yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was entered yesterday.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think I did make the motion. If I can have the attention of the Senate for just a moment, I will state one point. The Senator from Nebraska has other propositions.

The British debt settlement with Italy provides:

3. The payments due under all bonds issued in accordance with this agreement shall be made without deduction for and shall be exempt from any and all taxes and other public dues, present or future, imposed by or under authority of Italy or any political or local taxing authority within Italy.

That means, therefore, that if Great Britain were to sell her bonds to any person in the world, whether resident of Italy or nonresident, the bonds would be free from taxation by Italy.

When we come to the American debt settlement we find this proposition:

The principal and interest of all bonds issued or to be issued hereunder shall be paid without deduction for, and shall be exempt from, any and all taxes or public dues, present or future, imposed by or under authority of Italy, or any political or local taxing authority within Italy—

Thus far the language is practically identical; but this follows—

whenever, so long as, and to the extent that beneficial ownership is in (a) the Government of the United States; (b) a person, firm, or association neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in Italy; or (c) a corporation not organized under the laws of Italy.

In other words, and in simpler language, under the British debt settlement the bonds which Great Britain receives from Italy are nontaxable by Italy, absolutely and without qualification. Under the American debt settlement the bonds are not taxable if owned by the United States or if owned by a person, firm, or association not domiciled or ordinarily resident in Italy, or a corporation not organized under the laws of Italy. So that the Italian market for bonds which America holds or may receive is closed to these Italian bonds, because the Italian who desires to invest in bonds of Italy issued under these debt settlements will buy the British bonds, because he can hold them free from taxation by Italy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. When I finish this statement. The bonds issued to America, should we desire to negotiate them, can not be sold in Italy, because the Italian Government would immediately tax those bonds, or would have the right immediately to tax them. The effect is to deny a market for these Italian bonds in the very place where the best market presumptively exists.

I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I should like to have the Senator's thought on this phase of the matter. It occurs to me that the explanation of the difference lies in the fact that the American-Italian agreement provides for conversion into small bonds which will be salable on the market, while the British-Italian agreement does not so provide. The bonds which are to be issued by Italy for Great Britain are bonds of four and one-half million pounds apiece, which, of course, are not available for negotiation on the ordinary market. It occurred to me that that was the reason for the difference in those provisions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, why does not the Senator also add that those bonds are not to be cut up, but are to be bonds of $22,500,000 each, and they do not bear any interest; it is an annuity plan, whereas the American plan is a bond plan, the bonds drawing interest. I want to say to the Senator further that every settlement we have made uses exactly the same language that is used in this one.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator will have to quote a better precedent than the previous settlements his commission has put over in order to make a convincing argument so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not state that as an argument. I stated it as a fact. The argument has already been stated, I think; and it shows conclusively that the two are entirely different. One is an annuity settlement, and the other is a bond settlement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator first give us his thought—

Mr. REED of Missouri. When all the Senators get through I will answer all of them. Is the Senator from Pennsylvania through?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am through.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now let us see what these interjections and objections mean when boiled down: First, that we made some other settlement, and improvidently failed to provide that the bonds which we receive shall be exempt from taxation by the Government issuing the bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that when I speak on the subject I will tell the reason why.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not care what the reason is. There is no reason for that—

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Except yielding to the importunities of debtors who are repudiating their obligations to the United States of America. Now we are told that there is no clause in the British debt settlement providing for taxation of Italy's bonds to Great Britain because the settlement is in the form of an annuity, and that the British debt bears no interest.

To my mind the argument to be drawn from the facts stated is entirely against this proposition; for if Great Britain is to receive an annuity and that is exempted from taxation, then if we receive our pay in the form of interest, which is, after all, an annuity paid upon money, a payment based upon a debt, I want to know why it should not also be exempted. The mere form makes no difference; but let us see the absurdity of this settlement, the outrage of this settlement.

We get from Italy one-eighth of 1 per cent interest in the early days of this settlement, and we propose to say then to the Italian who will buy an Italian bond, "Italy can tax you on that bond." Everybody knows that if they levy a tax at all it will be greater than one-eighth of 1 per cent; so that by simply levying a tax of one-eighth of 1 per cent during the early days of the period of this loan Italy can absolutely destroy any market for these obligations in the Kingdom of Italy.

What an absurdity it is to say to a Government, "We are going to settle with you for about 23 cents on the dollar. We are going to take your bonds, and then we are going to permit you to tax those bonds the moment they come into the possession of a citizen of Italy."

If we should transmute these bonds, as it is provided we may, into a merchantable security, and then conclude that we wanted to sell them on the market for what we could get, for what they really would figure out to be worth, which at the outside is about 23 cents on a dollar, we would naturally look for that market among the Italian investors; we would naturally go to the country that had issued the bonds to find the market at least for a part of those bonds. But no Italian with an ounce of sense would buy that sort of obligation, knowing that it might be taxed by his Government much more than the interest he would receive.

We exempt our own bonds very largely from taxation. Some of them are totally exempt from taxation, and because they are totally exempt from taxation the 3½ per cent bond has been above par practically ever since it was issued. Because there is a cloud of possible taxation as to a limited amount of 4½ per cent bonds, some of them have recently been below par. In making this settlement with Italy, in making these concessions which amount to a gift, to a cancellation of three-quarters of the Italian debt, it is proposed to allow Italy to have the power to levy a tax upon these obligations, which will destroy their value entirely if they ever come into the possession of a citizen or a subject of the Kingdom of Italy.

Mr. President, that can not be justified. It is an improvident and indefensible thing. Whether Senators here were willing to vote for the Italian settlement or not, they certainly ought to be willing to insist that Italy shall waive the right to tax these bonds or their proceeds at any time or at any place, by whomsoever held.

I am utterly unable to understand how any such clause as this should ever have been inserted in this bill. Those Senators who voted for the Italian debt settlement did it undoubtedly for one of two reasons. They were obsessed with the idea that we must be generous to Europe; that the United States must act as general wet nurse for the world; that we must drain our own coffers for the purpose of conferring benefactions; or they voted for this measure upon the theory that this is the best settlement we could get, the best settlement because it is said Italy can not presently pay a larger sum. How can that argument be applied to the question I am now discussing? For certainly Italy can waive the right to tax these bonds at any time or at any place, and by whomsoever held.

The more I contemplate this settlement, the more infamous it seems to me. Since the vote was taken, I have been reflecting upon some circumstances that have come to my attention in the past. I remember that the first cry that was raised for the cancellation of the European indebtedness came from the banking houses that had negotiated enormous loans to Europe during, preceding, and subsequent to the war. I recall that this was the situation then: The representatives of the great banking house of Morgan, that institution having been the fiscal agent for the European countries engaged in the war, outside of Germany, and for Germany at one time, not a fiscal agent, but certainly a fiscal agency, raised the cry that we should cancel our debts. But never once did any one of those gentlemen propose that the debts to their institution should be canceled. They proposed the cancellation of the debt due the American people—the farmer, the mechanic, the laborer, the washwoman—due them because we had agreed with them that we would collect the money from Europe to pay the bonds they had bled themselves white to buy.

I remember that it was these financial institutions which consistently insisted upon the cancellation of the entire debt to the American people, not due this commission, not due these Members of Congress, but due to the American people. Yet every one of those gentlemen was insisting upon the payment of the money due them on the bonds they had taken from Europe under circumstances substantially similar to and substantially coincident with, in point of time, the loan of the moneys we advanced as a Government.

I am not unmindful of the fact that every one of these institutions and every man connected with them, every spokesman they have had, has been insisting ever since that if they can not get a total cancellation, they shall have a partial cancellation, and we are now confronted with the fact that it is proposed to cancel three-fourths of the Italian debt.

Gentlemen may undertake to cover it by technical phraseology; they may say that they are to pay the entire debt, and that they have only reduced the rate of interest. But, sir, everybody but a fool knows that when you extend the debt for 62 years and fix a total annual payment on the average of 1.1 per cent, you have to all intents and purposes canceled three-quarters of that debt.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have agreed to yield to the Senator from Iowa to call a quorum, because the managers of the House in the impeachment case will be here at 1 o'clock. I shall continue my remarks later.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	King	Sackett
Bayard	Fess	La Follette	Sheppard
Bingham	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Blease	George	McKinley	Shortridge
Borah	Gerry	McLean	Smoot
Bratton	Goff	McMaster	Stanfield
Broussard	Gooding	McNary	Stock
Bruce	Hale	Mayfield	Stephens
Cameron	Harreld	Neely	Swanson
Copeland	Harris	Nye	Trammell
Couzens	Harrison	Oddie	Tyson
Cummins	Hefflin	Overman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Howell	Pepper	Warren
Dale	Johnson	Phipps	Watson
Deneen	Jones, N. Mex.	Pine	Wheeler
Dill	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Williams
Edge	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.	Willis
Fernald	Keyes	Reed, Pa.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE GEORGE W. ENGLISH

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, under its order, will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment of George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, may administer the oath to the President of the Senate as the Presiding Officer of the court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Iowa will present himself at the Vice President's desk.

Mr. CUMMINS advanced to the Vice President's desk and administered the oath to the Vice President as follows:

You do solemnly swear that in all things appertaining to the trial of the impeachment of George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois, now pending, you will do impartial justice according to the Constitution and laws. So help you God.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll, and as their names are called Senators will present themselves at the desk in groups of 10 and the oath will be administered to them.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, a large number of Senators are absent. Some arrangement ought to be made with reference to administering the oath to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the precedents of the Senate each Senator who has not been sworn will be called to the desk when he enters the Chamber and the oath will be administered to him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well; if that is the rule.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. ASHURST, BAYARD, BINGHAM, BLEASE, BORAH, BRATTON, BROUSSARD, BRUCE, BUTLER, CAMERON, CAPPER, CARAWAY, COPELAND, COUZENS, and CUMMINS, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. BLEASE, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. CARAWAY, advanced to the Vice President's desk and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I noticed that, when the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] was called, he shook his head to indicate that he would not take the oath. On yesterday the Senator from South Carolina asked to be excused from participating in the trial of Judge English and gave as his reason for so doing the relationship which exists between himself and one of the board of managers of the House, Representative DOMINICK. We all sympathize with the views expressed by the Senator from South Carolina; but in the composition of the Senate as a court to try Judge English on the indictment which has been returned here by the House of Representatives, I think no one may be excused from taking the oath.

What shall happen to the Senator from South Carolina when it becomes necessary to vote is an entirely different matter, but the rule specifically provides that all the Members of the Senate who are present shall present themselves and take the oath, and that absent Senators shall take the oath as they appear in the Senate. I therefore think it not competent for us to excuse the Senator from South Carolina from taking the oath as a member of the court. I hope the question will not be raised and that we shall avoid any technicality which might be urged at any time. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to take the oath.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. CURTIS, DALE, DENEEN, DILL, DU PONT, EDGE, EDWARDS, ERNST, FERNALD, FERRIS, FESS, FLETCHER, FRAZIER, GEORGE, and GERRY, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. DU PONT, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. ERNST, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. FLETCHER, appeared and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] from the Senate.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. GILLET, GLASS, GOFF, GOODING, GREENE, HALE, HARRELD, HARRIS, HARRISON, HEFLIN, HOWELL, and JOHNSON, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. GILLET, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. GREENE, appeared, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. JONES of New Mexico, JONES of Washington, KENDRICK, KEYES, KING, LA FOLLETTE, LENROOT, MCKELLAR, MCKINLEY, MCLEAN, and MCMASTER, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. LENROOT, appeared, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. McNARY, MAYFIELD, MEANS, METCALF, MOSES, NEELY, NORBECK, NORRIS, NYE, ODDIE, OVERMAN, PEPPER, PHIPPS, PINE, PITTMAN, and RANSDELL, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. MEANS, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MOSES, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. NORRIS, and Mr. PITTMAN, appeared, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. REED of Missouri, REED of Pennsylvania, ROBINSON of Arkansas, ROBINSON of Indiana, SACKETT, SCHALL, SHEPPARD, SHIPSTEAD, SHORTIDGE, SIMMONS, SMITH, SMOOT, STANFIELD, STECK, and STEPHENS, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, Mr. SCHALL, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. SMITH, appeared, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Messrs. BLEASE, SWANSON, TRAMMELL, TYSON, UNDERWOOD, WADSWORTH, WALSH, WARREN, WATSON, WELLER, WHEELER, WILLIAMS, and WILLIS, and these Senators, with the exception of Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. WELLER, appeared, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This completes the administration of the oath to the Senators present. Absent Senators will be sworn as they enter the Chamber.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I submit the order which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the order submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate is now organized for the trial of articles of impeachment against George W. English, district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Illinois, and is ready to receive the managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, for the information of the Senators, I desire to say that all that remains to be done at present is to fix a time at which the summons shall be returnable. It has been the custom heretofore not to fix that time until the managers on the part of the House are present. It will probably require 10 or 15 minutes to secure the presence of the managers, and there will be nothing to be done, so far as the impeachment is concerned, until they shall be present.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Has the Senator in mind a time when he thinks the trial should proceed?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I have. I have prepared an order, which I intend to submit to the Senate. It provides for the appearance of the respondent or defendant on the 3d day of May.

Mr. WATSON. Is the trial then to proceed?

Mr. CUMMINS. That will be entirely as determined by the Senate at that time, but the usual order is that the defendant will appear, and he may ask time to file an answer. Undoubtedly a reasonable time will be granted to him to file an answer. The managers on the part of the House of Representatives will then desire to file a replication. Just how long a time they will think necessary in order to prepare it, I do not know, but it will undoubtedly be only a short time.

I am informed, but entirely unofficially, that the defendant may be ready to file his answer at the end of the 10 days which are given him by this order for appearance.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to an inquiry?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Has the Senator from Iowa made an examination and reached a conclusion as to whether the Senate could be called in extraordinary session to try this impeachment, or whether it is required that both the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be in session if the impeachment is to be heard and disposed of?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. Certain members of the Judiciary Committee, of which I happen to be chairman, have made rather an exhaustive study of that subject. I think it is the opinion of all the members of the Judiciary Committee who have examined the matter that the House can adjourn sine die, with the consent, of course, of the Senate, and that the impeachment proceedings can go forward without the presence of the House of Representatives; although I say, very frankly, that the only precedent with regard to that question was decided the other way. That precedent was in the impeachment of Secretary Belknap. It was then ruled by the Senate that the House of Representatives must be present during the impeachment trial.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, as I understand, the conclusion that has been reached by the members of the Judiciary Committee who have made an investigation of the subject is that the Senate could continue its present session and consent, under the Constitution, for the House to adjourn sine die, and that then this case could be tried by the Senate remaining in session?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is one of the possibilities.

Mr. SWANSON. Has the question been investigated and a conclusion reached as to whether both the House of Representatives and the Senate could adjourn sine die and the Senate could be called back into extraordinary session to try the impeachment?

Mr. CUMMINS. We are of the opinion, when the time comes to settle it, if it is desired to postpone the trial of the impeachment case until some time in the fall, that then the House and Senate ought to agree to adjourn to that time. My own opinion is that the President can not call the Senate in session for the purpose of trying an impeachment case; but that is simply my own opinion. The matter has not been considered by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SWANSON. A cursory examination led me to reach the same conclusion; but I could see no objection, as suggested by the Senator, to consent, under the Constitution, for the House to adjourn sine die and the Senate continue in session to try the impeachment. There is no doubt about that, is there?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the better opinion is that that can be done if the Senate desires to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope that all Members of the Senate, and particularly the lawyers of the Senate, will give consideration to that matter before we finally determine it. I think it is a very doubtful proposition, and some very eminent lawyers of the past have expressed that view. There may be sound arguments in favor of the proposition that the House may adjourn; but I think it is very doubtful whether the House can have managers here conducting an impeachment after the House shall have disappeared.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there is no gainsaying the fact that there has been difference of opinion upon that question; it has been very learnedly argued on both sides in the history of impeachments and in the history of the Constitution; but we are not called upon at the present time to determine that. The question will not arise until the issues in the case have been settled; then it will become necessary for the Senate to determine at what time the trial shall proceed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that the time when the Senate should proceed would depend to a great extent upon what authority we have to act separately, with the House in adjournment and the Senate in session. The reason why I made the suggestion at this time was so that the experienced and able lawyers on the Judiciary Committee could make a thorough investigation and let the Senate know what its rights were without imperiling its decision in this matter as finally reached.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a very interesting question and admits of considerable argument.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the chairman of the committee has appointed a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary to examine and determine that question. Is that not so?

Mr. CUMMINS. Without any order on the part of the Senate, I appointed a committee—a subcommittee it may be called—of the Judiciary Committee to study and consider that subject.

Mr. CURTIS. I so understood.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the majority of the committee, so far as I know, without any dissent, although they were not all present when the final conclusion was reached, held that it was not necessary for the House to be present or in session during the trial of the impeachment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. Since the only precedent on the subject is contrary to the conclusion reached by the subcommittee, upon what authority is the conclusion based?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will endeavor to explain it. In the Belknap case the question arose whether it was necessary for the House to be in session during the trial of the impeachment, and it was ruled in that case that the House must remain in session. I think everybody recognizes that there were very peculiar circumstances surrounding the trial of the impeachment of Secretary Belknap. There were political considerations, which I have no doubt had great weight in the determination of the matter. There are, I think, 12 precedents in the various States with constitutions substantially like our own.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator may suggest that one of the considerations urged by some who took this view in the Belknap case was that without the House being in session it would be difficult, perhaps, to maintain a quorum of the Senate, and some therefore urged as one of the reasons why the House ought to be in session that thereby the maintenance of a quorum in the Senate would be facilitated.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true, but the chief consideration was this: It was alleged that certain of the Senators did not want to try the Belknap case until after November elections. That did not appear, of course, in the ruling; but, at any rate, that was one of the material things that developed in that case. There was a controversy in respect to the time at which the case should be tried. Some wanted to put it over until after the elections and some wanted to try it before the elections.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that the precedent in the Belknap case was established as a matter of political expediency?

Mr. CUMMINS. At least the subcommittee was of the opinion that political considerations had very considerable influence in reaching that decision.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator might add that the vote of the Senate in the Belknap impeachment on the question we are now discussing was a very close one.

Mr. CUMMINS. A very close vote. I think the vote was 19 and 17, but there were not more than 2 votes either way.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. SWANSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to finish answering the inquiry that was made as to the precedents. There are half a dozen or more precedents in the States in which it has been uniformly held that the senate could go forward in the trial of an impeachment case without the presence of the house.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I understood the Senator to reach the conclusion that the Senate could consent to the House adjourning sine die and continue in session and try the impeachment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said that is the conclusion we reached.

Mr. SWANSON. If that conclusion was reached, that was under the idea that the Senate could consent for the House to adjourn more than three days under the clause of the Constitution providing for such an adjournment?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Constitution says that neither House shall adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like, however, to have the Senator consider this matter: The clause in the Constitution reads as follows:

Neither House, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days.

That implies a session of Congress, not a session of the Senate. It seems to me that when we consent to the adjournment of the House it is no longer a session of Congress. The question would be whether we could give consent for them to adjourn sine die. When the House adjourns sine die, that really means a termination of the session of Congress, it seems to me, because "Congress" means both Houses in session.

Mr. CUMMINS. That point was urged very strongly in our consideration of the matter, and it was believed by the greater number of the members of the committee that if we did not want to try this case at the present time or after our legislative work had been finished, we should then agree upon an adjournment of both the House and the Senate until, say, the middle of November, and reassemble and try the case before the regular session opens in December.

Mr. SWANSON. There would be no question about its being legal if the Senate should consent for the House to adjourn for three weeks and then come back and adjourn sine die when the Senate had completed the trial of the impeachment, would there?

Mr. CUMMINS. There would not be any question about that.

Mr. SWANSON. There would be no question that the Senate could consent that the House should adjourn for three weeks or four weeks and then come back for an adjournment sine die. There would be no question about that procedure being legal, would there?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has just suggested that he has very grave doubts whether the Senate can proceed with the impeachment at all without the constant presence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understood, he said the Senate could not proceed when there was no House here; but the House could adjourn or recess. They would not have to be in session every day when we were here. It seems to me they could take a recess or adjourn for a month as well as they could for one day. If the reverse were true, they would have to sit there continuously while we sat here.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator must remember that I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho. I think we have the authority to do just what has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me there can be no question about it. We could consent for the House to adjourn for three weeks or a month, and we could proceed to try this case, and then let the House come back for an adjournment sine die. In that event Congress would still be in session, because neither House would have adjourned sine die.

Mr. CUMMINS. One of our difficulties is this; and this is a view that is held, I think, by all of the Senators: We have a great deal of important legislative work to do. There is a notion around the Capitol that we could adjourn or finish our legislative work by the middle of May or by the first of June. I do not share that view of the matter. I think it will take Congress until the middle of June to conclude reasonably and decently the legislative work that it must perform and ought to perform before we enter upon the trial.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BLEASE. If the House were to stay in session, and just let the Members who are here go into the Chamber and call the House together each day at 12 o'clock, and then adjourn for the want of a quorum day by day, and in that way virtually keep the House in session, does the Senator think that would be sufficient?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, often in the past there has been a gentlemen's agreement among the Members of the House by which they adjourned three days at a time, with the understanding that there would be no quorum called for. Just what the House would want to do in that respect I do not know.

Mr. BLEASE. It seems to me that would obviate the objection of the Senator from Idaho, because then the House would really be in session all the time.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. RANDELL. Is there any doubt about the right of Judge English to continue to perform the duties of his office until he is tried?

Mr. CUMMINS. None whatever.

Mr. RANDELL. There is not in my mind. The question was raised, I will state to the Senator, and I thought there was no doubt about it; but I wished to ask the Senator's opinion upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. He will continue to discharge his duties as judge until after the trial of the impeachment.

Mr. RANDELL. I agree with that view.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that the only way in which this question can be raised, the only test that could be applied to the propriety and to the conclusiveness of our action, would be in the event of a conviction of Judge English?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can conceive no other way in which to raise the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he should be convicted, then the only question that would arise would be whether or not he would yield peaceably his seat as a judge of the district court for the eastern district of Illinois. What court could pass upon the conclusiveness of the action of this body and the House of Representatives if it had been agreed between them that this was the proper and conclusive method of dealing with this subject?

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally, I have not examined that question. I doubt very much whether Judge English, if convicted and removed from office, could raise that question at all anywhere.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no court to which he could go that is supreme to this court, is there?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; that is true.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, has the Senator from Iowa sufficient information to enable him to estimate with any degree of accuracy how long it will take to dispose of this impeachment case?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have made some inquiry about that, and it is estimated that it will take from two to three weeks.

At 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. the managers of the impeachment on the part of the House of Representatives appeared at the bar, and their presence was announced by the Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will conduct the managers to the seats provided for them.

The managers were conducted to the seats assigned to them in the area in front of the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen managers, the Senate is now organized for the trial of the impeachment of George W. English, United States district judge for the eastern district of Illinois.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I present the order which I send to the desk and ask that it be read, and further ask for its immediate consideration. In this connection I desire to say that it has been customary in former impeachment trials for the Presiding Officer to ask the managers on the part of the House whether the order I am about to suggest is satisfactory to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That a summons be issued, as required by the Rules of Procedure and Practice in the Senate when sitting for the trial of the impeachment of George W. English, district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Illinois, returnable on the 3d day of May, 1926, at 12.30 p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen managers, is the order satisfactory to the managers on the part of the House?

Mr. Manager MICHENER. Mr. President, I am directed by the managers on the part of the House to say to the Senate that the order proposed by the Senator from Iowa is agreeable to the managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment adjourn until May 3, at 12.30 p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment adjourned until Monday, May 3, 1926, at 12.30 o'clock p. m.

The managers on the part of the House withdrew from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will return to legislative session.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: The Chair would suggest that the Senators who are present and who have not been sworn in the matter of the impeachment of Judge George W. English present themselves at the desk and receive the oath.

Mr. LENROOT, Mr. GILLET, Mr. WELLER, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. FERNIS advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the Vice President administered to them the following oath:

You do, each of you, solemnly swear that in all things appertaining to the trial of the impeachment of George W. English, district judge of the eastern district of Illinois, now pending, you will do impartial justice, according to the Constitution and laws. So help you God.

ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. REED of Missouri to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America was passed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Seventy-five Senators having answered the roll call, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HOWELL obtained the floor.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, may we not have order in the galleries? The Senator from Nebraska is about to make a very interesting address, and I think we ought to have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries must preserve order.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, under the provisions of the Italian debt settlement it is stipulated that some $2,400,000,000 shall be paid over a period of 62 years, and the payments to be made are represented by 62 bonds, varying in amount from $5,000,000 to $79,400,000. These are the bonds which Italy has agreed to hand over to the United States Government when this settlement is ratified. But under Article VII of the agreement that has been recommended by our Debt Commission, Italy—will issue to the United States at any time, . . . at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, . . . in exchange for any or all of the bonds issued thereunder . . . definitive engraved bonds in form suitable for sale to the public, in such amounts and denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury . . . may request, in bearer form, with provision for registration as to principal, and . . . in full registered form, and otherwise on the same terms and conditions, as to dates of issue and maturity, rate or rates of interest, if any, exemption from taxes, . . . and the like, as the bonds surrendered on such exchange. . . . Italy agrees . . . also that it will cause to be promulgated all such rules, regulations, and orders as shall be deemed necessary or desirable by the Secretary of the Treasury . . . in order to facilitate the sale of the bonds in the United States, in Italy, or elsewhere, and that if requested by the Secretary of the Treasury . . . it will use its good offices to secure the listing of the bonds on such stock exchanges as the Secretary of the Treasury may specify.

Mr. President, I commend the Debt Commission upon the prudence and wisdom of that provision of the settlement. It anticipated, or it was anticipated—and undoubtedly the Debt Commission had in its mind—that it would be highly desirable for the United States Government eventually to relieve the Treasury of these bonds—sell them in Italy or elsewhere, as suggested in this agreement, so that we might be clear, ultimately, of the entire matter. In other words, the 62 bonds which Italy will initially deposit were regarded as nothing but frozen assets, always undesirable from a financial point of view.

The United States Treasury is really not different from a great banking institution, and business principles should govern. We all know there is one thing a great bank looks upon with concern: That is its frozen assets. Therefore every banking institution transforms such paper into available assets if possible, so that it may be utilizable if necessary; and that is what this article 7 provides for. It is the kind of a provision the directors of a bank would insist upon in any debt settlement under similar circumstances. It is wise, it is prudent, and, as I have stated, I commend the Debt Commission upon their course in this connection.

When, however, we come to analyze article 3 of the agreement we discover that, as desirable in the interest of the United States Government as this article is, it is absolutely nullified by article 3. Article 3 provides, as I have stated, that initially Italy shall deposit with the Government of the United States 62 bonds, varying in amounts from $5,000,000 to $79,400,000. Then it proceeds to indicate the interest which Italy will pay upon these bonds. Italy is not to pay any interest whatever during the first five years. For the next 10 years—for the 10 years ending in 1940—a thousand dollars of these bonds will net an income of $1.25 a year. For the next 10 years, ending in 1950, a thousand dollars of these bonds will yield $2.50 in income per annum. For the next 10 years, $7.50 per annum. For the next 10 years, $10 per annum. For the last 7 years, $20 per annum will be paid upon a thousand dollars of these bonds.

If one should buy such bonds running the entire period of 62 years, say a number of them equivalent to $100,000, the average income from this $100,000 investment would be less than $650 per annum.

In view of these facts is it not evident that these bonds, even if in marketable form, would be utterly unsalable? There can be no question about this. People who make investments of this character do so for income, and the income on $100,000 during this period would be less than $650 a year on the average. Therefore the reason why I have stated that, wise as are the provisions of article 7, they are absolutely nullified by article 3. So far as this settlement is concerned, if it is not amended, article 7 might as well be left out of the picture. It means nothing. To that extent these provisions are discreditable to the Foreign Debt Commission. Why was article 7 inserted? Those who want to carp might urge that it was included for the purpose of misleading the public respecting the wisdom and character of the agreement. I do not hold that such is the case. I have expressed my opinion upon the floor of the Senate before respecting this settlement. I think that in some respects it was a routine job, that the commission did not give attention to these details. I can not believe that the Senator from Utah (Mr. SMOOT) consciously approved the inclusion of this article with the intention that it should mean nothing.

Mr. President, whereas the Debt Commission might have proceeded differently and provided more favorable terms of payment, yet notwithstanding the arrangements made and recommended it is possible to adopt an amendment that will afford the people of the United States the benefits that might accrue from article 7 without causing Italy to pay an additional dollar in any year, without changing the payments in any way whatever.

As a consequence I have offered an amendment providing that the payments to be made by Italy shall be in nowise affected, but that the Secretary of the Treasury, as a matter of contractual right, may say to the Government of Italy, "Instead of having bonds issued at one-eighth of 1 per cent we would like to have a lesser amount of bonds issued at a higher rate of interest, which will mean the same thing to you, as you will not have to pay an additional dollar in any year or change your payments in any way." It is wholly possible to do this, and if it is done, if the amendment that I have proposed is adopted, it might be possible to close this Italian transaction, so far as the Treasury is concerned, within the next 20 years by getting out of our hands all of these securities, something that would be, in my opinion, of tremendous advantage to the United States Government.

Mr. President, I can not imagine what objection there is to making a change of this character. It does not place a greater burden upon Italy. It does not alter her annual payments or the total of her payments. It is simply a business arrangement enabling the Government to change frozen assets into liquid assets. No board of directors of a bank would refuse upon the appeal of one of the directors to make such a change. Why should we say, "No. The Senate must sign on the dotted line." Under the law the agreement must come here for approval, but when it comes we are told that Italy will not consent to a change, that the Debt Commission opposes any change whatever. We must sign on the dotted line as here submitted, irrespective of what our views may be in connection with any details of the settlement. Section 2 of the amendment which I have offered provides for such a change, and in my opinion its adoption is a matter of really great importance.

Mr. President, I will now address myself to section 3. It was necessary for us to issue tax-free bonds or bonds largely tax free in order to raise the enormous sums we loaned during and after the war. Notwithstanding, Italy comes to us and says, "We realize that the money you loaned was secured largely from nontaxable bonds. We have had the benefit of the use of this money without paying interest during all these years. You are now preparing to cancel the debt, merely requiring us to pay 1.1 per cent interest for 62 years. We realize all this; nevertheless you must understand that any of our bonds we give you in payment of that 1.1 per cent interest are to be taxable in our country. We will not give you a bond that if owned by any one of your citizens who happens to be domiciled in Italy will be free of taxation; they will have to pay us taxes thereon. We want you to understand, moreover, that you can not sell one of our bonds in Italy free of our right to tax them. We care not that this money came from bonds nontaxable in the United States and that the people of the United States are making the sacrifices imposed by this debt settlement. You will pay taxes on our bonds if ever you bring them to the shores of Italy." That is what the taxation provision of this agreement implies. Article V provides in part:

The principal and interest on all bonds issued hereunder shall be . . . exempt from . . . all taxes . . . imposed by or under authority of Italy . . . so long as . . . and only so long as "the beneficial ownership is (a) in the Government of the United States or (b) a person, firm, or association neither domiciled nor ordinarily resident in Italy or . . . (c) a corporation not organized under the laws of Italy."

Compare this with the corresponding section in the British-Italian settlement:

The principal and interest on all bonds issued or to be issued hereunder shall be paid without deduction for and shall be exempt from any and all taxes and from public dues present or future imposed by or under authority of the Kingdom of Italy or any political or local taxing authority within the Kingdom of Italy.

There are no such reservations as there are in our settlement. It has been urged here that each British bond amounts to $22,000,000. One of our bonds will amount to nearly $80,000,000. The major amounts of our annual payments are deferred, are away at the other end of the scale; hence the greater portion of the bonds afforded will be above $22,000,000. Why and how did Britain obtain this great advantage?

Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for the ability and perspicacity of British statesmen. They know what they are doing. They handle their government's business just as if it were their own business. They may appear to be moved by sentiment, but when we study British history we find that wherever sentiment appeared it never really interfered. In this matter Britain knew exactly what she was doing. She insisted upon this taxation provision and got it. Our Debt Commission did not insist upon such a provision and they did not get it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is very little use in discussing a question with only half a dozen Senators in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, to sum up the statements that I have previously made, article 7 of the Italian debt settlement provides that the 62 bonds issued to this Government initially by Italy, varying in amount from $5,000,000 to about $80,000,000, may be broken up into marketable bonds of less amounts; but under article 3 of the agreement the maximum that $100,000 would yield during the last 7 years of the 62-year period is only $2,000 a year, and the average for $100,000 invested over the 62-year period is less than $650 annually. Therefore the "marketable" bonds for which this agreement provides will be utterly unsalable.

What I propose is an amendment that will not alter a payment that is to be made by Italy; that will not increase her obligations in any way whatever; but provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may, with contractual right, ask Italy to issue a less amount of bonds at a higher rate of interest, so that we may transform frozen assets into liquid assets. In short, thus have marketable securities, if desired as provided in article 7 of the agreement but nullified by article 3 through low interest rates, varying from $10.25 annually for a $1,000 bond, during the first 10 years after 1930, to an income that never reaches more than $20 per year for a $1,000 bond, and that is only during the last 7 years of the 62-year period. The average income from a $1,000 bond would be less than $6.50 per year.

That is all the second section of my amendment provides for. It does not propose to increase Italy's burden. It simply gives the Secretary of the Treasury the legal right to ask for a less amount of bonds at higher rates of interest, provided Italy's payments shall not be increased in any year over and above what she has agreed to pay.

The third section added by my amendment affords us the identical provision respecting taxation that is contained in the Italian-British settlement. Mr. President, out of courtesy, the Government of Italy should agree to these changes. Otherwise the Senate is in this position, that it dare not alter this agreement in any way. Here is a proposal that is merely a business detail. It does not increase the burden of Italy but does afford the Government of the United States certain advantages which article 7 was intended to provide but which are nullified by article 3 through the stipulation of these extremely low rates of interest. Therefore it seems to me that the Senate should consider this as a matter of business. Under the provisions of the amendment I have offered it would be possible for the United States Government within 20 years to terminate this whole arrangement with Italy through the sale and distribution of these bonds. So, Mr. President, I sincerely trust that reconsideration may prevail for the purpose, at least, of adopting the amendment which I have proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] has presented his views in support of his amendment and I had hoped that somebody would rise to reply; but it seems that this matter is to be treated with silent contempt, I think, on the theory that the less said in defense the better; that the votes are probably here; they have been organized; they are ready to be delivered, and that appeals to reason or to fairness are utterly futile.

I want to say now to the people of the United States—not to the absent Senate, for it is largely absent—that the administration of Calvin Coolidge is as much owned by the great interests of this country and controlled by them as the subordinate of any bank in the United States is controlled by the board of directors of the institution. I am no enemy of capital, for a man who is the enemy of honest dollars honestly acquired is an enemy of the American people. I believe in the protection of every honest dollar there is in the United States. Whether the fortune be great or small, whether the institution be big or little, it is entitled to just treatment by every legislative body and by every officer of the Government; but when capital moves in and takes possession of the Government of the United States it is time for some plain speech.

There has not been a demand made, to my knowledge, by the great financial interests that has not been responded to by this administration with the same subservience, the same cringing attitude that is manifested by a well-trained setter dog when his master orders him to heel. The laws of the United States are violated by the appointment as Secretary of the Treasury of a man who is absolutely barred from that position by the plain letter of the statute, perhaps the wealthiest man in the United States to-day, who, notwithstanding the fact that the statute of the United States provides that no man engaged in trade shall occupy the position of Secretary of the Treasury, was appointed to that great position when he was a director in 68 great banks and trust companies and industrial concerns, embracing every line of human activity from the manufacture of whiskey to the manufacture of aluminum, and from membership in financial syndicates of small character to an enormous if not a controlling interest in some of the great financial institutions of the United States.

In the past we have complained frequently that great, selfish outside interests have exercised too much influence upon the officials of the Government; but in this case the interests do not stand outside exercising an influence. They have moved in and taken possession of the great office of Secretary of the Treasury; and every demand made by the great banks has been acquiesced in, and the Republican Party, with the exception of the insurgent element, has been almost to a man mustered back of all of these measures—some of them abominable, indefensible, infamous—and there are always enough Democrats over here to help out, so that I wonder what the Democratic Party exists for.

This is but one of the steps, but it is a long step, a step that needed 7-league boots to take. We borrow from the American people $10,000,000,000. We tell the washerwoman at her tub to give of the few dollars that are but the coined sweat wrung from her labor, and to buy these bonds, and that the money will be loaned to foreign countries, and that they will pay us back dollar for dollar, interest for interest, time for time, as our bonds are conditioned. We say to the man at the forge: "Buy! Buy until you have bled yourself white; but we pledge you upon the honor of this great Republic that we will collect back the money we loan to European powers." We say to the minister of the gospel: "Draw from your small earnings a part, and buy, buy, buy, buy until it hurts"—that was the language of the hour—"and when you have bought we will collect back again, so that this great burden will not rest upon our land." We proclaimed it, sirs, in every newspaper of the land. We put it forth from every rostrum and stump. We employed in its advocacy everything from moving-picture actresses, with their charming manners, to the rough-and-ready advocate of the platform.

From the steps of this Capitol Mary Pickford, with her beautiful face and her charming words, urged the American people to buy. Banks called upon their customers to buy, and we practically resorted to coercion to compel the people to yield their hard earnings. While that was going on, and preceding it, the great financial institutions of this country were loaning their money to the European countries engaged in the war. They were loaning that money at enormous discounts and at high rates of interest. More than that, they were engaged in financing manufacturing industries in this country that were selling their goods at high profits to European countries, and some of these banks were participants in those profits; and, as I said this morning in the remarks I was making when I was interrupted by the impeachment proceedings, the moment the battle flags had been furled upon the fields of France, and before our soldiers had been able once more to set foot upon their native soil, the great banks of this country, particularly the great Morgan interests, were demanding that this country should cancel the indebtedness due it from these European countries.
